A small soothing hand caressed his forehead. Joe's dark conquering eyes opened listlessly, then were alight with eagerness. The little gray lady stood beside him, her gray eyes soft with sympathy, her cheeks twin roses beneath his ardent gaze. Joe put his big hands to clasp hers.

"It was you, you, that I wanted all the time," he cried wonderingly. "Just the sight of you now rests me, takes all my world weariness away. Yet, it was true, I did—marry you for your money."

Barbara Waite hushed him. "No, my dear," her voice was a soft, hurried breath, "you thought that you wanted my money, but oh, it was love all the time. I read love in the first glance of your eyes. That is why I married you; that is why I allowed you to go—across the world. I knew you must come back to me."

Joe's thin cheek was against her hands. "Yes," he said, "I was going back [illegible]

Drainage Conference

The board of directors of the Red Lake Drainage and Conservancy District will meet with representatives from Grand Forks, Crookston, Thief River Falls and other towns on the Red Lake River, at the pavillion at Highlanding on Tuesday, June 6, to discuss matters in connection with the Red Lake River project. Mr. E. V. Willard, State Commissioner of Drainage and Waters will also be present at the meeting.

For Commissioner

Emil Larson, well known Bray farmer, has filed as a candidate for comissioner from that district at the coming election. Mr. Larson has been a resident of his district for many years, and knows its needs J. V. Patton filed for the same position a short time ago, so that district will be assured of good representation regardless of how election may result.

New Flour House

The Red Lake Falls Elevator Co., of which Nels Benoit is local agent, has dismantled the old flour storage room connected with their house here and is making preparations for building a new detached house that will better suit its needs. The new building will have concrete foundation, will be built higher to facilitate unloading carloads of flour, and will be rat proof.

A very successful meeting of Community Club was held at the school building last Friday evening. The program for this meeting was a recital by pupils of Mrs. Blanche Ellis Stephenson and it was greatly enjoyed by those who attended. Lunch was served in the domestic science room after the meeting.

Holt State Bank Closes

The Holt State Bank closed its doors by order of the state banking department on Tuesday afternoon. The intermediate cause for the closing of this institution is because of the depleted reserve and adverse conditions existing the past years because of being unable to make collection from farmer patrons. On Wednesday a representative of the state banking department arrived and took charge and it is expected that the Holt bank will soon be opened again. It is known that the assets of the bank is in good condition and it is generally felt that depositors will not lose.—Middle River Pioneer.

FARMERS SAVE $4,500 A WEEK

Co-operative Creamerier Ship 45 Cars Every Seven Days.

Patrons of Minnesota co-operative creameries composing the state wide co-operative creameries association are saving $4,500 every seven days. The association announced today that 45 carloads of butter are being shipped by Minnesota farmer-owned creameries every week, under the consolidated marketing plans worked out by the state organization. The difference between freight rates on carlots and on less-than-carlots amounts to about $100 on every carload shipped, according to A. J. McGuire, manager of the Minnesota Co operative Creameries association, Inc. The $100 saving in freight on each car is a net gain, he said, after all expenses of assembling the butter at a central point have been paid.

Political Announcement

(This notice to be paid for by N. J. Anderson at regular space rates.)

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,

MARVELLO-US!

By EDITH ROBERTS

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Rebellion smoldered in Sibyl Graves' pretty brown eyes as she looked across the breakfast table at her husband.

"We may as well understand each other once and for all, George," she announced. "I have no intention of resigning from the club. I get a great deal of enjoyment and knowledge from it. You just don't understand. We have some very fine members."

George Graves smiled indulgently, at the same time consulting his watch.

"Sibyl," he said impressively, "you're far too sensible to be interested in such things as ouija boards, fortune tellers and trance mediums. They are all fakes, I tell you—what if they do tell you something that happens to be correct? They're liable to tell you ten things that are not. Why, since you've joined that queer club along with Mrs. Ray and the rest of those occult chasers, you're a bundle of nerves. But suit yourself. I just want to tell you one thing. I'm tired of sitting home here alone two evenings while you attend those meetings."

He had hardly departed for business when the telephone bell summoned Sibyl. It was Mrs. Ray.

"My dear," she gushed, "a friend of mine called me up to tell me about this wonderful mystic that is appearing at the Lyceum this week. She says he is positively uncanny. A crystal gazer—Hindu, I believe. I thought perhaps you might like to go this evening."

"I'd love to," confessed Sibyl, "but I really don't see how I can. George would be furious. He dislikes those things so."

"Hm," remarked Mrs. Ray, significantly, "sometimes men take that attitude because they are afraid certain things in their own behavior will come to light—but of course, with George it is just prejudice, I'm sure," she ended sweetly.

The following afternoon, Sibyl was ushered to a seat in the third row of the darkened theater, just before the mystic act came on. The strains of the music were hushed, as the curtain slowly ascended, disclosing a most attractive stage setting.

Amid a dense silence, Marvello entered from the right wing.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced, "my assistants will now pass through the audience, distributing cards upon which you may write your questions."

Almost before she realized it, Sibyl had stretched out her hand and received a card from one of the youths. Pressed for time, she had no opportunity to ponder about what to ask. Hurriedly she wrote, "Is my husband true?" The card was almost immediately collected and the attendants returned to the stage, placing the cards on a table.

Marvello lifted his crystal into the air before him. The audience was hushed.

"There is a lady here tonight who asks me if her husband is fickle. I would say to that lady—Madame your husband spends much of his time with a person more blonde than yourself."

Breakfast in the Graves household next morning was an uncomfortable event for George Graves. In answer to his wife's accusations, he at first ridiculed, then reasoned, then swore.

The arrival of Sibyl's young brother Harry at this point, enforced an armistice for the sake of appearances, and Sibyl gave more attention to her brother's juvenile chatter than usual.

"Gosh, I'm tired," ejaculated Harry, helping himself to some coffee.

"What have you been doing with yourself all week?" asked his sister.

"Well," said Harry, putting down his cup and mutely commanding their undivided attention. "You know, of course, that Chet Stone's father manages the Lyceum. Well, Mr. Stone has been away and left Chet in charge. They had a mystic down there this week—and right in the middle of the week, he got sick. Chet's always been a bear in theatricals so he just borrowed Marvello's stuff and did his act for him. Yesterday afternoon and evening he got by finely. I've had to be his maid, and doll him up."

Sibyl and George exchanged glances of astonishment.

"But I don't understand," faltered Sibyl. "How did he answer the questions?"

"Oh, well, of course he couldn't do Marvello's stuff, but he answered them in general. For instance, some woman always asks if her husband it true. Well, he answered that one, and said the husband wasn't true—and would you believe it, when we looked at the cards after the show, seven women had asked the same question. I wouldn't want to be one of those husbands this morning. Oh, boy!"

Again Sibyl and George exchanged a long look of understanding.

When they were alone, Sibyl turned to her husband with a perplexed expression.

"Still," she said, "I don't yet understand where you were those two nights this week. Why all the mystery?"

"I'll confess," laughed George, "I was down to the Lyceum watching the real Marvello. Honestly, Sibyl, he had me going. I can't see how he does it. I'll tell you—he'll be there again tonight—the real Marvello, I mean. Let's go down and see him together."

Sibyl now spends her evenings at home with her husband, and if there is any occult chasing done, they do it [illegible]

Effective Disinfectant for Use in Poultry House Is Easy to Make and Also Inexpensive.

The kerosene emulsion which is frequently used to destroy mites may readily be converted into a disinfectant, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The emulsion is made by shaving one-half pound laundry soap into one-half gallon soft water. Boil the mixture until soap is dissolved and then, after removing it to a safe distance from the fire, stir into it, while hot, 2 gallons of kerosene. This makes the stock mixture. When it is to be used as a louse killer, 1 quart of the emulsion is mixed with 10 quarts of water. When it is to be used as a disinfectant, stir well and add 2 pints of crude carbolic acid or crude cresol.

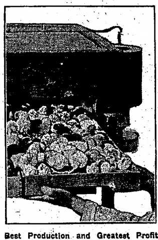
The compound solution of cresol is one of the best disinfectants that can be purchased ready to use. It contains 50 per cent of cresol, and a pint of it in 10 quarts of water makes the right solution to apply to houses or spray over the ground. A 5 per cent solution of carbolic acid (1 pint carbolic acid, 10 quarts water) is about equally efficacious.

ADVANTAGE OF EARLY BIRDS

Success of Poultry Keeping Depends Largely on Well-Matured, Vigorous Pullets.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The early bird—referring to poultry—not only gets the worm but seems to have every other advantage over the one that is hatched late. Upon early hatching largely depends the success of poultry keeping, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Early hatched chicks, they say, produce well-matured, vigorous pullets, which will begin laying in the fall and early winter. It is only from such early laying pullets that the best production and greatest profit can be secured. Early hatched chicks also mean hens which grow broody earlier the next spring, and these in turn allow early hatching to be continued to a greater degree when natural methods of incubation are relied upon.



Best Production and Greatest Profit Secured From Early Laying Pullets.

For several years the department specialists have conducted early hatching campaigns. The movement has been encouraged by state officials and county agents until now such campaigns are conducted early in the spring over practically the entire country. Reports from poultry specialists and other sources indicate that early hatching is being practiced much more generally this spring than ever before, the favorable weather conditions being largely responsible for this fact.

CURE FOR EGG-EATING HENS

Professor Lippincott of Kansas College Recommends Paring Off End of Beak.

In answer to the many inquiries for a remedy for egg-eating hens, appears the following by William A. Lippincott, Kansas State Agriculture college:

"Hens can be cured of eating eggs by paring off the end of the beak until it is very tender. It should not be cut so as to make it bleed. After being cut back until the quick is almost exposed, give the birds some china eggs to pick at. As a usual thing they soon get over their desire to pick at anything hard and, by the time the beaks are grown out, have gotten entirely over the vice."

DUST BATH SHOULD BE HANDY

Good Place Is in Sun Where It Will Keep Warm and Dry—Change Loam Occasionally.

The dust bath should be where the sun will shine on it in order that it may be kept dry and warm as may be. On almost all sunny days, one or more hens will be seen filling their plumage with the soft earth and that will do much toward keeping down lice and assuring the health of the flock. A high-sided box should be used to prevent the fowls from throwing the dirt out when using [illegible] The loam should be chan[illegible]

"BEST MAID" BREAD

The

Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance. that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act accordingly, you can easily "take o wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

Co. Supt. of Schools

(Ordered and insertec by O.R. Sande, candidate in the primaries for county superintendant of schools. Address, Thief River Falls, Minn. To be paid for at advertising rates)

To the Voters of Pennington County:

I wish to announce that I am a candidate for the office of Superintendent of Schools of Pennington county. I was graduated from the State Teachers' College at Moorhead in 1914. I am 30 years of age and I have had ten years' of actual experience as a teacher in elementary and semi-graded schools. I served approximately one year in the United States army, nine months overseas.

I have filed as a candidiate for this office because I believe that I can give the people of the county real service and an efficient administration. I shall appreciate your vote and support at the primary election to be held June 19.

Very respectfully,
O. R. SANDE.

Highway Improvement

SCIENTIFIC ROAD BUILDING

Test Being Made in Illinois to Determine What Pavement Can Be Used on Highways.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Some time within the next few months a new road 2½ miles long is to be broken up in what is probably the most extensive study of road service ever undertaken in the United States. The road is located in Illinois, about 12 miles southwest of Springfield, and parallels the Wabsh railroad. In the test road there are no curves. The grades vary from zero to four-tenths of 1 per cent, with an average grade of one-tenth of 1 per cent, the maximum and minimum grades extending over very short distances. The subgrade soil is uniformly a brown silt loam, except for two small stretches where it more nearly approaches gumbo.

There are seven general types of paving in the road, the idea being to have represented the chief materials used in road making, so that engineers may study the effect of known and measured traffic of varying degree upon each kind of road. The seven types are:

Portland cement concrete.

Three and four inch lug brick constructed monolithic and with a Portland cement concrete base.

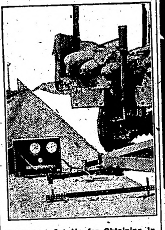
Three and four inch lug brick constructed semimonolithic and with a Portland cement concrete base.

Three and four inch bituminous filled lug and lugless brick on Portland cement concrete base.

Three and four inch bituminous filled lug and lugless brick on macadam base.

Asphaltic concrete with and without binder course on macadam base.

The road, known as the Bates experimental road, was constructed by the division of highways, Illinois department of public works and buildings, in co-operation with the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture. Actual work was begun on the road in June, 1920, and it was finished some time ago. Since its completion the state and federal government engineers, by numerous daily observations, have been measuring the effect of heat, cold, moisture, and other elements upon its surface and on the subgrade. These observations have been taken on 63 sections, and much information has been obtained which will be valuable in building roads in the future.



Instrument Set Up for Obtaining Information on Deflection of Pavement, Showing Method of Loading Ames Dial and Apparatus for Receding Pressure Cells.

This information is of the utmost value. Knowing the conditions of traffic which are to be met, it will afford a means by which a proper paving can be selected to meet those conditions. It may lead to the saving of millions of dollars each year by preventing the construction of pavements that are found to be incapable of resisting modern traffic.

Why some types of pavement fail and others hold up will be largely determined by the test. Why a roadway cracks also is being studied. At different times each section is observed and all cracks noted. In addition, a considerable number of cracks have been measured by a micrometer.

PAVE ROADS IN WASHINGTON

Number of Miles to Be Improved Totals 323, at an Expenditure of $6,630,000.

Road paving and improvement contracts have been let in Washington to the number of 60 since March 10, last, according to James Allen, state highway commissioner. The contracts, including an added 10 per cent for engineering and incidentals, total $6,630,000. The number of miles included is 323.58.

Fifty per cent of the men employed on the new highway projects in Minnesota are ex-service men, according to report received by the American Legion employment bureau at Minneapolis.

Oldest Man-Made Forest.

The oldest living forest planted by man is said to be that set out by St. Francis and his monks in the city of Florence, Italy. It was started in 1224 and since that time has been under the care of some supervisor interested in forestry. The forest is of silver fir and beech.

When Orange Was Banned.

There was a time when feeling in Holland was so against the Stadtholder that the sale of oranges and carrots was forbidden because orange was the color of the hated family. The Hollanders, however, finally came to tolerate the color.

Cotton One of Oldest Industries.

The culture of cotton in this country dates back 300 years, the first cotton seed having been planted in 1621 as an experiment. The test was a success, and the crop has been grown in this country ever since.

"We Must Hang Together," Etc.

Benjamin Franklin is the author of the quotation: "We must all hang together or assuredly, we shall all hang separately." He said it at the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Pink Milk.

If your are in doubt about the cream on your milk, add a tiny drop of spirits of salts. If the milk has been adulterated to give it a rich appearance, it will turn pink—and then you can turn the milkman pink by showing him how the trick is done! You can, by the way, also test your vinegar by the same method. If it is bogus vinegar a little spirits of salts will turn it a brilliant green.

Once upon a time, according to Harry Emerson Fosdick, who is credited with the story, a minister and his little son walked across the fields on a summer afternoon, to a little church where the minister, a visitor, was to preach. At the door was a box for offerings, in which the visiting minister, as he arrived, placed 50 cents. The regular minister and the congregation arrived shortly after, and the service proceeded. After it, the minister of the church said to his visitor: "Now, I want you to have whatever offerings there are in the box. I don't know how much there may be." The box was opened; 50 cents was discovered, and gravely turned over to the visitor. Silence on the walk home across the fields, until the small son remarked: "Well, Dad, if you had put more in you would have got more out."

EIGHT GRADUATE LAST THURSDAY

High School Auditorium Filled To Overflowing At The Exercises.

Commencement exercises for the local high school were held at the school auditorium last Thursday evening. The hall which was prettily decorated in the class colors of purple and white for the occasion, proved too small for the crowd which overflowed into the corridors of the building.

The exercises were opened by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud saying the Invocation. After a pleasing musical selection, Miss Margaret Patterson delivered the salutatory address which was well received. Other musical numbers followed after which Principal W. S. Hatcher introduced the speaker of the evening, Mr. Joseph E. Kennedy of the University of North Dakota. Mr. Kennedy took for his subject, "Sense," and delivered an address that showed clearly his familiarity with that subject. His was one of the most understandable addresses ever given here, and made a deep impression on the large audience whose rapt attention he held from beginning to end.

Miss Edyth Malmquist gave a splendid valedictory address which was roundly applauded. Before presenting the class Principal Hatcher took occasion to express his thanks, by a few well chosen remarks, to the people of the community for their support of the school, and also gave a short resume of what had been accomplished the past year.

Concluding the exercises was the presentation of diplomas which was made by A. S. Wilson of the board of education. Following is a list of the graduates:

Lillian Norman
Margaret Patterson
Hazen Wallen
Edyth Malmquist
Blanche Robson
Sigurd Engh
Melvin Sherva
Gladys Gigstad.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Naplin and children, Chas. Johnson and Miss Selma Hoff left Saturday evening by auto for Alexandria, Minn., for a short stay at the E. E. Gahlon home. Mr. Gahlon has been seriously ill following an operation. Mrs. Naplin is a sister of Mr. Gahlon.

Auto Accident Sunday

An automobile party consisting of I. Dahlin, Knute Kolstad, Anton Thompson, Eunice Peterson and Lulu Allen returning from a pleasure trip to Red Lake Falls last Sunday, met with a serious accident in the turn near the county bridge a mile south of town. Mr. Thompson who was driving the Dahlin car, miscalculated his speed while taking the turn and the car skidded into the ditch, turning over twice and landing bottom side up. The occupants were fortunate in being thrown clear of the car before it landed, but all were more or less bruised. Mr. Dahlin suffered a broken collar bone and received a severe shaking up. Mr. Thompson was bruised about the chest by the steering wheel. The others escaped with minor bruises. Both hind wheels, top and fenders of the car were broken and the body jammed to some extent.

Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Company was held at the village hall here Tuesday afternoon. A very good representation of farmers from all parts of the county was present The company is in a flourishing condition and its business is increasing at a very satisfactory rate. The following officers were elected:

Ed. Aubol, president
A. G. Hallstrom, vice president
J. O. Swanson, secretary
N. A. Nelson, treasurer
P. Lundberg, director.

All agents who represented the company in their respective townships the past year, were re-elected.

The next annual meeting will be held at St. Hilaire the first Monday after New Year Day in 1923.

Teachers Leave

With closing of school last Friday, members of the teaching corps left for home: Miss Ruth Owen to Grand Forks, Miss Peterson to Donnely, Minn., Miss Mabel McGinnity to Thief River Falls, and Miss Swanson to Duluth. Prinncipal W. S. Hatcher and Assistant Principal Fred Welsch having work to finish, are staying out this week.

Miss Elizabeth Johnson, who is attending the State Teacher's College at Bemidji, is home for a short visit. She intends to attend the summer session at the school this year.

The new flour house being constructed at the Red Lake Falls elevator is nearly finished.

BABCOCK ROAD MAPS ARE FREE

Newspapers Assist Highway Department To Circulate Trunk Route Maps.

The Spectator will receive this week from the Minnesota highway department a limited supply of state trunk highway maps for free distribution among its readers. Persons having use for a map may procure one by filling out the coupon below and presenting it at this office. The trunk route map, 17 x 21 inches, is printed on strong paper. It shows all the so-called Babcock roads with their official numbers corresponding to those on the yellow star markers along the routes. Also, paving, gravelling and other impropvements on each section shown. A suggestion is made that the map be framed by hotel and garage keepers and other business houses with the weekly road condition bulletins published in daily newspapers. This will supply a complete trunk highway condition service at slight expense.

Charles M. Babcock, state highway comissioner, published the map as required by law. Newspapers volunteered to circulate them and the postage saving is being used for more maps to supply a larger number of highway users without increased expense to the state. The supply is limited, however, and coupons should be presented before it is exhausted

MAKES MOVIES REAL

Invention of California Girl Promises Big Improvement.

Through Series of Silver Screens Characters Are Made to Appear as Actual Humans Moving.

San Francisco.—Ever since the cinema industry became an industry, persons with mechanical turn of mind have developed this and that kind of invention calculated to "humanize" the film character.

There was the "picture that talks," in which a phonographic record was synchronized with the speed of projection. It never came into popular favor.

It has remained for a Los Angeles girl to provide an invention that has promise of actual merit.

The invention is that of Mary Bruce, twenty-one-year-old girl, who lives with her mother at 1828 S. Vermont avenue.

By means of a series of silver mesh screens, which have been tested out and found practicable, Mary is able to "absorb" the usual projection.

The result is that characters on the screen appear in their true shadow gradation, and the appearance to the observer is that of actual humans moving.

The full body of the actor or actress is visible to the eye. The "flat" appearance of them has been overcome. The series of silver mesh screens are mounted in varying sizes and may be erected in front of any ordinary projection screen. They take up very small space in front of the screen.

A local picture house will install the invention with a view to proving or disproving its merit.

Appreciation.

Charline likes to dine with one of the neighbors who has a large family. On returning one day from one of these trips she heaved a deep sigh and said: "My, but it must be nice to have a party fambly."

Radiating Happiness.

A happy man or woman is a better thing to find than a five-pound note. He or she is a radiating focus of good will, and their entrance into a room is as though another candle had been lighted.—Stevenson.

From Experience.

"Isn't this a pretty slow railroad?" said Brown. "That depends on circumstances," replied Green. "The only time it seems in any great hurry is when you happen to be running to catch the train."

Perhaps, Indeed!

A Brooklyn man is being sued for divorce because he objected when his wife had her hair bobbed. Don't be too quick to denounce him. Perhaps her ears are bigger than he supposed them to be.

Political Announcement

(To be paid for at regular space rates by the undersigned candidate.)

To the Voters of Pennington County

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Register of Deeds of Pennington County, at the Primaries, June 19, 1922. If nominated and elected I can assure the public an accurate and efficient discharge of all the duties in connection with that office, having served for six years as Register of Deeds of Rolette County, N. D. With due respect for other candidates, I shall endeavor to carry on a clean and honest campaign.

Yours respectfully,
T. O STAGEBERG

POOLING WOOL INSURES EVERY GROWER A MAXIMUM RETURN

Lessons Learned Through the Co-operative Handling and Marketing of Fleeces Increases Net Return to Sheep Raisers by 5 to 11 Cents per Pound.

The pooling of wool is now recognized as the established method of marketing that commodity, according to the reports from the office of the North Dakota Federation of Wool Growers Associations. The state and district pools operating throughout the United States last year marketed successfully over 22,000,000 pounds of wool at a net saving to the growers of over $1,060,000.

The North Dakota pool during the past two years has handled over 1,200,000 pounds of wool. The pool is under the supervision of the North Dakota Federation of Wool Growers Associations. The wool is assembled by the various county associations and is then shipped to the pool at Fargo in carload lots, making a considerable saving in freight. Or growers, if the point of concentration is not accessible to them, may ship as individuals if they so elect, and they will then have the same advantage in freight rates from Fargo to eastern markets as carload shippers. At Fargo the wool is graded into lines acceptable to the most exacting of the mill buyers. In this way every man's clip is sold on its merits. Farmers who produce high quality wools reap the benefit of their efforts.

In marketing wool in the original bag, as it has previously been done, the buyer paid an average price for all the wool in a given locality. The grower who had a high class product was penalized while the fellow who offered poor wool often sold at a premium. As soon as each individual lot is graded the consignor thereof receives a grading statement showing exactly how his wool graded, what was wrong with it, and how it could have been improved. The grading statement is of great educational value to the thinking sheep man. In states where pools have been in operation for several years a decided improvement in the state clip has been noted by mill buyers. Graded wools usually sell for from five to six cents more per pound than those sold in original bags. Grading and pooling enables the sheep man to standardize his product and to market it in an orderly manner.

By sending out market information, urging better flock management, and by keeping the members informed of the progress of the pool the Federation is able to keep in close touch with them.

Good care of the fleece at shearing time is being urged. The attention that the grower gives his wool at shearing time may make a difference of from five to eleven cents per pound in the price that he will receive for his wool this year. In order to get the greatest net return he should keep the following points in mind:

1st. Have the sheep dry before shearing; fleeces clipped and sacked while damp become moldy and damaged. Damaged wools are discounted about 11 cents per pound in the present market.

2nd. Shear on a clean board floor and avoid getting chaff, straw, or dirt into the wool. Chaffy fleeces are discounted six cents or more per pound by mill buyers.

3rd. Keep the tags separate; they should never be packed with good wool as they are usually damp and discolored and may cause the rest of the wool to mildew when packed with it.

4th. Tie only with fleece twine; never use common binder twine, as binder twine sheds its fibers into the fleece.

5th. Sacking. Put the black, dead, damaged and chaffy fleeces in sacks separate from the good wool, or if your clip is small, lay a piece of burlap, canvas, or heavy paper between the different kinds of wool and put them in the same sack.

The various Wool Growers associations have rendered valuable service to their members other than through the direct marketing of wool. It was through the efforts of these organizations that the emergency tariff of 15 cents per pound was secured a year ago. As a result wool values have materially increased within the past six months and are still advancing. Without this tariff North Dakota wools would still be selling for less than 15 cents per pound.

The Square Deal

As a resclt of recieving fair and considerate treatment from the public the Northern States Power Company has kept abreast of and in advance of the demands for service, has paid a reasonable return to investors and has maintained its properties and financial standing so that it is in position to fulfil its obligation to the poeple.

The rate policy of the company is based on the broad principle of charging no more for service than is necessary to maintain itself as an efficient public servant. The company believes that its own best interests, from a business point of veiw, make rate reductions desirable whenever it is possible to do so.

The amounts of new capital required annually for extentions and improvment go hand in hand with community development. These funds are supplied by investors—not from excess earnings. Herein lies the opportunity for sound investment.

Application of the square deal in utility operation has made possible the steady payment of dividends to our Preferred Shareholders for more than 12 years.

"GEORGE MADE GOOD"

To the voters of Pennington County:

George promised enforcement of the school laws and school supervision. The first year of his term in office, livery rates as well as other things raised in price. His salary of $129.17 per month was not adequate to pay expenses of supervision and the support of his family. He had his salary reduced to $110.00 per month and the traveling exenses paid by the county. This shows his interest in our schools by a sacrifice in salary at a time teachers' salaries were increasing. He was offered a higher salaried position but declined the offer upon request of the rural school officers.

He promised the introduction of vocational training in our schools. Results: A Pennington county rural school girl won First Prize at the State Fair on a booklet on "Bread Making."

He promised organization of Boys and Girls Clubs. Results: Every school has its "Little Citizens League."

He promised organization of school boards and teachers for better rural school co-operation. Results: Pennington County School Officers Ass'n and Teachers' Progressive League.

"He stayed by us, let us stay by George."

Sincerely,

"BEST MAID" BREAD

The Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no subsitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance, that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act occordingly, you can easily "take o wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

I. Dahlin Passes Away

After suffering six days from complications arising from an injury received in an automobile accident the previous Sunday, Issac Dahlin passed away in the rooms over his place of business early Saturday morning. The injury received was not in itself enough to cause death, but Mr. Dahlin had a frail constitution and was not able to stand the shock and ensuing complications brought on by the injury.

Mr. Dahlin was born in Smaland, Sweden about sixty years ago. He came to this country to work at his trade as carpenter, landing at St. Paul where he was located for several years. He came to St. Hilaire twenty five years ago this spring and followed his trade here until compelled to give it up by physical disability. He was in various enterprises here until about eleven years ago when he bought the former Duntley store building and started a pool room and soft drink stand which he conducted since. In spite of physical handicap, he prospered and made friends.

He was a man who took considerable interest in anything for the good of the town, and his name could always be found as a liberal contributor for anything for public good. He was quick to realize need, and did not hesitate to extend aid whenever occasion demanded it. "Swede" as he was commonly known, had a large circle of friends and acquaintances who knew his numerous good qualities, and he will be sadly missed by them all.

Mr. Dahlin was a single man and as far as is known, had no relatives in this country. He is, however, survived by a sister in Sweden. He was a member of the local I. O. O. F. lodge and that organization had charge of the funeral arrangements.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. B. Smith of Thief River, at the cemetery east of town Sunday afternoon. After the flower covered casket had been lowered to its last resting place, members of the lodge paid their last respects by the beautiful "evergreen" ceremony connected with all burials of Odd Fellows.

Midsummer Picnic

The Swedish Lutherans will have a picnic at the Charles J. Erickson place on Midsummer Day, June 24th. The picnic will take place during the afternoon.

After finishing his work here, Prin. W. S. Hatcher left Saturday for St. Paul where he will attend the University this summer. Ass't. Prin., Fred Wesloh left a few days before for his home at Princeton, Minn.

Club Picnic June 16

Everything is in readiness for the big St. Hilaire Community Club picnic which will be held at the Benson grounds east of the south bridge in St. Hilaire on Friday, June 16. The forenoon will be taken up by a well arranged program of sports and contests. A prominent speaker has been secured to deliver an address suitable for the occasion. After the picnic proper, a ball game will be played between Fertile and St. Hilaire. In the evening the ball club will give a dance, so there will be something for old and young during the entire day. Come, and bring the family and friends,—they will enjoy it.

New Store House Ready

The new flour and feed storage building erected by the Red Lake Elevator Co., is now finished, and the company has shipped in the largest stock of flour and all kinds of feed that they have ever had at this point. Manager Benoit states he can furnish feed of every description now in any quantity.

Mr. and Mrs. Axel Westerlund and family accompanied by Leo Carpenter, left last week by auto for vicinity of Detroit where the men have a contract for doing carpenter work this summer.

Arthur Moren and family left Monday for their home at Webster, Wis., after spending a week here at the Charles Moren home west of town.

A dance will be given at the Imperial hall here after the picnic next Friday evening.

The Larson Bros. store and Spectator office have been dressed up with new awnings this week.

A dance is advertised to take place at Hazel next Saturday evening.

Mike McAndress returned Tuesday after being down to St. Paul with a carload of stock.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kolp and son returned Monday after a visit with relatives in southern Minnesota.

After completing her course at the State Teachers' Training College at Moorhead, Miss Esther Hovet returned home last week.

After spending about three weeks here with relatives, Mrs. R. Wallen, accompanied by her son, Hazen, left Thursday for their home at Minneapolis.

Miss Ann Patterson, who has been employed as instructor at the Home School for Girls, at Sauk Center, has severed her connection with that place and returned home Monday to spend a short vacation.

N. A. Nelson left Sunday evening to attend a Synod Conference at St. Paul. He also intended to visit with a brother at Cumberland, Wis., and with his son and daughter, [illegible] and [illegible]

Oil Station Started

A crew of men arrived last week and commenced construction work on the new bulk oil station to be erected by the Standard Oil Company. Heavy concrete foundations are being made for the tanks which will be elevated about eight feet from the ground in order to facilitate loading into distributing tanks. The office and grease storage room part is being rushed and will be entirely enclosed by the end of the present week.

Locals Win From Oklee

St. Hilaire was the winner last Sunday in a game with Oklee played on local grounds. The visitors seemingly had no regular pitcher so they changed about. The locals found their offerings without difficulty and clouted the pill for 21 scores while the visitors were able to garner only 5.

Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Bergh moved their household goods here from Thief River last week and are now nicely settled in rooms over the Nelson store.

The Ladies' Aid of the Norwegian Lutheran church will be entertained by Mesdames Haugen at the H. A. Haugen farm Friday, June 23.

Rev. C. M. Grimsrud left Wednesday for Minneapolis to attend the National Convention of his church. He will be gone a week.

Concrete walls of the Norwegian Lutheran church basement are finished and the crew is now busy making the entrance stairs.

See Norma Talmadge in "GHOSTS OF YESTERDAY" from the play "Two Women" at the Imperial, Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Clara Loberg left Tuesday for Bemidji where she will attend summer school at the State Teachers' College.

Mrs. A. F. Hall and daughter, Shirley, were at Thief River last Saturday.

R. L. Hauge is at Nymore this week visiting with his son, Joe, and other relatives.

Mrs. Lilly Sorvig and little son of Winger, came Sunday for a visit with friends and relatives at Black River.

Mr. and Mrs. Bennie Odegaard left last week by auto for a visit with her relatives in Iowa.

No Election Stir

From present indications there will be but little excitement over primary election next week. In this county there are seven candidates for the office of register of deeds. Who will pull thru is hard to tell as each candidate has his own circle of friends and with the vote split seven ways the outcome is hard to judge. For sheriff there are but three in the field. Sheriff LaBree will undoubtedly be renominated, and bets are being made that Bill Crown will be on the ticket next fall. There are also three candidates for county superintendent of schools each with a strong bunch of workers.

J. M. Bishop of Thief River is finding favor in his campaign for nomination as judge of the district court and it is more than likely he will be nominated. None of the three candidates for county attorney are making a brisk campaign.

With only half and possibly less of the voters going to the polls, its merely a guess to forecast results in any of the contests.

Accepts New Position

O. F. Post left Saturday for Berthold, N. D., where he has accepted a position with a large mercantile concern. Mr. Post has had a long and varied experience along mercantile lines, and will undoubtedly make good in his new position.

Leave For Washington

Mrs. A. H. Gunstad and daughter, Rose, left yesterday to spend a month with relatives at Yakima, Wash. They also intend to make a short trip to Seattle and other coast cities before they return.

Being as the new Standard Oil station had secured a lease on part of the railroad right of way used for a ball diamond, it was found necessary to make a new diamond at the north end of the same plot. The grand stand was moved to the new location last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Fellman of Red Lake Falls, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Peterson of Warren, were here Sunday to attend the funeral services for I. Dahlin.

The Square Deal

As a result of recieving fair and considerate treatment from the public the Northern States Power Company has kept abrest of and in advance of the demands for service, has paid a reasonable return to investors and has maintained its properties and financial standing so that it is in position to fulfill its obligation to the people.

The rate policy of the company is based on the broad principle of charging no more for service than is necessary to maintain itself as an efficient public servant. The company believes that its own best interests, from a business point of veiw, make rate reductions desirable whenever it is possible to do so.

The amounts of new capital required annually for extentions and improvment go hand in hand with community devolopment. These funds are supplied by investors—not from excess earnings. Herein lies the opportunity for sound investment.

Application of the square deal in utility operation has made possible the steady payment of dividends to our Preferred Shareholders for more than 12 years.

To the voters of Pennington county:

I am a candidate for re-election for Register of Deeds of Pennington county. During the years I have served the people of the county as Register of Deeds I have made many friends, but I am not asking support in the present campaign merely by virtue of this friendship. Rather I would have the voters consider my candidacy on a purely efficiency basis as the only proper method of electing officials to public office. In regards to fitness for the office of Register of Deeds, both as to honesty and capability, I prefer to rest my case with the people of Pennington county, whom I served in past years.

Yours respectfully,

If you mark your ballot as indicated above it will mean to YOU:

1. The retention in office of a true and tried servant.
2. A county taxpayer in a county office.
3. The upbuilding of our Rural Elementary School System along modern progressive lines.
4. Maintaining the present high standards of our schools thru employment of well qualified teachers.
5. Saving of money for the schools thru a strict enforcement of the laws applying to schools, such as the compulsory education law which has bearing on apportionment money receipts.

It will mean to Me:

1. Employment in a work which I am well acquainted with and which I am capable of doing.
2. That my term in office has been to the interest of the schools
3. That my past record meets with your approval.
4. That I made no mistake in staying with the rural schools when I declined the offer of a better paying position.
3 That you and I can co-operate in the future as well as in the past.

Sincerely,
GEO. M. GUNDERSON.

"BEST MAID" BREAD
The
Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance. that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act occordingly, you can easily "take o wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

Primary Election Results

Primary election last Monday did not create any more enthusiasm than first anticipated as less than half the estimated vote in the county was polled. The biggest surprise in this county was in the contest for county attorney. None of the candidates for that office made any extensive campaign. Attorney Quale received 1322, Attorney E. M. Stanton 1320 and G. H. Smith got 604 votes.

For sheriff LaBree got 1502, Ihle 967 and Crown 864. In this case the pre-election dope was upset as most people were positive Crown would be on the ticket. N. J. Anderson topped the list for register of deeds with 980, Lorentson secured a place on the ticket by being next with 488. Ohm was a close third with 468, Benson next with 423, Peterson 379, Swanson 301, and Stageberg last with 263.

For county superintendent of schools Gunderson heads the list with 1317 with Sande a close second with 1215. Mostue polled 737.

How St. Hilaire Voted

It is interesting to note how this village voted on the various county candidates at the primary election Monday.

For register of deeds: Anderson 37, Lorentson 37, Ohm 29, Benson 4, Stagsberg 9, Peterson 6, Swanson 2.

For county attorney: Quale 47, Stanton 30, Smith 39.

For sheriff: Crown 65, LaBree 32, Ihle 7.

For superintendent of schools: Sande 88, Gunderson 22, Mostue 13.

Grindeland and Bishop topped the list for district judges.

For District Judges

Late reports on the district judge contest have it that Grindeland and Watts are heading the list. Bishop and Halverson are next in order named. Later reports may change this some, but it is not anticipated to any considerable extent.

The State Ticket

Such reports as are avaliable are to the effect that those officers as were endorsed by the Republican convention have made a clean sweep thruout the state.

Mrs. John Peterson left this morning over the Soo for her old home at New London, Minn., to spend a few weeks with relatives and friends in that vicinity. Mrs. Peterson is one of the very few living survivors of the Norway Lake Indian massacre which occured in 1862. It is reported there will be a reunion of these survivors and also an old settlers' gathering which "Grandma" will attend while away.

Lose At Oslo

The ball team motored last Sunday to Oslo to play a return game with the baseball aggregation there. In spite of the fact that Oslo had reinforced their lineup to a considerable extent since the game played here, the locals held them down to 2 scores to St. Hilaire's 3 until the ninth inning. At this point of the game a somewhat dubious decision was responsible for them tallying thereby tieing the score. Two extra innings were played to break the tie during the last of which Oslo managed to score again and winning the game by 4 to 3. Fans who witnessed the game were unanimous in stating it was one of the best exhibitions seen in this part of the state this season. Engh and Nelson was the battery for St. Hilaire.

Mission Conference Here

The Community Club Picnic

A good sized crowd was in atendance at the St. Hilaire Community Club picnic given at the Benson grounds last Friday. There would undoubtedly have been a much larger crowd had the weather been less threatening. A number of contests were conducted and much amusement derived therefrom. Mr. McCall of Crookston, gave a very fine talk on community spirit and co-operation between town and country which was well received. Tho not as well attended as the gathering last year, the picnic was a success from every point of view.

Hagen—Odegaard

A wedding of interest to local people occured Tuesday afternoon at Thief River Falls when Miss Ida Hagen of Park River, North Dakota, became the bride of Mr. Melvin Odegaard, son of A. Win 14 Inning Game

One of the prettiest ball games ever witnessed in St. Hilaire was that which took place after the Community Club picnic last Friday afternoon between Fertile and St. Hilaire. A new man occupied the mound for the locals at the opening of the game and his pitching was erratic to say the least. The first two batters up were given their bases on balls after which a few well directed clouts by Fertile gave them two scores. After the second inning Christian was put in to do the twirling and he managed it like a veteran. Fertile scored another in the fourth and the locals also got one over in the same inning. Fertile was retired in the fifth without any score while St. Hilaire came thru with two thereby tieing. Fertile connected for one in the seventh and one in the eighth which St. Hilaire tied again by scoring twice in the ninth. From the ninth on it was a pitcher's battle with both sides holding firm. In the last half of the fourteenth Hallameck managed to reach second and Christian slugged out a safe two bagger over left field which scored Hallameck and won the game by 6 to 5.

Fertile has a mighty fine bunch of ball players and they are entitled to credit for playing a nice clean game. Shortly before playing here they held Fosston down to two scores in a fast game, and Fosston is reputed to be the fastest team in the valley league.

Must Candle Eggs

Contrary to general opinion, it is absolutely necessary for every person or firm who buy eggs from producers, to candle each and every egg bought and to enclose proper candling certificate with every case shipped.

J. A. Leonard, inspector for the Minnesota Dairy and Food Department, who was here last week, said he found there was a number of farmers in every community who thought candling of eggs was a condition imposed by the local merchants for their own benefit. The laws of this state are very strict in regard to egg handling and no dealer is allowed to depart from a strict observance of them. Mr. Leonard also stated that as the hatching season is over, it would not be necessary to have roosters with the flocks during balance of the season. Producing fertile eggs at a time when they are not needed for hatching is a poor practice as such eggs will spoil much faster than infertile ones Segregating the roosters and being careful to market only fresh, clean eggs will result in better prices for producers.

Air pockets have long been a menace to aviators. Those who are familiar with water eddies and whirlpools, can readily visualize air pockets, since they are formed in much the same way. Air pockets are caused by local refraction of the atmosphere. Cyclones are really air pockets on an enormous scale. Small air pockets vary in diameter from a few feet to several hundred feet. Airplanes driving into an air pocket are sucked downward and the aviators lose all control. Unlike the cyclone, small air pockets are absolutely invisible.—Popular Science Monthly.

THE BEAST

By ADELAIDE BROWN

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Dusk softened the outlines of the sordid mill town; vague lights pricked the darkness here and there like dim fireflies. The dreary, dusty little city became, for the moment, austerely beautiful. Dusk deepened also in the "third-floor-back" of Mrs. Gammage's third-rate rooming house. In the room a girl sat crouching in a broken chair and shivering in spite of the heat. The shiver came because for the first time in her eighteen sheltered, coddled years, Betty Martin sensed the approach of a Beast. The name of the Beast was Fear.

It all came about because John Martin had a flash-in-the-pan temper, because Betty had inherited the same—and most of all because a quiet mother rested in a quiet grave on the hillside with only clumps of pale harebells for company. Had she been with them it never would have happened.

Seventeen years and eleven months of having one's own petted, pampered way does not, somehow, prepare one for a father's apoplectic rage and harsh sundering of love's young dream. To Betty, the young man in question seemed passing fair, but not to be taken seriously—oh, no, not yet!—until that same father's foot was put down with thunderous emphasis. Then—well then, daddy had ordered her, mind you—and Betty's quivering lips straightened in the darkness as she lived it over for the two hundredth time—to choose between Billy Devine and getting out to earn her own living, or being a nice and obedient little girl. Betty got out. Betty also left behind the check for $300 which her father had deposited stealthily on her dresser.

With the change she had on hand, Betty started out for the nearest city, head held high and courage in her heart. Two weeks later, as she sat in her stuffy little room, her courage had evaporated her heart (she thought) was broken, but her pride still held. Sixty-seven cents and her landlady had ordered her out of the house with one week's rent unpaid. For Betty had not yet learned a single move in the grand game of bluff. After all, she was only a child.

She did not know how to get work. She did not know of "uncle" who would have cheerfully advanced her $50 on her rings. She did not know why Mrs. Gammage eyed these same rings and her beautiful clothing so queerly; she did not know that this same girlish finery had already "queered" several jobs for her; she did not know where to go to find kind hearts. In fact, the only things she knew how to do well were to make delicious fudge and wheedle checks out of daddy. But go back to him? Not she. She'd spend the night on the park bench first—which she proceeded to do.

Policemen were few and far between in this little town, so no one said her nay when she dragged herself and her suitcase to a bench in a dark corner of the park. She had decided to go without supper. The town clock struck nine. The town clock struck ten, and with each succeeding hour it seemed to boom more solemnly. She crouched closer to the friendly shadow. Fear, the Beast, crouched beside her. Would—would daddy find her starved body hid away in some park corner? How long did one live without eating? Was it very painful to die that way? Eleven o'clock, and how tired and—hun-g-r-y she was! Footsteps sounder on the nearest path and she held her breath. A man, alone, walked past. She could not know that he was the kind-hearted father of four girls. So the Beast, snarling a bit now, drew a step closer. Suppose, in the middle of the night, some man should come—! She stilled a scream with both hands pressed against her lips. She lived a year for every hour of that slow-passing night.

And for exactly thirteen days and ten hours, John Martin had been tearing his hair and rushing frantically from one city to another, from police station to police station. He had come home to lunch, with a peace-offering under his arm, to find Betty gone and the check where he had left it. And from that moment peace knew him no more.

As a last resort, he had come to the little city nearest home (for he had felt sure that Betty would feel the lure of distance) and he had spent two days tracing Betty to Mrs. Gammage's rooming house. That evening he had said things—terrible things—to Mrs. Gammage which that worthy was never to forget. Then he hunted the streets, the lodging houses, the hospital, the morgue, hour by hour, aided by a corps of detectives.

By one o'clock Betty had fallen into an uneasy doze. Her handbag dropped to the pebbled walk with a thud. A furtive shadow slipped nearer, grinned wolfishly as he laid a possessive hand upon Betty's arm. The breath of the Beast fanned the girl's white, terror-stricken face. No escape? The kindly gleams of searchlights dotted through the park and—

"Daddy!" One choked cry.

The Beast, snarling viciously, slunk into the shrubbery. But the shadow of the shadow of Fear never quite left the soul of Betty.

TRAFFIC WEAR ON BRIDGES

New Instrument Measures With Scientific Precision the Effect of Every Shock.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A new instrument devised by the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture measures with scientific precision the effect of every shock and blow delivered by moving vehicles in crossing a bridge. Attached to any part of the bridge structure, this instrument makes a photographic record of the effect of the moving load. The amount of stretching or shortening of the part as a result of the shocks is represented by a fine black line on the photograph.

No blow or shock can be delivered so quickly that the instrument will not record its effect. It has never before been possible to measure the effect of such blows. Engineers have long been able to calculate the effect of standing loads very exactly; but because of their inability to measure the effect of quickly delivered blows or impacts, they have never been able to proportion the various parts of a bridge with absolute assurance. It has been necessary to make a liberal allowance for this unknown quantity. In some cases the allowance has not been sufficient and the bridges have collapsed under moving loads.

Many bridges still in service are probably too weak to withstand safely the sharp blows of swiftly moving vehicles, though they will safely carry the same vehicles at rest or moving at slow speed. The familiar warning posted at the portals of a bridge: "Speed limit on this bridge eight miles per hour," means that the design of the bridge to which it is attached is not strong enough to allow for impact. In the light of the recent experiments with motortrucks in which it was shown that a swiftly moving motortruck may strike a blow equivalent to seven times its actual weight, it is rather surprising, the department road experts say, that failures have been so few.

Concrete Structure Built to Withstand Swiftly Moving, Heavily Loaded Motortrucks.

It is believed this new measuring instrument will soon do away with uncertainty. The knowledge gained by its use will enable the engineer to design bridges which are sure to hold up under fast-moving vehicles, and to build such bridges without undue waste of material and money.

GOOD ROADS AID PROSPERITY

Sum of $300,000,000 Lost Last Year by Farmers Unable to Get to Market Over Highways.

Good roads are the greatest single factors in securing and maintaining "community prosperity." Last year the sum of $300,000,000 was lost by farmers in being unable to market their products over bad roads. Roads that are impassable during part of the year cost farmers in every community thousands of dollars a week.

When one stops to think that in every township laid out in sections there are 72 miles of roads, it is easy to imagine the mileage of roads in this country, says a writer in an Exchange. Of these hundreds of thousands of miles of roads and streets, comparatively few miles are paved, and a noted authority on road building prophesies that not more than 8 per cent of all the roads in this country will be paved by 1926.

It would be excellent if we could have all hard roads—brick, concrete or macadam roads, which are good all-year roads. We should have more of them. But it is impracticable to pave every country road. However, it is just as important to have good laterals leading to the main roads as it is to have hard surfaced main roads. So we must do the best we can and properly maintain our dirt roads and streets.

Automobiles Must Take Turn.

Twenty-one thousand miles of roads have been built with federal aid in the last five years, and these, of course, help out a whole lot, but progress may have to be even greater in road building unless the automobiles are to take turn about.

Pavements.

Motortrucks ruin pavements about as fast as they are laid. As fast as [illegible]

SICK WOMEN THIEF'S TARGET

Victims Just From Hospital Are Gulled by Wily Trick of Paris Crook.

Paris.—The limit in fraudulent audacity is displayed by a man of fifty-three for whom the Paris police are looking. He has been in the habit of calling at the homes of women who have just come out of the hospital, presenting himself as a Poor Law doctor sent to examine them and report on their progress.

Having caused a woman to undress, he gravely covers her head with her clothes, instructs her to count 40 slowly and then hold her breath. When the woman's attention is thus distracted the man snatches up anything of value and steals away.

Three Black Birds.

Many people are unable to tell the difference between a rook, a crow and a jackdaw. The rook, when a year old, has a bare face, and its plumage is shiny black; the hooded crow is ashen gray, with a black head; while the carrion, though the same size as the rook, has a steel-blue shimmer on its plumage, and its wings are by no means as long as those of the rook. The jackdaw can be distinguished easily from any of the other three, first because it is smaller—being only about fourteen inches long—and, secondly, because it has purplish plumage and a gray nec

Red Always Disturbing Color.

Red has been called the king of colors. The bull is not the only creature that resents red; the elephant, the horse, the dog, the cock, are all alike in this respect. It is sufficient, for example, to cover the doors and skylights of a kennel with red material to cause incessant barking and commotion among the dogs confined therein. A spider and a wasp, confined in a glass case, are reported to have dwelt happily together until a red cloth was placed against the sides, when the insects tackled each other at once and a fight to the death ensued.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Ball Lightning.

Ball lightning, an example of which was seen in northwest London during a recent thunderstorm, is a well-attested phenomenon, occasionally seen during thunderstorms, most usually at sea. It always appears after an exceptionally vivid lightning flash, and is believed to be composed of oxygen and ozone thrown off from a negatively charged cloud. It has the appearance of a luminous sphere falling very slowly, or, when near the ground, moving horizontally, as though repelled by the earth, and finally disappearing as the result of an explosion of considerable violence.

The Dreaded Iron Virgin.

The iron virgin was an instrument of torture in use during the Middle ages. It was a hollow wooden figure, fashioned to represent a maiden of the Fifteenth century, and opened like a cupboard, revealing an interior studded with sharp iron spikes. After the victim had been forced within, the lid gradually closed upon him and brought his body in contact with the spikes, which pierced him through and through. There he lingered in dreadful agony, until death relieved him from his sufferings. Beneath the figure was a trapdoor, through which the dead body fell.

Earliest Mention of Coal.

The earliest mention of coal in the territory now comprised in the United States is recorded in the journal of Father Hennepin, who in 1679 refers to the site of a "cole" mine on Illinois river, near the present city of Ottawa.

Old Wedding Custom.

As to rice throwing after the marriage ceremony, one authority states that formerly the solemnization of a marriage was accompanied with a cake of wheat, in token of a most firm conjunction between the man and wife. The English, according to an old custom, are wont to cast wheat upon the head of the bride when she comes from the church. Rice throwing may be the revival of a very ancient custom in Spain and other countries. Rice thrown after a bride is a relic of the "panis farreus" in the most honorable form of Roman marriage, called "confarreatio."

The Square Deal

As a result of recieving fair and considerate treatment from the public the Nortnern States Power Company has kept abreast of and in advance of the demands for service. has paid a reasonable return to investors and has maintained its properties and financial standing so that it is in position to fulfill its obligation to the people.

The rate policy of the company is based on the broad principle of charging no more for service than is necessary to maintain itself as an efficient public servant. The company believes that its own best interests, from a business point of veiw, make rate reductions desirable whenever it is possible to do so.

The amounts of new capital required annually for extentions and improvment go hand in hand with community devolopment. These funds are supplied by investors—not from excess earnings. Herein lies the opportunity for sound investment.

POULTRY

HATCHET BEST FOR SICK HENS

Many Reasons Enumerated Why Ailing Fowls Should Be Killed Rather Than Cured.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The most reliable and profitable method for curing sick poultry is the hatchet. At least that seems to have been the experience of a large number of commercial poultry raisers. They find that it does not pay to spend much time or money in trying to bring a sick fowl back to health. One reason is that it takes considerable time, during which the bird will not be laying, and another is that a sick bird is always a menace to the rest of the flock. However, in spite of the efficiency of the hatchet as a cure, it is not good business to be careless just because such an efficient remedy is at hand. Prevention in most cases is not difficult nor costly, and pays big dividends.

Profits Are Greater Where Houses Are Kept in Sanitary Condition.

The poultry flock is subject to a number of diseases, some of which spread rapidly and cause big losses. The birds may also be infested with various parasites, some of which live on the surface of the body and others in the various parts of the interior. Such parasites, whether they are outside or inside workers, are injurious because they take a part of the nourishment which should be used to put on flesh or to produce eggs, and also because of irritation and inflammation of the parts they attack.

The contagious diseases caused by germs and the weakness and loss of flesh caused by the larger parasites are the most important conditions which the poultryman must consider in order to keep his birds in health. These germs and parasites can be kept down by suitable preventative measures, and the aim of study of the diseases should be to learn prevention rather than cure. Medicines may be given advantageously at times but as a rule, as has been suggested, it is better to kill the sufferer. There is another reason not yet mentioned that makes the killing of sick birds desirable. Birds that first contract diseases are apt to be the weakest ones in the flock and should be culled out.

The more birds kept on a farm or plot of ground and the more they are crowded the greater the danger from contagion and parasites, and the more important the measures for excluding, eradicating, and preventing development of these causes of disease.

The best way to do this is to secure eggs from a flock that has shown no indication of contagious disease for at least a year. If precautions are taken to keep the eggs absolutely clean and they are hatched in a thoroughly cleaned incubator the young chicks will have a much better chance. They will also grow up with a better chance of escaping disease if they are raised in clean brooders and kept upon ground where poultry has not run for some time.

Sometimes these directions cannot be followed explicitly. If all the available ground has been recently used for poultry, fowls should be taken from that part which is to be used for the new flock, a good coating of freshly slacked lime applied to the surface, and a few days later it should be plowed. Then it should be cultivated three or four times with intervals of a week, and finally sowed to a small grain crop. In a few months the greater part of the germs will be destroyed, but it is better to leave the ground unoccupied by poultry until a winter has passed.

It is more difficult to raise a new flock free from parasites if the eggs are hatched by hens, for hens may carry lice and mites and various parasites. For this reason it is a good idea to select hens for brooding from a flock free from disease and pests.

To keep germs and parasites from developing to a great extent, poultry houses need to be cleaned frequently and the drinking fountains and feed troughs need a weekly washing with boiling water or other disinfectant. If any lice or mites are found on the birds or in their houses, the roosts and adjoining parts of the walls must be painted with commercial carbolineum or a mixture of 1 quart kerosene and 1 teacupful of crude carbolic acid or crude cresol, or the house may be whitewashed with freshly slacked lime and sprayed with kerosene emulsion. Dust the fowl with sodium fluoride or [illegible]

A. M. PAULSON.

Another Lamb Anecdote.

The following story, which appears in an old volume of "Leigh Hunt's Journal," throws an interesting light on Charles Lamb's beautiful relations with his stricken sister, Mary: L. and his sister were one evening supping at Mrs. M——'s. L. (with another person) had made his way to the bottom of the second bottle of port. "You really shall not have any more, Charles," said his sister. "Pray, Mrs. M——, don't give him any more." "You hear what your sister says, Mr. Lamb?" observed Mrs. M——, pouring out the remains of the port (which was thick) into his glass. "She is a person of mean capacity," said he. "I never listen to her. Try the next bottle, madame; for this is thick, and—hospitality should run fine to the last."

His Way.

"I felt kinda lost for a spell after I sold the old place and came down to live with my niece," admitted the retired farmer. "I missed the familiar tasks, and there weren't enough new ones to keep me busy. The familiar sounds, too, were absent and at first I couldn't get used to the new ones; the young lady on the left tinkling the piano; the folks on the right running their talking machine, the feller across the street practicing his clarinet, and so forth. They bothered me. But bime-by I took to going out on the back porch and filing a saw to quiet my nerves. And it always done so, after a good spell of filing the noises of the neighborhood didn't pester me at all."—Kansas City Star.

ITALY SHOWS REGAINED ART

Exhibits Beautiful Treasures Recovered From Austria as Result of War.

Rome.—Italy will soon hold an exhibition to display to the world the beautiful art treasures she has recovered from Austria in consequence of the war. The Italians claim that these objects of virtu were systematically stolen by Austrians from Italy in the days when the Italians were too weak to protect themselves. First and foremost among them are nine magnificent tapestries of bible subjects. They are of Flemish workmanship.

These products of the first half of the Fifteenth century were hung in the ducal palace at Mantua. Emperor Francis Joseph ordered their transfer temporarily to the Industrial museum of Vienna and later they were removed to the imperial palace in the Austrian capital.

Speed of Jackrabbit.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Jackrabbits fleeing from pursuit attain a speed of 50 miles an hour for the first mile, Colorado Springs motorcycle club officials reported at the conclusion of a cross-country chase in which the rabbit was run down at the end of five miles. In the second mile the rabbit made a forty-mile speed, and in the last three miles slowed down to 35 miles an hour. In their headlong dash over the prairie after the rabbit, the 11 motorcyclists in the party hurdled ditches and other obstructions at breakneck speed. When the rabbit fell exhausted he was picked up, and when he had rested was set free and scampered away.

Too Much Johnson.

A seeker after knowledge asked the young woman behind the desk of one of Brooklyn's branch public libraries for Boswell's "Life of Doctor Johnson." She catechised him as to what Doctor Johnson's first name was—and how did Boswell spell his name and what were his initials. Then she confided with a charming smile that she wanted to be sure. "There are so many Doctor Johnsons, you know," was her final comment.

His Drawing Powers.

"Can you draw?" an applicant for a private tutorship was asked. "Certainly," replied the candidate; "at ten years of age I could draw cider; at twelve, a picture; at fifteen, a handcart loaded with cabbage; at sixteen, an inference; at twenty, a bill of exchange. If I were an actor I believe I could draw the largest house; but, being a teacher, I am content to draw a small salary!"

"BEST MAID" BREAD
The
Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance. that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act accordingly, you can easily "take a wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

SMASHED LEG IS WORTH $17,500

Old Man Statistics Does Some Investigating Into Suits for Damages.

PRICE SET BY JURIES VARIES

Loss of Arm Is Valued at From $800 to $60,000—One Man Demands $25,000 for "Harrowing Experience"—$500 for Half Mouse in Pie.

New York.—Old Man Statistics is loose again. Now he comes forward to say that if you contemplate losing a leg and suing for damages the sum you ask will average around $25,000. If you lose an eye, your reputation—in fact, anything—the average remains the same, says he. But the sum you will get (if you win) he declares, will be considerably lower—$17,500.

The price of a leg, as decided by various and sundry juries, varies from $800 to $60,000. What makes for this wide range in value of pedal extremities was simple in the old days when juries consisted of men only, but it is different now. One is left in a quandary.

Damages Total $28,507,125.

There was a total of approximately $28,507,125 involved in suits last year in the metropolitan district. That against William M. Baldwin, capitalist, for $17,000,000 was the largest.

A number of cases involved odd complaints.

Not so long ago a man demanded $25,000 for a "harrowing" experience he had while being chased about a ship by a madman.

An actress decided to take heroic measures to reduce. She consulted a surgeon as to the advisability of having it "cut off." She forgot one thing—that the operation would leave scars—and she alleged in court they forever marred her "asthetic" beauty.

She admitted, however, that "several" pounds of flesh had been removed and her figure was more graceful than before. The jury decided the figure was worth the money the surgeon charged.

Somebody hit a young matron with the wrong side of a slap stick, loaded with a blank cartridge. She was being initiated into the mysteries of the Modern Order of Praetorians and was leaning over to kiss the altar when the undignified incident occurred. The flash of the powder raised a blister which she thought was worth $20,000.

$500 for Half a Mouse in Pie.

One of the youngest complainants in a suit was a four-months-old child. The defendant was a doctor, who was alleged to have so injured the complainant when he brought him into the world as to have permanently impaired his health. Another child recovered damages for a prenatal injury received when his mother fell through a coal hole, the lid of which had been removed.

One woman demanded $5,000 for finding half a mouse in a piece of mince pie given her in a restaurant.

A boy valued his ability to smile at $20,000, and the jury agreed with him.

If a guest of yours should happen to fall over one of your rugs and fracture his nose you need have no fear if he should sue you. The Supreme court held in a case of this kind that the host is not responsible for a fall on a loose rug.

Backs, arms, legs, ribs, toes, fingers, noses, jaws, hearts, resolutions, vows and everything else breakable were broken during the year. For these injuries the litigants sought from $500 to $100,000.

Amputations, too, were manifold. One child got $40,000 for the loss of four toes. Another got $60,000 for the loss of two hands. They were the high records for cases of that sort.

The lowest award on record was that of a Bronx woman who sued the National Biscuit company for $2,000 because a splinter in one of the biscuits lodged in her gums. The jury thought $50 would just about cover the cost.

EX-TEACHER BEST SPELLER

Mrs. B. B. Finley, 87, Wins Over College and High School Graduates in Contest.

Bucyrus, O.—The little, red brick schoolhouse won a unique victory over the modern, up-to-date school during an old-fashioned spelling bee here. Mrs. E. B. Finley, eighty-seven years old, former teacher, defeated 25 graduates of high schools and colleges. The contest lasted more than three hours.

Five of Mrs. Finley's opponents were eliminated when the word "renaissance" was reached. The word "virtiginous" caused seven more to quit. the word "rendezveus" left only three. This lineup lasted almost an hour, when "fortissimo" saved the day, eliminating her two opponents. She became so excited over the "grand finale," however, that she missed the next word, "tuberculosis."

RURAL CREDITS DRIVE OPENING

Farm Bureau Calls Statewide Conference To Launch Campaign.

Representatives of Minnesota's farm organizations will meet in St. Paul on July 12, to map out an intensive statewide campaign for the rural credits amedment. This amendment to the state constitution comes before the voters at the general election this fall.

Farmers deleates from practically every county in Minnesota, assembled in the third annual convention of the Mnnesota Farm Bureau federation early this year, charged the federation with the responsibility of organizing a statewide campaign to assure the passage of the amendment. Carrying out the instructions of the county farmers' organizations the Farm Bureau this week asked the principal farm bodies in the state to send representatives to a statewide conference at the Old Capitol, St. Paul, to make final plans for the drive.

This measure is one of the most important that has confronted the people of Minnesota in years'', says the 1922 agricultural program for Minnesota, drawn up by the delegates sent from each county to the annual farm bureau convenion, ''because of its significance to the basic industry of the state.''

District Court Opens

The Y. P. S. of the Scandinavian Mission church will meet at the John Norman farm home Saturday evening, July 8th. Everybody is invited to come.

Pure Bred Hog Sale

An auction sale that will be of interest to this community will take place at St. Hilaire on Friday, July 7th when the Red River Valley Hereford Farm of Warren, Minn., will sell 40 head of pure bred Duroc Jersey brood sows. By a contract plan which they have originated, the R. R. V. Hereford Farm is placing hogs with boys' and girls' clubs thruout this section of the state. They agree to sell a certain portion of the offspring from those hogs, and the herd to be sold here represents the best herds in the state, and the Duroc breed the world over, tracing back to the most prominent families of that breed. Each animal is an outstanding individual in her class.

With this community going into the raising of corn more and more as each year passes, this will be a golden opportunity to get into the pure bred hog business without much outlay. Corn and hogs, cows and clover, will displace grain raising here within a short time. One good brood sow will make a good start in the hog raising game, and this will be a chance to get the best in the country at your own price.

DAIRYMEN SAVE $10,000 A WEEK

70 Carloads Of Co-operative Creamery Butter Shipped Every 7 Days.

Co-operative creameries in Minnesota are saving $10,000 every seven days by shipping their products at carlot rates through the Minnesota Co-operative Creameries association, Inc. Records of the association show that 70 cars of co-operative creamery butter are moving to the eastern market every week under the association marketing plan. These cars carry more than 2,000,000 pounds of butter.

The association has started shipping butter direct to its New York office. Within 30 days, according to A. J. McGuire, general manager, practically all New York shipments from member creameries will be shipped to the association's eastern office, where freight bills will be carefully inspected, the butter distributed to the purchasers and every sale audited to protect the farmers' interests.

Transportation service of the association was called into action when reports of a freight handlers' strike at Buffalo reached St. Paul. Within 24 hours, the association had changed the routing of half the state's butter shipments, so there would be no possibility of delay due to the strike.

New Pastor Here

Rev. Elgin Holter arrived Tuesday from Evanston, Ill., to assume the pastorship of the M. E. church at this place. Rev. Holter will be joined by Mrs. Holter some time next week and they will then commence housekeeping at the parsonage.

Patterns in Writing.

Nor are the exponents of the grand manner, of an ornate style, to be patterned after. If elevation of theme is not present, then the peril of "fine writing" is scarcely to be avoided. Better follow such writers as Bacon, Bunyan, Hobbes, Swift in preference. Or the Augustan group, Dryden, Addison, Shaftesbury, and Temple. But Doctor Johnson, Burke and Gibbon are not models for the beginner, any more than the orotund prose of Bossuet, the musical utterance of Chateaubriand, or the dramatic prose of Hugo are safe models for French students. The rich continence of Flaubert, the stippled concision of Merimee or the dry wit of Voltaire are surer guides. And the urbane ease and flowing rhythms of Thackeray are preferable to the baphometic verbal baptisms of Carlyle the Boanerges.—James Huneker.

All the World Feeds New York.

All the world combines to feed New York. Take the week before Christmas, for example. Every section of this and of foreign countries where things are growing at this time of year seems eager to prevent monotony in the food supply of the great city. There are onions from Spain; big red cherries from Argentina; potatoes, carrots and beets from Bermuda; luscious hot-house grapes and fresh endive from Belgium; cabbage from Denmark; pineapples from Porto Rico; tomatoes from the Canary islands and the Bahamas; green vegetables from Cuba; peaches, apricots, plums and pears from Chili; strawberries from Florida and California, and hot-house products from all parts of the United States.

Needs to Be.

FARM POULTRY

NO DEFINITE RULE FOR FEED

When Hens Are Laying Heavily They Should Consume Much Larger Amount of Mash.

Feed according to the appetite of the birds; no definite rule can be given. Feed scantily of grain in the morning and give all the grain they will eat in the afternoon in time to find it before dark. There should be no grain in the litter at noon; when found, it indicates feeding too much in the morning.

In general, feed by weight two-thirds part of grain to two parts of mash. When the birds are laying heavily they should consume a larger amount of mash.

A green range of alfalfa, clover, or grass furnishes the ideal condition. When these are not available it is necessary to give the birds some kind of succulent food. Mangel beets, cabbage, sprouted oats or green clover are usually considered the best green feeds. If these are not obtainable, apples and potatoes make a valuable addition to the ration. Feed at noon in such amounts as the birds will clean up before night.

Hard, sharp grit is necessary for grinding feed; oyster shell to supply lime for egg shells. Neither will replace the other.

RAISING GEESE FOR PROFIT

Opportunities Good in Regions Where They Can Be Fattened for City Markets.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Geese may be raised profitably on many more farms than at present. The United States Department of Agriculture points out that the opportunities are especially good in regions where they are fattened commercially for the growing demand of cities. They are easily disturbed and should therefore be handled gently. When mated they are allowed to run in flocks, but each mating may be kept in a colony by itself to keep the ganders from fighting. A gander may be mated with from one to four geese, but pair or trio matings usually give the better results. From four to twenty-five geese may be kept on an acre. Under most conditions ten is a fair average. Free range on grass or stubble is advisable, and many persons in the South keep them to kill weeds in the cotton fields.

Toulouse and Embden geese will breed and produce some stock in their second year but do not mature or give best results for another 12 months. Sometimes they will lay the first year, but the results usually are unsatisfactory, and the eggs often are used for cooking. Females usually are kept until they are eight to ten years old, or as long as they lay well, but ganders seldom are kept after they are six or seven years old. Yearling ganders of the domestic breed often are used for breeding, but both sexes usually are best for breeding when from three to five years old.

PUREBRED POULTRY IS BEST

Good, Plump, Tender Chickens Always Command Top Prices—Scrawny Fowls Are Loss.

There is always a good demand for market poultry and eggs, and there always will be, but like every other commodity, the price received by the seller depends upon the quality of the goods sold. Good, plump, tender chickens, properly fitted, always command the top price, while the scrawny, staggy, inferior stuff has to be sold for whatever it will bring. The farmer who says there is no profit in the poultry business is generally one of those fellows who raise the latter kind.

Cabbage Patch Can Be Cleared of Pest

Gardeners can get the upper hand of the cabbage worm by dusting the plants with a mixture of twenty parts of lime with one part arsenate of lead, three pounds to fifty gallons of water, equivalent to about one ounce to one gallon of water. Either treatment is recommended by W. T. Tapley of University Farm, who says that a small amount of soap added to the spray will help to make it cleave to the leaves.

The Square Deal

As a result of recieving fair and considerate treatment from the public the Nortnern States Power Company has kept abrest of and in advance of the demands for service, has paid a reasonable return to investors and has maintained its properties and financial standing so that it is in position to fulfill its obligation to the people.

The rate policy of the company is based on the broad principle of charging no more for service than is necessary to maintain itself as an efficient public servant. The company believes that its own best interests, from a business point of veiw, make rate reductions desirable whenever it is possible to do so.

The amounts of new capital required annually for extentions and improvment go hand in hand with community devolopment. These funds are supplied by investors—not from excess earnings. Herein lies the opportunity for sound investment.

Application of the square deal in utility operation has made possible the steady payment of dividends to our Preferred Shareholders for more than 12 years.

By NINA EPPS

©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Glancing over a fur-clad shoulder, Alice Gaynor again saw the man was following!

His eyes fastened upon her, he came on at a skipping trot, worming in and out of the crowds. His face was eager and glistening with sweat.

She walked faster; so did he.

The persistence of this dark-skinned little tormentor filled her with terror. For the past two weeks he had been continually bobbing up, always to proceed after her in hot pursuit. Once he had stopped her; stammering and gesticulating wildly—but she had broken away, hailed a taxi and driven rapidly off.

What he wanted with her she had no idea. Probably one of those common flirts who accosted girls on the streets when the policeman was far off.

But she would fix him this time, she concluded grimly. She would lead him a merry chase until some policeman hovered into sight, then——

Her mental resolve was at this point interrupted by the dark, undersized stranger who, running ahead, had suddenly turned and blocked her way.

He tipped his derby in a flashy manner, then laid a hand on her fur-clad arm.

"Lady, I got something I should like to say to you. I want you to listen, to your own advantage. A swell girl like you——"

Alice gasped. "How dare you?"

They were at the entrance of a building. She shrank back against a pillar, at bay. How she wished Hal was here to protect her. Hal was general manager for a firm that manufactured novelties. She was cashier for the same company.

After they had taken in dances, parties and quiet strolls together, their acquaintance had blossomed into something deeper than mere friendship. To her Hal was the unattainable, big, honest Hal! He could soon teach this insulting ruffian a lesson.

A man turned out of the pushing crowd and swung toward them. His heavy hand fell on the pursuer's shoulder and spun him around.

"You little runt! Annoy a lady, will you? Speak up, now, and apologize."

It was Hal Strong and his honest face blazed with wrath.

In his bear trap grip the little man wriggled and writhed. "I should not apologize," he cried, and his voice was thin and tearful. "No, sir! No wrong did I do this lady. Only I tried to speak with her—again and again I tried! Always she gets away. I will not apologize, it is business, it—"

"You say you're sorry before I kill you!" Strong growled.

"No, no, no! I would talk business, nothing more. You let me go." He slipped from under Strong's hand, then faced them, panting, outraged, mad. "All right," he cried. "All right, then, the deal is off. I make no proposition. I hope you're sorry, that's all—"

"You get, quick, or—"

"Sure, I'll get. Only I explain. Many times I seen this lady in that fur coat. She looks fine—like a queen, with such lovely blue eyes and golden hair, to match—you understand? Swell! Even on a hot day she wears the coat like a regular A-1 duchess. It makes a hit with me. Her manners and her looks.

"I am a furrier, a manufacturing furrier, you understand? I need such a girl and I was ready to pay good, too. Yes, sir, I needed such a girl—a girl that can make Hudson seal, and Kolinsky, and such look like the genuine article. A steady job!

"All right, that's all. My card—here. I guess that proves it. A job I was going to give her, but now—I hope you're satisfied!"

With something close to a sob, the dark-skinned little man threw a card at their feet and flung himself into the passing crowd.

Strong picked it up and handed it mutely to Alice. It bore the name: "Savoy, Dunn & Co., Furs, Kolinsky, Hudson Seal, Electric Seal, etc. Our prices defy competition."

"Now look what you have done," exclaimed Alice, tearfully, her anger rising at the thought of losing such a wonderful offer. "I've just lost a perfectly good job, you—"

But Strong had her by the arm. "Listen," he said sternly, "stop being a little fool. You don't want that job—haven't you one now?"

"I was getting tired of grinding away at that old cashier job. I—"

"I say you don't want that job—posing in fur coats! You have a job and you're going to stick to it. Peterson Brothers need you. And I need you, I need you most. You hear, Alice? You're going to marry me, because I love you. You hear? Got to!" He shook her roughly, whispering his message through clenched teeth.

Suddenly meek, Alice glanced up at him.

"All right," she nodded. "All right. Only, for the love of Heaven, take me somewhere where I can get out of this coat. It's smothering me."

"BEST MAID" BREAD
The
Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance. that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act accordingly, you can easily "take o wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

GOOD HIGHWAYS

ROADS CONSTRUCTED IN 1921

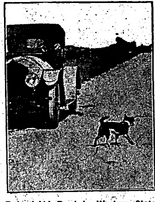
Approximately 28,000 Miles Built During Year Just Passed—Materials Lower.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Road building has recovered from the setback received during the war, and prospects are bright for the future. Approximately 14,000 miles of road were constructed during the present season by the states in conjunction with federal aid, according to the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, and probably an equal amount independent of federal aid. More miles of improved road were built than during any other year.

Costs of road grading and construction with local materials is down practically to the 1914 level. Some reductions, also, have been made in freight rates on road materials. The importance of this item is shown by the fact that in some cases it has been estimated that increased freight rates have added 10 per cent to the cost of a road. Prices of manufactured road materials tend downward; the present level is materially lower than that of a year ago.

With the new appropriation by congress of $75,000,000, added impetus will be given to new road construction. Many of the states are considering enlarged amounts of state aid, and the new law will have a tendency to encourage this policy. It will also secure the construction of a system of interstate and intercounty highways, rather than haphazard selection of roads as in some cases in the past.



Federal-Aid Road in Western State, Just Completed.

HEAT INFLUENCES CONCRETE

Discovery Made That Edges Curl Up and Down in Response to Temperature Changes.

That the edges of concrete roads curl up and down in response to changes in temperature is the discovery recently made by the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture in the course of experiments at the department's experimental farm at Arlington, Va.

Curling is caused by the unequal expansion and contraction of the upper and lower sides of the concrete slab under the influence of heat. It has been observed during the middle of the day when the surface of the road becomes hot it expands more than the cooler underside and causes the sides to move downward. At night when the surface is cool the contraction causes the edges to rise slightly. The extreme movement may be as much as one-tenth of an inch.

While the warping of the concrete is not in itself detrimental to the road, it may lead to failure of the surface under the wheels of vehicles which travel over it when parts of it are not resting on the ground.

HAUL PRODUCTS TO MARKET

Enormous Amount Carried Over Country Roads Shows Necessity of Better Condition.

The necessity of keeping country roads in good condition is shown by a report recently compiled by the bureau of markets and crop estimates, United States Department of Agriculture, showing the extent to which they are used in hauling farm products to market. According to the report, which shows the tonnage of 11 products hauled on country roads, giving the yearly average for the period from 1915 to 1919, there were 27 tons of these 11 crops hauled for every 100 acres of land. The average tonnage of the 11 crops hauled on country roads each year for the period mentioned amounted to 86,560,000 tons. The 11 crops referred to in the report are corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye, rice, flaxseed, cotton (including seed), tobacco, potatoes and cultivated hay.

Pennsylvania has just sold $11,200,000 bonds bearing 4¼ per cent interest—the last of a $50,000,000 issue for road work—for $104.81, which shows that, however the market for other bonds may be, there's a mighty brisk demand for [illegible]

Railroad Shopmen Strike

A strike of the shopmen, boilermen, machinists and other railroad workers aside from operating trainmen and maintenance of way workers, started Monday morning.

There has been no delay in operation of trains thus far and none is anticipated as the strike is only partial. An attempt will be made to "farm out" certain portions of work formerly done by the striking workers should the strike continue for any length of time. Refusal of the men to accept a cut in wages resulted in the walkout.

Play Tie Game

The ball game between Crookston and St. Hilaire here the Fourth, the first game played between those teams for many years, resulted in a tie at the end of the tenth inning. The game would have continued for more innings had not Crookston protested a score made by St. Hilaire in the last half of the tenth and quit the field when they failed to carry their point. The game was evenly played, there being little difference in the scoring ability of either team thruout the game.

Brings Home Bride

Will Hartje surprised his friends Sunday by returning here with a bride who was Miss Mildred DuBois from Will's home town, Austin, Minn. To properly celebrate the event, a charivari party gave them a noisy, but hearty welcome Monday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Hartje will make their home on the groom's farm where a neat residence has been made ready for occupancy.

Many friends join in wishing them a long and happy married life.

Hope To End Coal Strike

The government has interested itself in the coal strike controversy with a view of bringing the striking miners and coal operators to a point where a settlement can be reached. Government officials are apprehensive that unless the strike is settled within the next few weeks, there will be danger of coal shortage in the Northwest the coming fall and winter

John Domstrand Is Dead

Word has been received by friends here of the death of John Domstrand, who left this community with his family last spring to make their home at Big Lake, Minn. Report has it that death followed a stroke of paralysis. Since the death of his son, Will last year, Mr. Domstrand aged considerably and it is believed his grief over his loss at that time was instrumental in hastening his own end. Deceased was well and favorably known in this locality where he resided for many yaers. Known by all as a good neighbor and valued friend, news of his death comes as a shock to his friends in this community

Heartfelt sympathy of a large circle of friends and acquaintances is extended to the bereaved family in their time of trial and sorrow.

Farm Bloc Forces Action

The Farm Bloc, fathered by the American Farm Bureau federation, has won another striking victory in congress.

A few days ago, Washington dispatches announced that the Capper-Tincher bill to regulate the grain exchanges was headed for the sidetrack, and nothing could save it in the present session of congress. The house rules committee, disptches said, would not permit its consideration.

Within 24 hours, the Farm Bloc's demand for action grew so strong that the rules committee reversed itself and passed a rule allowing the house of representatives to act on the new bill to put the grain trade under the supervision of the public. The house of representatives almost immediately passed the bill by a vote of 208 to 76.

The new measure was drawn up as a substitute for the Capper-Tincher bill passed last year, and later held unconstitutional in some of its provisions. The new act would regulate the grain trade and prevent manipulation under the interstate commerce clause of the constitution. The first bill attempted to attain effective public regulation of the grain pits by taxation, which the supreme court held was a wrongful use of the taxing power.

Hog Sale Friday

Tomorrow afternoon at the stock yards in this village will be held the auction sale of 40 pure bred Duroc Jersey sows which sale has been advertised the past week. YELLOW STREAK

By MARY J. HITCHCOCK

©. 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The town hall at Townsend presented a brave appearance in the morning sunlight. An ordinary red brick on other days, the monotony of its everyday dress was broken now by the brave splendor of red and white and blue.

It was the eleventh day of the eleventh month, and across the square the groups of khaki-clad figures gathered in numbers. My interest was centered, however, in one who stood apart, yet seemed to be the object of general interest. More! Affectionate regard was manifested, in the clasping of hands, the glances of many eyes.

Came the sound of footsteps behind me, and turning, I stood face-to-face with one I knew more than passing well.

"Do you suppose I could dig up a story among that crowd?" I asked, and waited expectantly.

"There's the story of the "Yellow Streak," was the slow answer. "We have an hour, or two before anything starts, and up in the hall—"

To the hall we went. Presently we were sitting on the wide window sill, looking down into the square.

"Was he really a coward?"

The man looked at me, and smiled faintly. "We said so, but, maybe we were wrong. But, wait—there's a way to tell his story:

"It was a year, seven months and a day after Shefford's marriage to Colonel Chilton's daughter, that the President's message to congress took some of us chaps that had never dreamed of soldiering by the shoulders, as it were, and made of us soldiers, overnight. From the first, Maurice kicked at the idea of leaving the peaceful life.

"We had got into the sub-zone before it struck me that he was talking too much for his own good. Some of the boys hinted that maybe he was scared; that when the time came to go in he'd turn and run to save his skin.

"But I was sorry for him, too. His wife had been my schoolmate and believed in him so entirely that she had come to me just before we left and asked that I look out for Maurice. Somehow, she felt that he would be brave!

"And then we moved up. We were really in at last! It grew worse, instead of better, and by the time we left the training area there were more than a dozen bets being laid, for by that time everyone of the old crowd was calling him the 'Yellow Streak'; and the things they bet he'd do were —well, no part of this story.

"But maybe telling you about the night when I'd made up my mind to have it out with Maurice belongs in here. There was something doing every minute—one way or another—and right in the middle of what the papers would call 'a quiet night,' a bunch of the fellows tumbled into the trench, carrying a wounded youngster between them.

"Maurice was near me, and the way he turned away as they went on to the relief station made me promise myself that I'd talk some stiffness into his backbone if it could be done.

"So that's why I waited in the dugout after things simmered down a little. They told me he had gone out with a bombing squad, and when the hours slid along I just naturally drowsed and slept.

"Of course, I can't say how the rest of it happened. The bombing party came in just before daylight almost drunk for need of sleep. I'd seen them often—been one of them myself and so I could guess that their steps were none too sure—their nerves pretty raw, as they stumbled into the dugout.

"Afterward, they agreed that Maurice was the last to come in—that he had not started to empty his pockets of the remaining bombs when it happened—

"It was a frightened, hysterical oath that wakened me—I hadn't heard the bomb strike the floor, but it was plain enough who had dropped it. No, it wasn't Maurice, but he knew, as did all the rest that, five seconds—a heartbeat or two—was all we could count on from that minute.

"I shut my eyes, praying that the end would be mercifully complete, so I did not see that Maurice had thrown the bomb straight toward the open doorway just as a second bombing party came around the corner of the trench and paused outside.

"But I heard the shout of warning that he gave as he jumped; heard, too, the muffled explosion, and the cries that followed."

"Don't tell me any more," I pleaded. "I can supply the rest—"

My narrator grinned. "You think you can, but I'd better finish, seeing that I've told the story so far—

"You're thinking that it killed him? Well, it didn't! Of course, it did things to him—mussing him up pretty general—but the American surgeons and his American grit pulled him around after a spell."

"But the 'Yellow Streak?" I questioned. "Where—"

A long, lean finger pointed to the interesting figure that had stood apart most of the time.

"Not much of [illegible] mixer, but gold clean through! Yes, that's him, and we call him 'The Yellow Streak' even now, though he's proved to us that [illegible]

HAS JOB AS AID TO CUPID

New York Youngster Directs Young Couples How to Reach the Desired Marriage Bureau.

New York is renowned for the large number of unique jobs some of its residents have found for themselves, but here is one job that bids fair to outshine most of the others as regards quaintness. To a Bronx lad of about ten goes the honor for discovering this latest method of gathering the coin of the realm.

This youngster stations himself at the entrance to the Bronx borough hall, at the northwest corner of Crotona park, and waits patiently about for the appearance of young couples. As soon as he spots a couple he approaches and announces "Up one flight." Invariably the shy young man and bashful young lady break out into smiles and the former removes a coin from an open-hearted pocketbook and hands it to the youthful Wallingford.

The Bronx marriage license bureau is "up one flight."—New York Sun.

MODERN COLLIERY PLANT

The colliery plant of the Star Norske Spitzbergen Kulkompani is said to be the most modern one in Europe. Operation recently began at one at Longyear, Spitzbergen. In five days 1,800 tons of coal were produced, equivalent to 90,000 tons a year, with only two-thirds of the machinery in operation. When the whole plant is in full working order a monthly output of 20,000 tons may be reckoned with. The new power station throughout is of modern construction and equipment. It develops 750 horsepower, which, with the 300 horsepower of the old station, puts more than 1,000 horsepower at the disposal of the company.

MAN OF INFINITE RESOURCE

Washington Official Would Seem to Be Especially Fitted for High Diplomatic Post.

Capt. David S. Barry, Jr., who is in charge of the marines guarding the mail of the country, is a resourceful man. He has been all over the world, stood on the great wall of China, explored the mystic isles of the South seas, and now he sits at a desk in the Postoffice department.

The other day two young women called at the department. They were on a sightseeing tour and wanted to go over the department. Some one thought it would be a good joke to play on Barry, so the two young ladies were introduced to him.

"We would like to see the postmaster general's room," said one of the young women with a smile.

Barry disappeared into an inner office, soon to return.

"I'm sorry," he replied, with his best smile, "the postmaster general is in his office now."

The young woman smiled sweetly.

"We would like to see the postmaster general," she said.

Captain Barry did his disappearing act again, but soon returned.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "the postmaster general is out now."—Washington Star.

BIRD LOVERS FORM LEAGUE

Two Hundred Thousand Australians in Organization to Promote Knowledge Among Children.

About 200,000 Australians are enrolled in the Bird Lovers' league. Among the ways in which Australian children are brought into line with the ideals of the bird lovers who started this movement are competitions in drawing birds from memory, the imitation of bird calls, and the identification of birds by name. At a public gathering in Melbourne recently, colored chalks were given the children and they were allowed five minutes to do a blackboard sketch. The winner showed an alert and life-like kookaburra, or laughing jackass. In the test which called for imitations of birds one of the best was that of the curious laugh of the kookaburra, which rings through the Australian bush and is often heard in the outskirts of townships. The third test, the identification of birds, was conducted by the showing of 15 lantern slides, each being thrown on a screen for 15 seconds, during which time the competitors had to write down the correct name.

Indians Get "Sacred Dirt."

Albuquerque, N. M.—Something brand new in the line of tribal superstitions has just been discovered among the Acoma Indians. Each year the tribe makes a pilgrimage to the peak of Mount Taylor, 11,880 feet high, where each tribesman and his squaw fills earthenware jars with "sacred dirt," to be carried back to their pueblo, 60 miles away. Earth from a certain area at the peak of Mount Taylor is believed by the Acomas to possess medicinal and supernatural qualities.

FEARS FOR MAYFLOWERS

Declaring that the practices of commercial interests will cause the mayflower, or trailing arbutus, to disappear from the forests of Massachusetts, Albert C. Burrage petitioned the legislature to prohibit the sale of the flowers. It has been found, he said, that the gatherers of the flowers for market have been pulling them up by the roots to such an extent that extinction is a matter of only a few years.

One feature in connection with ball games here lately that is to be deplored is the practice of offering insult to visiting players. Good, wholesome rooting and chaffing is permissable at any game, but there should be a limit to the amount of personal effront offered to visitors. If spectators would realize that our own boys would not appreciate such treatment when in other towns, they would refrain from the practice here. Anyone can enjoy a ball game and do a reasonable amount of rooting without resorting to language that is not considered good taste.

POULTRY

RUNTY HENS NOT DESIRABLE

Investigation Shows at Least One Fowl in Fifteen Is Undersized and Hence Unprofitable.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Runtiness is not so conspicuous in the poultry flock as it is among other farm animals, yet it is a factor to be considered, and it is possible that in some cases it is of great importance. Certain it is that undersized fowls are not desirable, and it has been the experience of many farmers and poultrymen that they can be almost, if not entirely, eliminated. This is the conclusion that may be arrived at after a study of the figures and comments obtained by a preliminary investigation of runts and their remedy conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Good Feeding and Care Will Practically Eliminate Runtiness.

The information was obtained from nearly 1,000 farmers to whom questionnaires were sent. Although these farmers were considered to be better than the average, they reported that 7 per cent of their animals were undersized to such a degree as to be called runty. This means, if the percentage holds true for all farms of the country, that more than 14,000,000 animals, not including feathered stock, are runts. In addition 6½ per cent of the poultry on these farms was undersized, which means that there is, perhaps, even a higher percentage for the total farms of the United States.

Inbreeding and poor matings, as a cause, are the principal factors distinguishing runtiness in feathered stock from that in other farm animals. It is the consensus of opinion of 474 poultry owners, in all parts of the country, that the following causes are chiefly responsible for the runts found in feathered flocks:

	Per cent.
Poor feeding	17.9
Inbreeding and poor matings	13.7
Inferior breeding stock	13.1
Parasites, especially lice	12.4
Neglect	11.4
Poor housing	7.0
Late hatching	6.8
Overcrowding	5.9
Disease (roup, diarrhea, etc.)	5.2
Low vitality of chicks	2.4
Selecting poor eggs	2.4
Total	100.0

Early hatching is of more importance, according to the comments of poultrymen, than the figures in the table indicate. It appears that relatively few flock owners are familiar with the advantages of early hatching, but those who do their hatching early find it a distinct benefit. For instance, one farmer says, "Last year all of my chickens hatched after the first of June were runts. Those before that were normal and were laying in October. The same care and feed were given to all of them." Another observes, "When I get my chicks hatched in April and May I do not have runts in my flock." Still another estimates that one-third of late hatches are runty. "Hatch no chicks later than May 1," he says.

Of equal interest are the warnings against inbreeding. "We have no runts in our poultry" is the statement of a Virginia farmer, who adds, "We buy purebred cocks from a different strain every year." "Keep purebred fowls and change the sire every year" is the injunction of another poultryman, and his experience is typical of many others.

Farmers' experiences with early hatching tally with the results of experiments by the bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. In these experiments the early hatched chicks showed a marked superiority over those purposely hatched late. There was a noticeably steady degradation in size and type of the late chicks compared with those hatched early.

From these side lights it is easily seen that the questions of runtiness and good live-stock management are closely related and are tied up with economic factors of great importance.

ON HIS OWN

By RUTH SONG

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mrs. Raymond regarded her youngest son with resignation. Yet she felt she would never be resigned to his impossible ways.

"Johnnie," she remonstrated for the third time, "I wish you'd sit straight in your chair and stop finger-combing your hair. You look a fright."

Vaguely, like a sleep-walker, Johnnie smoothed his sandy locks, upstanding by twisting fingers.

His mother sighed, thinking of his two brothers. She never nagged them. Trim and alert they were, both employed in a Boston bank. Such a comfort. As for Johnnie—hopeless! What he did down town where he worked, she couldn't imagine. Even if he emptied waste-baskets or swept floors, someone probably had to remind him, as she was endlessly doing at home.

These thoughts, audibly expressing themselves, urged Johnnie finally to go out, the parting injunction to take the key ringing in his ears.

Mrs. Raymond's taut nerves waited for the slam of the door, in spite of her caution to close it softly, then she settled down to sewing, a habit that had grown through colorless years of widowhood.

Later, the evening was brightened by a neighbor's visit. These friendly chats under the sewing-lamp were welcome. They meant an unburdening of the day's grievances.

"Do you have to nag your boys endlessly, Mrs. Harst?" She was squinting toward the light in an effort to thread a fine needle with a coarse thread. "My Elmer and Alfred never bother, but Johnnie—" she paused, sighing. The subject engulfed her.

"Your youngest?" the neighbor inquired. "Bad company, maybe."

The mother bristled.

"Oh, no, Johnnie's a good boy. It's his habits. I'm always reminding him—his rubbers, his handkerchief, to wipe his feet—I don't know how he gets on where he works. I don't see him start for he goes early. It's a marvel he wakes up. He'll never amount to shucks."

"I haven't seen him lately," the neighbor temporized. "Where does he work?"

"At Jones, Allan & Company. Lawyers."

"What does he do?"

"Office-boy, I guess. It's all he's fit for. Untidy. Shiftless. Never talks about his work. It's discouraging."

A day or so after, this same neighbor had business in the building where Jones, Allan & Company's offices were. No harm to peek at the youngster for his mother's sake. She didn't remember him, now that he had grown up.

Impressed by the emblazoned door that confronted her from the elevator, she hesitated, looking around in hopes of seeing touseled-headed Johnnie with a waste-basket, or hiding in a corner reading a paper novel.

Seeing no one, she timidly touched the call-bell on the outer door.

With startling alacrity the door swung open, causing her to retreat a step or two, and a tall, straight, keen-eyed young man popped out to demand her business with said Jones, Allan & Company.

So brisk and not-to-be-trifled-with was he, that Mrs. Harst regretted the errand which brought her.

She gasped, speechless, under the disconcerting scrutiny of this young guardian of the law offices.

"I—I beg pardon for disturbing you," she apologized, at a loss how to begin, "but a neighbor of mine has a boy working here. Being in the building I thought I'd drop in and say 'Howdy-do' to him. He wouldn't remember me, I guess, now he's grown big enough to work—"

At her uncertain pause, the young man stepped out, closing the door behind him. He swung a chair under the astonished woman before she had time to see from whence it came. Having thus deposited her safely away from the business entrance, he inquired:

"Can I help you? We have a great many employed here and not everyone is always available. If the boy isn't too busy or isn't needed for the moment, I'm sure he'll be glad to see you. If you'll tell me his name, I'll look him up for you."

Having thus made the inquisitive neighbor feel that business hours were no time for social calls, the formidable medium between Mrs. Harst and her desire stood ready to receive information.

Crushed and ill at ease, she glanced timidly up into the pleasing, although unsmiling, eyes.

"I'm sorry I bothered about it, but now I'm here it can't be helped. If he's busy, never mind. His name is Johnnie Raymond. If it's any trouble"—

For the first time the serious face of the young man broke into a charming smile and his hand went uncertainly up to the sandy hair and came down again without touching it. He bowed rather splendidly.

"You see, it's no trouble at all," he informed her in his crisp, pleasant tones. "I am John Raymond."

"BEST MAID" BREAD

The

Quality Bread

Did you ever stop to think about the price of Quality Bread in comparison with any other foods you buy?

"Quality Bread" better known in Red Lake Falls and most of the towns in the Valley as "Best Maid" Bread, a loaf of bread that is made of high grade patent flour, and of the purest, best ingredients money can buy. We use no substitute of any kind, and made by bakers that have made a lifelong study of the making of Quality Bread and naturally have become experts in their trade. We mention these facts for the reason that there have been bakeries and no doubt bakeries still exist, that are making and selling bread far below the food value of the "Quality Bread" and naturally they can sell it for a little less money, than we have to ask for our "Best Maid" Bread.

Quality Bread today is made in clean and sanitary Bakeries, where nothing is left undone in order to produce a loaf of bread to you, that is just a little better than one that was made yesterday. We ask you all in fairness to consider the difference in food value between "Best Maid" Bread and an ordinary loaf of bread, commonly known as "Bakery Bread" or "Bakers stuff" and we believe you'll agree with us, that "Quality Bread" is your best and most economical food today.

We want to present with as much clearness as possible the big value, nutritive as well as economical, in comparison with other standard foods, and our statements are backed by the Table of Food Values quoted from Goverment Bulletin No. 28. The shrewd buyer who gives this table an intelligent reading will find it an eye-opener. For instance. that takes two and one third pounds of chicken to yield as much nurishment as it would from one pound of "Quality Bread." If you act occordingly, you can easily "take o wailop" out of the high cost of living with Quality Bread.

IMPROVED ROADS

WAR SUPPLIES FOR HIGHWAYS

So Far Approximately $150,000,000 Worth of Surplus Material Has Been Distributed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Approximately $150,000,000 worth of surplus war materials, turned over by the War department to the Department of Agriculture, were distributed through the bureau of public roads to the various states for road-building purposes up to November 1 last.

Under the Wadsworth-Kahn bill this surplus war material is sent to the states with the sole provision that it be used only for road-building purposes. A vast accumulation of machinery, equipment, supplies and motor vehicles that was to have been used in France has thus been diverted to a useful peace-time purpose.

Included in the supplies distributed among the states are 27,198 motor vehicles, mostly trucks; 172 locomotives of various sizes; 25,000 gross tons of rails; more than 4,500,000 pounds of powder; and nearly 10,000 tons of TNT.

A compilation showing total deliveries of war material to the various states up to July 1, last, places the value of machinery, equipment and supplies so delivered at $30,648,779; of motor vehicles, $74,730,568; and of spare parts, at $11,731,424. The total value of deliveries to the states up to that date was $117,110,771. That figure did not include material to the value of approximately $11,000,000, which was retained by the Department of Agriculture, largely for forest road work, which is not done by the states. Also, it is believed that the states have received, in addition to the amount above mentioned, approximately $5,000,000 worth of material shipped by the War department from the various army camps and not reported by the states as delivered.

New Station Finished

The new bulk station being erected here by the Standard Oil Company is getting its finishing touches this week. The station, pumping apparatus, tanks and outfit are all of the best material procurable. Heavy concrete foundations hold the huge tanks which are elevated about ten feet from the ground. Oil is unloaded into distributing tanks by gravity which does away with the old tedious method of hand pumping. Everything connected with the station is put up in first class shape, as much care being taken with small details as is usually expended on a substantial dwelling house. Nothing has been left undone to make the station handy and easy to operate. When all completed, and the stock of oils and grease is in, the new station will be a credit to the village.

St. Hilaire 8 Alverado 3

St. Hilaire won from Alverado by a score of 8 to 3 in their game played here last Sunday. Rain had fallen just previous to the game so the ground was not in the best of shape. A cold, piercing wind made fielding difficult. The visitors brought in a score at first bat, but they did not manage to cross the pan again until the seventh inning when they gained the other two scores.

St. Hilaire, with John Melquist on the mound, played a slow, consistant game. At no stage of the game was there any danger of St. Hilaire losing the lead they attained in the early part of the contest. Alverado has a well balanced team, and had ground conditions been favorable, they would undoubtedly have put up a fast game.

Childrens' Clinic

A children's health clinic will be conducted in this village under the auspices of the Minnesota Public Health Assocition the later part of the present month. Arrangements are being made for rooms, etc. Date, place and time will be announced in next issue of the Spectator.

Governor J. Preus has ordered a survey made of timber in Minnesota, with the intention of having enough cordwood cut to supply such communities in the state that will be unable to get coal for fuel the coming winter.

A number of enquiries have been made lately by tourists for a camping place in or near town. A number of towns on the Jefferson Highway have provided such camping parks and find them a good investment.

Pioneer Passes Away

Word was received recently by Mrs. Pete Swanson of the death of her brother, Swan Anderson, which occured July 3rd at a hospital at Bellingham, Wash., after an illness of three months. Mr. Anderson was one of the earliest settlers in Black River township, this county, and he made his home there until he and family removed to Washington about twenty years ago. Mr. Anderson was county commissioner for a number of years, and also held other public offices during his years of residence in this community. He was well known in this locality, and his passing will be noted with regret especially among the older residents who knew him well. Mr. Anderson was born in Sweden, March 20, 1853, and was 69 years and three months of age at the time of death. He is survived by his widow, two sons and five daughters.

Sympathy of many old friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity is extended to the bereaved family in their loss of husband and father.

Visiting Days

Farm clubs and township farm bureau groups in several counties have set aside a day to visit the Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston, and to inspect the work being done there. Instead of on big visiting day this year, there will be several each week until harvest. The school and station staff extend a cordial invitation to all to come. Write Superintendent Selvig stating when you are coming. Usually the group that comes bring picnic lunches or suppers. A very valuable and interesting afternoon can be spent at the Red River Valley experimental farm.

District Court Closes

As was anticipated, the summer term of district court in this county closed last week. As harvest and haying was coming on, and there were a number of farmers on the jury whose presence was urgently needed at home, the work was hustled thru to enable the jurors to return home.

Work was started Tuesday morning on repair work to be done at the Merchants State Bank. New joists will be put in, the floor relaid and covered, and arrangements are also made for installing a hot water heating plant.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Carlson arrived last week by car from Iron River, Mich., for a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Carlson, and with her sister, Mrs. H. Fallman and other friends and relatives in this vicinity.

Stock Judging Contest

The first stock judging contest given by the Merchant's Association will be held Wednesday at 2 p. m. July 19th at Thief River Falls. A calf exhibit will also be held at the same time. All boys and girls or others having calves under one year of age are requested to bring them in, in order to have a good showing and receive the substantial premiums offered by the Merchants Association. There will be two judging contests, one for the older people living on the farms and the other for boys and girls of school age. The first one Class A, will be for farm men and women over twenty years of age. Premiums for this contest will be as follows: First prize $5.00, 2nd, $3.00, 3rd, $2.00 and the next two $1.00 each. Class B will consist of boys and girls under twenty years of age, who have not taken part in any state or district contest in stock judging. The premiums for this class will be the same as for Class A. One ring of Holsteins and one ring of Guernsey calves will be placed for this contest, 50 per cent given on reasons and 50 per cent on placings.

The premiums for the best calf will be as follows: Guernsey Class, 1st place $5.00, 2nd. $3.00, 3rd $2.00 and the next three $1.00 each. Holstein Class, 1st place $5.00, 2nd $3.00 3rd $2.00 and the next three $1.00 each.

Special Department

A special department to devote its entire efforts to helping farm women in developing the social and educational advantages to rural communities and in solving the problems of the farm home, has been established by the American Farm Bureau federation.

A report from the national headquarters of the Farm Bureau, just received by the county organization, announces that the new department will be housed in the Chicago office of the American federation. It will be under the direction of a real farm woman.

The department was established on the recommendation of a group of farm women, who make up the national woman's committee of the Farm Bureau.

Hog Sale Successful

The auction sale of pure bred Duroc Jersey hogs put on here last Friday by the Red River Valley Hereford Farm of Warren, was a success. Every animal was sold at a fairly good price. Spreading of 40 pure bred sows of that popular breed thruout this section of the country, augers well for future of the hog raising industry in this locality.

This part of the country is getting so one does not have to pray for rain to get it. Whether or not that is classed as an improvement is left to the judgement of readers.

The man who fills his thousand dollar loan with a pint of oil and a few gallons of gas and goes out to "enjoy" himself, is taking a roundabout method of courting pleasure.

"Because you see a man stagger, do not think he is full of moonshine. He may be just dizzy from looking for it," says an exchange. There may be towns in the United States where men stagger from such a cause, but they are mighty hard to find in this neck of the woods.

Catalogued Justice

An illiterate justice of the peace used to consult what looked like a law book, but was really a mail order catalogue. One day a negro haled before the squire on a charge of drunkenness. The squire heard the evidence and then, after opening his book and glancing at it, fined the negro $4.49 to be worked out on the roads at 25 cents per day.

As the negro was being led away he said to the marshal.

"I sho' is a unlucky nigger!"

"Unlucky nothing," said the marshal. "If the squire had happened to open that book at automobiles instead of pants, you'd be working on the road the rest of your life."—Exchange.

Sailors' Superstitions.

Time was when sailors would not think of sailing without a charm or pocketpiece of some kind, to ward off bad luck. Wind beads were a favorite and in nearly every port were maidens to sell them. Tattoos were considered essential for bon voyage, especially the butterfly on the shoulder predominated for good luck. A pig tattooed on the foot was assurance the man would never drown. Sailors used to say not a man is known to have drowned if he possessed this significant charm against fate.

Concerning Holland.

Holland is one of the few countries in the world that live up to the expectations of the traveler so far as looks are concerned, observes Kenneth L. Roberts in the Saturday Evening Post. The landscape is heavily sprinkled with windmills, canals and men and boys in overgrown bloomers. Storks sit around carelessly on the house chimneys in very melancholy attitudes. Life in Dutch cities is greatly slowed up by the canals. The natives of Rotterdam, for example, spend eight hours a day in sleeping, two hours and a half in eating, six hours in working and the rest of the time in waiting to get over the bridges across the canals. Taxicabs are seldom out of work in Rotterdam, for once a person gets into one he spends the rest of the day in front of open canal bridges. Americans who are weary of hearing Europeans speak sneeringly of American dollar chasers, will be interested to hear that Holland's coat of arms is said by resident Englishmen and Americans to represent two lions fighting over a gulden.

Asa Gray in Debate.

Gray had a logical mind and an eager temper. When a subject interested him, when he had espoused a cause, he was ready to debate, even to argue with much vehemence. Here is a pretty picture of such a friendly controversy, drawn by one who knew him well: "Both were excited and the doctor showed his excitement by moving or jumping nervously about the room, sitting on the floor, lying down flat, but laughing and sending sparks out of his eyes, and plying his arguments and making his witty thrusts all the while." Gray himself indicates the same tendency, with more concise self-reproach: "Most uncivilly, I fear, I fell into a wrangle with him directly. He even seemed to think us on the whole a bigoted set here in Cambridge—rather a novel view to us."—Gamaliel Bradford, in North American Review.

What Does "University" Mean?

The term universitas or university is often conceived of as an institution where "everything" is taught. This is by no means its original meaning, says Edwin A. Alderman in the World's Work. The ancient term simply meant a guild and was used of any legal corporation. The university, in one sense, is the original "corporation." It was only after many years that it became, in the Fourteenth century, limited to a particular body and was called universitas magistrorum et scholarum. Thus it did not refer to a place at all but to a guild or body of teachers and scholars; and when it was desired to express the abstract notion of a place where students from everywhere might assemble, the phrase stadium generale was used.

Your Wife Needs An

Electric Fan

Stop In And Get One On Your Way Home

Pretty hot in the office these days, isn't it? And yet, your kitchen at home is probably twenty degrees warmer. And there stands your wife, bending over the hot stove.

An electric fan in the kitchen means a fresher, sweeter, more rested little woman awaiting your homecoming. And in the evening hours you, too, can enjoy the restful comfort of fan cooled breezes.

JO

By JACK LAWTON

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

This is the true story of Jo; perhaps that is its only reason for being a story at all. Jo was the gardener of Meredith's estate, not a landscape gardener, but just a humble digger of dirt. I saw him upon a privileged evening when I was invited to the Merediths' for dinner. Joy was showing me the garden, and Joy was J. D. Meredith's only daughter.

I noticed Jo particularly, because of his fine build and handsome face.

Miss Joy prettily excused herself and left me to my own entertainment, I sought the young gardener in overalls, and drew him idly into conversation.

Over our cigars we talked as man to man, I giving personal confidences as I received them. And I learned that Jo had been born in a crowded, dingy locality of factory houses. Jo's father was one of the workmen. But his mother—Jo knew little of his mother, nor could remember her—had died in his childhood. And as I listened to his easy conversation, I, an old man, romanced over Jo's mother, and wondered if love for a former handsome Jo had led her far from a pleasanter home to the dingy one of her husband.

As days passed, and I accepted Mr. Meredith's invitation to bring my books at will to the silence of his gardens, I came to a realization of the big gardener's brooding discontent.

"Life is all wrong," he complained, "or else I'm in it wrong, some way. Can't seem to find pleasure in anything."

"Friends are good to have," I suggested.

Jo shrugged. "Mine don't measure up," he said.

"Love, then?" I questioned.

"Tried that too," he answered calmly, "doesn't satisfy. I met Rosa two years ago at a dance. She's pretty and she loved me. We were engaged. She's gone back now to the old country to see her folks and tell them all about it and exhibit my picture." He smiled mockingly. "Then she will come back to marry me."

I stared surprise. "That ought to make you happy," I said.

"It doesn't," he responded quietly.

Suddenly Miss Joy came down the garden path. She nodded to me and went to Jo, falling on her knees beside him. "I'd love to do that," she said, "show me how."

When she had gone, Jo turned his earnest gaze on me. "Fine woman that," he said, "no sham about her."

I found them often in the garden together, she writing letters and throwing him a word now and then, or silently observing his work, while he, in turn, would come to her with a flower or a leaf for inspection.

Their understanding seemed perfect, as was big Jo's manner.

One day I heard him say to her bitterly, with a graceful motion toward a black earthly bed, "I was raised down in the mud like that." Joy had quickly answered, "All growing things are."

I was just beyond the arbor tree, engaged with my book, and I fancy they, in their preoccupation, were unaware of my presence. Jo suddenly and masterfully took Joy Meredith in his arms and she received his kiss. I felt it my duty to waylay her.

"My dear, my dear," I reprimanded, being old, and friendly enough with her father to take that liberty, "nothing can come of this reckless love affair. Your father would never hear of the union. You must give Jo up."

"I will never give him up," she replied, "without some better reason than just his poverty."

Then I told her of the girl—told her, because I hoped to spare her the future disappointment that the knowledge of Jo's faithlessness to another must bring.

Jo, when she called him, admitted miserably the truth, admitted also that Rosa Klein was even now upon her way across the ocean, in the expectation of becoming his wife.

"I will go away," Joy said quietly, "and see the world father has so long wanted me to see. You must marry your Rosa, Jo dear, and you and I will never meet again."

So it happened that the Meredith garden was a desolate spot thereafter. I missed the courteous gardener, as much as I missed the sweet Joy. She was having a triumphant time abroad, according to the papers. Jo, I did not see for more than a year. Then he came to me one evening through the gates of the Meredith garden.

"Married?" I asked him. He nodded. "And I thought I couldn't go on living," he said presently, breaking a silence. "Rosa and I are different. No sympathy on her part, no patience upon mine. It's the old trouble; I have gotten in on life wrong. I had just determined to end it all, when I got this."

He took from his pocket a sheet of paper, spreading it on my knee. The envelope bore a foreign postmark, the last published place of Joy's stay. Across the paper was written: "Always, I think of you doing your bravest best. For I know you will grow out of your darkness into something worthy."

Jo smiled at the written words. "Well," he said, "I'm growing."

Champion Meanest Man.

A peculiar case which recently came before a London magistrate was that of a woman who applied for a separation from her husband, whom she denounced as the champion mean man o all England. She complained that her husband during the sugar famine kept his supply in a separate bowl, in which he imprisoned a fly. If the fly was still there when he returned home nobody had tampered with his hoard; if it was not, a lump or two had been taken.

Large Varieties Of Corn For Silage

"Generally the same variety of corn grown for grain production will prove satisfactory for silage also," says Prof. A. C. Arny of the division of farm crops and farm mangaement, University of Minnesota. "However, since it is not necessary that corn for good silage should mature beyond the begining dent stage before cutting, some growers, particularly those in the northern part of the state, can use to advantage a somewhat larger corn for this purpose. The choice should be limited to varieties which will produce ears that reach the begining dent stage before killing frosts."

Each child is given, free of charge, a thorough examination by a prominent children's specialist. These specialists are members of the Northwestern Pediatric Society, which is cooperating with the Minnesota Public Health association in conducting Infants and Childrens Clinics throughout the state. The specialists will tell you the exact condition of your child, suggest the diet, make the diagnosis, and leave to the parents the choice of any doctor they may be desire to do any prescribing or give the treatment that may be necessary for the child.

Malnutrition brings lack of vitality and loss of ambition. It often makes an ill-tempered and lazy child out of one who could be cheerful and active.

If your boys and girls are below the standard weight for their height and age, bring them to the Infants and Childrens Clinic and hear the physician explain what each particular child must do to bring up his weight and grow to be strong and happy. No fees are charged. It is through the sale of Christmas seals that the Clinic is made possible.

Annual School Meeting

At the annual meeting and election of directors of the local school board held at the village hall last Monday evening. Mrs. John A. Hansen and Miss Selma Hoff were elected members of the board to replace G. W. Hooper and Geo. Biskey whose terms expired with this year. This is the first time in history of the local school that women have been elected to serve on the board. By exercising strict economy and paring down expenses wherever possible, the district was enabled to vote $2,000.00 less for operating expenses the coming year than in 1921, which means a little reduction in taxes next year for property owners in the district.

Tell the Spectator, if its news.

Accidents Increase

Speeding lured on board, smooth, straightaway sections of the Minnesota trunk highway system is running up accident totals with the railroad crossings, sharp turns and other dangerous sections which are being made safe as rapidly as possible, says the current bulletin of the state highway department.

The better the road, the greater is the inclination to over-estimate safety and to speed. Elimination of dangerous crosings, clearing and widening curves, building guardrails and other ways will soon make the trunk routes 100 per cent safe, but careful driving is the first essential to highway safety as is shown by the large number of accidents where road condtions are nearly perfect.

Buy Dahlin Place

Albert Koip and Ernest Pateande have bought the building and fixtures used by the late I. Dahlin as a pool room and soft drink stand. The new proprietors have shined up the fixtures, given the place a thorough cleaning out, and have put in a new stock. They opened yesterday and are doing a nice business. The Dahlin place was always popular with its patrons, and it bids fair to become even more so under the new management.

Red Lake Falls took the long end of a 12 to 2 score in their game with Thief River Falls which was played on grounds of the former last Sunday afternoon. Red Lake's Indian pitcher had the visitors at his mercy from start to finish of the game.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Carpenter who are enjoying a summer outing at the Clarence Nutt home at Wahkon near Mille Lacs Lake are expected back in the near future after which they are going to visit relatives in Montana.

Repair work being done at the Merchants State Bank is progressing rapidly, and the management hopes to have everthing back in working order some time next week.

Happenings of the Week, Briefly Told

Rev. A F. Nelson left Monday to attend a meeting at Fergus Falls.

Rev. and Mrs. E. Holter were at Thief River between trains, Monday.

Ole Nash is busy getting his threshing outfit in shape for a big run this fall.

Mrs. Wm. Olsen and son, Harwood, were at Thief River between trains, Friday last.

Mrs. V. Brink and daughter, Donna, were at Thief River between trains, Friday.

Miss Esther Fricker returned Saturday from Radium where she visited at the Nick Schantzen home.

C. J. Molstad left Tuesday for Upham, N. D., to look after his farming interests near that village.

Oscar Fellman returned home last week after receiving treatment at the sanitorium south of Thief River.

Co. Tress. John Gullingsrud motored down from Thief River last Friday for a short visit with friends in town.

Mrs. Alex Sand and children of Annandale are here for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Aug. Svenson.

After spending a week on the race circuit over in Dakota, Mr. and Mrs. James Kinney returned home Saturdy morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Breneman left last Thursday by auto for their home at Brainerd, after a brief visit at the Sherva home.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Odegaard and Clara Iverson returned home Monday after a weeks visit with relatives near Calvin, North Dakota.

Mrs. G. M. Hofgren and Miss Dora Hofgren left Friday for Minneapolis after having visited at the G. W. Hooper home here.

Mrs. Geo. Wilson and little son arrived last Thursday from Minneapolis for a short visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Olsen.

Leafhoppers Appear

Potato leafhoppers have been found in some fields in Norman and Polk Counties. They differ from other potato insects in that they are not a leaf eating pest: Whereever they puncture the leaf or leaf stalk the tissue becomes poisoned and the effected parts wilts and dies. The insect is green, angular or boat shapped on underside of body. The wings are lacy at their tips and give grey-green and gray-brown color effect.

The best remedy for the the leaf hopper is the bordeaux mixture spray applied at high pressure on the insect.

Three or four applications are necessary for control. While the pests have not been found in this vicinity. it is well to be on the lookout for them, and to be familiar with proper method for eradication.

Win From Alverado

St. Hilaire won over Alverado in their return game played at that village last Sunday, by a score of 12 to 6. In the second inning the locals started a swatfest which ended after the entire team had each run in a score, making nine scores for the one inning. Balance of the game was better, the locals scoring only three to Alverado's six.

A number of parties from this vicinity have been out to the blueberry fields north and east the past few days. The crop is exceptionally heavy this year. Raspberries are also ripe and are reported to be plentiful down east of Clearbrook.

A new floor is being laid at the Bergh-Thorwick Hardware company store, and the interior is being freshened by a coat of paint which adds considerable to the apperance of that place of business.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hooper and family left Tuesday by auto for their home at Dallas Center, Iowa, after having visited at the Hooper home here. They will visit at the A. Hesby home enroute.

The stock of oils and grease for the new Standard Oil station arrived Friday last. The station is now in shape to supply all local needs in such products as they handle.

O. F. Post returned Monday morning from Berthold, N. D., where he has been employed as salesman in a mercantile concern since last spring.

A party of tourists from South Dakota arrived here yesterday enroute for a visit at the Dr. Dann home east of town.

Clean Up—Paint Up

Nothing adds so much to the appearance of a town, and creates such a good impression as cleanliness. Well kept streets, properly pruned trees, clean alleys, and a desire on part of residents to keep the town spick and span, makes it a desirable place to live, as well as commending the town to others who might be seeking a location. With building material at present prices, it is much cheaper to keep a building well painted than to have to repair for lack of it. Paint is not used for ornamental purposes only, but it protects the surface against the elements. This village has made a fine start this spring by replacing a number of old sheds and outbuildings with new structures. Other places have been repaired and painted. If the good work continues, St. Hilaire will soon be rated as one of the neatest and best kept villages in this part of the state.

Not only would such improvement benefit appearance of the town, but it would provide labor for people who need it, and who are residents and taxpayers in town.

To Gravel Highway

Four miles of state highway No. 33 between Thief River Falls and Warren is included in a number of small special projects to be graveled under direction of the Minnesota Highway Department in the near future. About 1050 miles of reshaping and gravel surfacing will be done in all, outside the big mileage being done by contract this season.

Ice Cream Social

An ice cream social will be held at the Herman Jepson farm home southeast of town Friday evening this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Selmer Hauge motored here from Bagley last Sunday for a visit with their parents. Returning they were accompanied by Mrs R. L. Hauge who will visit with them at Bagley, and with relatives at Bemidji.

Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Beebe, Lulu Beebe, Mrs. O. Gunstad, Mabel, Ann and Margaret Patterson autoed to Red Lake Falls last Sunday for a visit at the H. E. Ives home.

Rev. C. M. Grimsrud and family motored Wednesday to Holt to attend a picnic given for the ministers and their families of this district.

Mrs. A. F. Hall and daughter, Shirley, returned Sunday after a two weeks visit at Bagley, St. Cloud and Minneapolis.

How We Get The News

Day before yesterday a perfectly nice lady called up the office and with tears in her voice reproved us for not mentioning the fact that she had a friend visiting her last week. We told her that she had not let us know anything about it and therefore we did not know she had a visitor. Then she said: "Well you should have known. I though you were running a newspaper." Wouldn't that jar your slats? Some people think an editor ought to be a cross between Argus and Anna Eva Fay. They seem to think that our five senses are augmented by a sixth that lets us know everything that happens, even if we see, hear, feel, taste, or smell it or not. Dear lady, editors are only human, or at least, almost human. If you are going away or have returned from a vsit out of towr if Johnnie falls and breaks his arm, if your husband chops his toe instead of a stick of wood, if anything happens that makes you glad or sad, happy or mad, call us up. Tell us about it. That's the way to get it in the paper.—Durand Gazette

Couldn't Stand for That.

Billy did chores for the women of the neighborhood. In his eagerness to get out to play he had grown careless and several of the women had jacked him up a little. One day he did not go to his work and his father, thinking he had forgotten, reminded him of the fact, when he said: "Have quit, dad; couldn't stand it; I was getting henpecked."

Meter as a Measure.

The meter is the unit of length in scientific work. Almost all the countries of the world, with the exception of the British empire and the United States, have adopted this unit along with the rest of the metric system of which it is a part. The meter is 39.37 inches or 3.28 feet, an absolute unit, while the foot is arbitrary. The meter is the ten-millionth part of some quarter of a terrestrial meridian, that is of a degree of longtitude. It is, accordingly, based on an invariable distance and can be checked at any time.

Marriage, Hey!

You said you were married, I think? Well, I suppose it is wise, after all. It settles, centralizes and confirms a man, I have heard. Yes, it makes the world definite to him; it removes his morbid subjectiveness, and makes all things objective; nine small children, for instance, may be considered objective. Marriage, hey! A fine thing, no doubt, no doubt—domestic—pretty—nice, all round. So you are married? —From "Pierre" by Herman Melville.

Sham Battle to Feature Pennington County Fair

Tin Derbies and Gas Masks, Machine Guns and Rattle of Musketry When Service Men Present Spectacle.

The manner in which Elmer J. Eklund Post of the American Legion is taking hold of the request of the Pennington County Fair Association for the staging of a Sham Battle on the evening of Friday, August 4, 1922, assures a grand finish to what will no doubt be the most eventful season of the Pennington County Agricultural Society.

Arrangements are being made through Adjutant General Rhinow for the use of machine guns and equipment and the country is being scoured for overseas equipment for the event and any overseas man having a "Tin Derby" or "Gas Mask" that can be available for use will please report same to Oscar Paulson, Commander, at the American Railway Express Co. office.

Plans are rapidly being made to demonstrate to the home just how No Man's Land appeared to their sons and a demonstration will be given of the method of taking a machine gun nest that event which won for so many men the coveted Congressional Medal of honor.

The action will commence with the sending of a patrol out on "No Man's Land for the purpose of cutting the barbed wire entanglements of the enemy and star shells and very lights fired the same as were used in France and the patrol will then be met by a German patrol and a hand-to-hand fight take place, the sole survivor returning to the American ranks to report.

The attack will be preceded by an artillery barage, using especially prepared fireworks which similate the form and effect of a barage and a skirmish line will go "over the top" and will be subjected to shrapnel fire up No Man's Land.

Heavy counter artillery fire will then be encountered by the attacking party and the French system of squad formation will be adopted and later squad rushes will be made to place the attacking party in position to take the machine gun nest.

A barage will then be laid down by the rifle grenadiers and the automatic riflemen, and under incessant fire from the machine guns the bombers or moppers-up, with the use of hand grenades, will deploy and bomb the dug outs and machine gun nest and the final rush with fixed bayonets will demonstrate how the American Army in France silenced the German machine gun nests, the greatest known hindrance to infantry advance.

Later a demonstration of the activities of the Red Cross and Medical Service will be given and stretcher bearers will demonstrate the care given the wounded after action.

Oscar Paulson, Commander, is in charge or arranging for the personnel of the opposing armies and all those who are willing to participate will report to him. Members of the Engineering Corps familiar with laying out a trench system, step to the front (no digging required).

Lawrence Hermanson is in charge of properties and is busy arranging for the required equipment. A. W. Jardine is in charge of the machine gun nests and is busily engaged in getting German soldiers and equipment. G. Howard Smith is in charge of the infantry section and attacking party and is desirous of lining up a bunch of Bucks for the old game of "Squads East."

Taking it all in all, Friday evening, August 4, 1922, will be a hot time at the Fair Grounds. We want you there!

MIXED TRAINS ON THIS LINE

Great Northern Discontinues Passenger Train Service On Many Lines.

In the matter of passenger service, this line of the Great Northern stepped backward over twenty years last Monday when the mixed train service of olden days was inaugerated However, this line is not the only one to suffer as over fifty trains have been discontinued within the past week or ten days.

Shortage of fuel due to the coal miners strike and shortage of usable equipment caused by strike of railroad shopmen and other crafts is the reason for the change of service. The mixed train coming up on this line will leave Crookston at 9 a. m., and will arrive here somewhere about the same time as did the passenger. The south bound train leaves Warroad at 7 a. m. and both will run on way freight schedule which means they will get to stations whenever convenient, and will stay until all freight is either unloaded or picked up, as the case may be. The Wylie branch will be served by the northbound train on Tuesday and Saturday of each week. The mixed train service will be daily except Sunday. In veiw of uncertain schedule, the passenger business will not be very brisk on the mixed train, and no doubt some more enterprising auto bus owners will step in to furnish adequate transportation between towns along this line.

County Fair Next Week

The Pennington County Fair opens Wednesday next week for three big days. With a far better program of attractions and races than ever before the big exposition promises to be a bummer this year. Nothing has been overlooked to make the fair well worth while for every resident of this part of the state.

Mrs. A. Lykken and children of Fargo who have spent the past week here at the home of her brother, Dr. F. N. Bjerken, left Tuesday enroute to California where they will join Mr. Lykken and make their home.

An exceptionally heavy rain fell over this section Tuesday afternoon and again Tuesday night.

L. M. Mitchell Killed

L. M. Mitchell, who operated a cafe here until two years ago, when he and Mrs. Mitchell left to make their home at Churches' Ferry, N. D. met accidental death last Saturday when his auto overturned near that city and he was crushed to death beneath it. Mrs. M. McAndress, sister of Mrs. Mitchell, received word of the unfortunate occurance Saturday noon and left the same day to be present at the funeral which was held Sunday under auspices of the Masonic lodge of which Mr. Mitchell had long been a member. Interment was made at Minto where father and mother of Mr. Mitchell are buried. During their years of residence here. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell made a number of warm friends who will be pained to learn of the tragic death of Mr. Mitchell. Deceased is survived by his widow, and two daughters, the latter being Mrs. Englehorn at Churches' Ferry, and Miss Harriet of Minot. Two brothers, one at Minto and the other at Bismarck, also survive.

Heartfelt sympathy of many St. Hilaire friends is extended to the bereaved family in their tragic loss of husband and father.

Red Lake County Fair

The annual Red Lake County Fair opens today at Red Lake Falls and continues until Saturday evening. A far better program than ever given before is billed this season. In addition to numerous other good features, there will be a program of horse races given this year. Due to the growing season being so far advanced, it is reported the exhibits of grains and other crops will be exceptionally fine this year

Nels Benoit returned Friday from Saskatchewan, Canada, where he spent a week looking after matters in connection with a half section of farm land he owns there. Nels says he has never seen a finer crop than that in the Canadian Northwest this year.

Mrs. A. H. Gunstad and daughter, Rose, returned home Friday morning after having spent five weeks visiting at the home of the former's sister at Yakima, Wash., and with other relatives at Seattle.

Mr. and Mrs. K. Hunstad of Angus, and Milton Schantzen of Radium, and Miss Esther Fricker autoed to Maple and Union lakes and spent the day last Sunday.

Mrs. J. Almquist and children and Mrs. R. McKercher returned Sunday from a weeks visit with realtives and friends at Grand Forks.

Win Over Red Lake Falls

St. Hilaire took the long end of a 7 to 5 score in a very interesting ball game played with the Red Lake Indians on local ground last Sunday afternoon. The visitors secured a score in the first inning and for a time it appeared as though there would be no more scoring. Both sides clouted out some long drives. In the first half of the last inning Red Lake managed to fill the bases with two batters out. A long fly into center field at this stage of the game was successfully fielded by Al. Brink which ended the contest as above stated. The locals will play at the Red Lake County Fair next Saturday, taking on the winners of the Oklee-Plummer game which will be played Friday.

Coal Mining Starts

Mining of coal, under government protection, was started in three states last Monday morning. There is some difficulty in securing enough miners to carry on the work, but it is expected many non-union men will be recruited to insure steady movement of coal by end of the week. The Northwest has been assured priority in the shipments made. According to figures from previous years, the Northwest will require about 8,000,000 tons, or 160,000 carloads to carry it thru the winter.

RAILROAD RATES PERIL WOODLOTS

Should Save Millions On Fuel For Minnesota, Says State Forester.

Minnesota could conserve its forests properly, could keep inside its borders millions of dollars spent every year for coal and for freight to haul it many hundreds of miles, and could add large sums to the income of its famers, if railroads would cut rates on wood fuel enough to make its use on a large scale possible, according to William T. Cox, state forester.

"In some Minnesota counties which are considered fairly well settled," Mr. Cox said, "half the land is woods and wooded pastures. There is no reason for considering wood land as waste land. It can and should be made nearly as profitable as fields in crop.

"The threatened fuel shortage, if as bad as feared, may not be an unmixed evil. It may direct attention to the farm woodlot. A million cords of wood are cut annually in Minnesota to be used mostly on farms and in the smaller villages. But several times this amount should be cut every year to impove the farm woodlots by taking out the dead, dying and inferior trees. There is enough dead timber alone on farms between the twin cities and Iowa to go a long way toward heating our homes and places of business for a year.

"The railroads of this state probably could reduce their rates on fuel wood considerably and make more money hauling wood than coal."

Home Talent Play

A number of young folks in vicinity of Hazel are putting on a home talent play in the Hazel Hall Saturday evening this week. A dance will be given after the show. A whole evening of enjoyment is promised to all who attend.

PERHAPS some young men of this community who have refused our good advice will need the advice of Benjamin Franklin. Here is what Benjamin said to the young men: "Save, young men, and become respected and respectable. It is the surest way." The only mistake he made was in not mentioning our bank as the place to begin saving. The fact is, our bank had not started when Franklin made the above remark or he would have told the young men to start a bank account at the

Blueberry Cannery Busy At Baudette

The Baudette Blueberry Cannery got under way last week, and berries are arriving daily. The crop in some places is light, but reports from the Lake of the Woods indicate a tremendous crop, and by next week it is expected that the cannery will be handling about ten tons a day. The fruit is being put up under the cold pack system this year, and it is figured that more satisfactory results will be obtained in this way. The prospects are for a much better

Foolish Wisdom

By Elgin Halter

Pastor of M. E. Church

St. Hilaire, Minn.

"For the word of the cross is to them that are perishing foolishness; but unto us who are being saved it is the power of God," 1 Cor. 1:18, "because the foolishness of God is wiser than men—" 1 Cor. 1:25.

It is the wisdom of God that the choice friuts of life must be gathered ffom thorny trees at the expense of difficult climbing and painful toil; and that the sweetest joys are experienced only after the bitterest trials. It is hard for those who are perishing to accept this fact as wisdom but those who are being saved find that it is the way to a life of righteousness and consecration and redemption; a life of unselfish service and noble character.

It is the wisdom of God that we eat bread by the sweat of our brow. Neither the labor of our hands and brain should be despised, nor should we hope to live without toil. We should joy in the work that God has called us to do. He has ordained it to support our physical bodies, also to provide concreted and useful expression to our interior life of high ideals and spiritual aspirations; and to teach us how to live eternally now and to prepare us for the life continued beyond the grave.

Jesus spent many years of his life as a carpenter in the small obscure town of Nazareth. He was a builder of houses useing material which his own strong skillful hands had fashioned and fitted. With the long hours of difficult and painful toil, Jesus supported his life material, fed his life spiritual and won his life eternal It was from his years of toil as a carpenter that he learned how to be a saviour of mankind. It was his labor well done that taught him how, later, to make noble and serviceable men and women out of publicans and harlots and to use them to begin building the Kingdom of God.

The newspaper buyer pays only two to three cents for his paper. It is safe to say that the production cost of few American newspapers is less than 10 cents a copy, most of them average higher, some a great deal higher. The newspaper receives only about 50 per cent of the purchase price, the rest goes to the distributor. So the newspaper reader is paying directly for only 10 per cent of the cost of the article he buys—often less than that.—Dearborn Independent.

PETERSON--NELSON

Miss Julina M. Peterson and Ernest W. Nelson were married Wednesday evening, June 21, at 8 oclock at the Angelica Lutheran church of Los Angeles, California.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, the colors being yellow and white. Rev. Olsen performed the ceremony under a beautiful arch of green foliage and spring flowers. The bride's attendants were Miss Stella Swanson, maid of honor, the Misses Bertha Nelson, Florence Hegstedt and Margaret Swanson bridesmaids, all of Los Angeles. Mr. David Nelson acted as best man for his brother, and the ushers were Mr. George Peterson, Julius Petersen, Einer Hallstrom, Albert Carlson, Philip Ossian, Paul Olsen and Elmer Engdahl.

The bridesmaids wore the pastel shades of organdies, orchid green and yellow with large picture hats of leghorn trimmed in colors to match their dresses. They carried baskets of sweet peas. The maid of honor wore pink organdie, with large hat of leghorn, and carried a basket of Cecil Brunner roses. The little flower girl wore white net over turquoise blue and carried a little basket of rose petals and Cecil Brunner roses. The bride wore Ivory Satin embroidered with satin forming a coronet of lace, caught with lilies of the valley. Her boquet was bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony the wedding dinner was served at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Nelson. Covers were laid for seventy guests. The rooms were beautifully decorated throughout in yellow and white. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson left the next day for points in California and Mexico on a two week's honeymoon.

$57,000 PROFIT IN SIX MONTHS

Farmers' Co-operative Sales Agency Sets Aside Big Surplus.

Profits amounting to more than $57,000 have been set aside by the Central Co-operative Commission association in the first six months of 1922, to be returned to patrons in the form of patronage dividends.

In the first five months of its operations, ending Dec. 31, 1921, the farmers' terminal marketing agency accumulated profits amounting to more than $22,000. This surplus was returned to the livestock producers early this year. The total savings realized by farmers through dividends and surplus laid aside by the Central amount to $79,000, although the organization has been in operation less than a year.

Lower commission rates charged by the Central for handling livestock, it is estimated, saved farmres $19,000 in the last five months of 1921. In the first half of 1922, these saving have been increased by another 16,000.

Profits and savings in reduced commission charges do not represent all the direct cash benefits of co operative action on the terminal livestock market, according to J. S. Montgomery, general manager. Livestock valued at several hundred thousand dollars has been handled through the association's stocker and feeder service at actual cost, saving the producer thousands of dollars in commissions and other expenses, he said.

Nick Rohr Kills Self

Nick Rohr, well known locally, committed suicide by blowing off the top of his head with a shotgun at his farm between here and Plummer last Thursday, according to reports brought in by neighbors. Mr. Rohr was a widower and had two minor children. The latter had been away when the rash deed was committed, and upon arriving home found their father dead on the kitchen floor. Rumor was widespread last week that foul play was the cause of death, but later reports are as above stated.

No particular reason can be given as to circumstances that led Mr. Rohr to take his life. He was in fair condition financially, and had no trouble otherwise as far as can be learned.

Will Build Creamery

The creamery association at Roseau has decided to erect a modern plant on the same lines as the St. Hilaire creamery excepting theirs will have no basement. A committee from Roseau inspected this creamery as well as a number of others in the state a short time ago with a view of getting data on the best possible construction and arrangement. The local plant came the closest to their ideas of what a modern and well equipped creamery should be, so they are going to build on similar lines.

LOCALS WIN TWO STRAIGHT GAMES

In one of the hardest fought games of ball played in this section this season, St. Hilaire triumphed over the Oklee aggregation at the Red Lake County fair grounds at Red Lake Falls last Saturday. Oklee and Plummer staged a game the previous day, and St. Hilaire had contracted to play the winner. Oklee appeared with Narveson and Stovern, the McIntosh league battery, as well as other re-inforcements from down the line. The game was evenly played thruout, and the final outcome was in doubt to the end of the chapter. Narveson's hurling was rather erratic at times, he seemingly being unable to control the ball. K. Christian was put out of the game by being struck on the head by a pitched ball. Albert Brink had a wrist thrown out of joint by the same method, and Emil Hallemeck was temporarly out of the game when he received a swift one in the ribs. By putting in Pat Hall, and Yost of Red Lake Falls, the locals finished the contest with the long end of a 3 to 2 score.

In a spirited contest played on the local dimond last Sunday afternoon, St. Hilaire won over Thief River Falls by a score of 3 to 2. The visitors, who are all home players at Thief River, put up as fine a game of ball as any shown by the so-called league team from that city during early part of the season. The visitors scored one in the first which was followed by one for St. Hilaire. By a long drive into right field, the visitors secured another which made the score 2 to 1. From that point on neither side were able to score until the last half of the ninth when Jackson was hit by a pitched ball and took first. Christian up next singled. Both runners then stole a base. Engh drove out a little roller. Jackson came in on an overthrow, and Christian made a safe slide thereby ending the game with Engh on third and no men out.

County Fair Opens

The Pennington County Fair was opened yesterday under most favorable circumstances. The best exhibits ever shown at any fair ever given in this county, are displayed. In addition to numerous other fine attractions, there is the largest field of race horses this year that has ever appeared on the county track. More than twice the number of concessions ever sold before have been let this year. Not only is the fair the biggest and best ever given, but all previous records of attendance have been broken.

DAIRYING INCREASES IN THIS COUNTY

Below is a table giving the amount of butter manufactured in the creameries of this county for 1920 and 1921. The table shows there has been a considerable increase in 1921 over 1920. While the cash return is smaller, the cost of production was less in 1921 which means the actual profit in that year is greater. Considering everything, 1921 was a banner year, but the present year premises to outdo it both in matter of production as well as returns.

RURAL CREDITS DRIVE STARTED

Committee To Urge Adoption Of Amendment To State Constitution

First steps in an intensified campaign to obtain favorable action on the rural credits amendment to the constitution that is to be submitted to Minnesota voters this fall were taken last week. Representatives of all co-operative organizations in the state, meeting at the headquarters of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, named a committee of three to take full charge.

J. F. Reed, president of the Farm Bureau federation, Harry Edmunds, general manager of the Farmers' Terminal Packing company and C. P. Crandall, president of the Central Co-operative Commission Association, constitute the committee. It is empowered to raise needed funds and to have direct charge of all educational work that will be required.

A tremendous task faces the committee, as the law under which the amendment is to be submitted requires that a majority of all votes cast be favorable. Thus, failure to vote will be the same as voting against it.

The amendment is merely an enabling act which will empower the legislature to pass a law stipulating the exact manner in which the state's credit shall be used to supply farmers with long time loans, to be paid on an amortization plan.

Wood Rate Lowered

The Minnesota Railroad and warehouse Commission issued orders last week lowering freight rates on wood in carlots approximately 20 per cent. The immediate purpose of the cut is to provide a better market for wood and to serve the large cities in event the fuel shortage becomes more acute The order is temporary, effective August 1st to April 1st.

Threshing Starts.

The first threshing outfit reported in operation here this fall is that at the Peter Johnson farm east of the river. The rye is running fine down there, and they also expect good returns from other crops. A number of other threshing rigs will be in the field the latter part of this week.

Start An Account

PERHAPS some young men of this community who have refused our good advice will need the advice of Benjamin Franklin. Here is what Benjamin said to the young men: "Save, young men, and become respected and respectable. It is the surest way." The only mistake he made was in not mentioning our bank as the place to begin saving. The fact is, our bank had not started when Franklin made the above remark or he would have told the young men to start a bank account at the

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by James O'Brien, a single man, mortgagor, to Northwestern Trust Company, as Trustee under last will and testament of Mary Schroeder, deceased, mortgagee, dated October 5th., 1915, with power of sale, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, November 10th. 1915, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 3 of Mortgages on page 568; which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee, to Northwestern Trust Company, of St. Paul, Minnesota, by written assignment dated March 15th. 1922, recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds June 17th. 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M. in Book 11 of Mortgages on page 624; which default consists in the failure of said mortgagor to pay the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon which became due October 1st. 1920, and which default still continues. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon with interest on both at 5½% per annum since October 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $311.24 taxes paid by the undersigned under the terms of said mortgage on the premises hereinafter described on April 4th. 1922, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since April 4th. 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of Two thousand one hundred forty dollars forty cents ($2,140.40), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by the same, to-wit: Lot Seven (7) of Section Twenty-four (24) and Lots Four, Six, Eight (4, 6, 8,) and the Southeast quarter of the Northwest quarter (SE¼ NW¼) of Section Twenty-five (25) all in Township One hundred fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 9th day of September, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $2,140.40 and interest from date of this notice and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Haywire Service

The Warroad branch of the Great (?) Northern has evidently been picked as the "goat" for hit-and-miss service since the shopmen's strike caused curtailment of trains. Travelers say the St. Vincent line has two passenger trains a day; the Duluth line local is running as usual with the exception of Sunday, and the Moorhead line still has its local. The Warroad branch carries as many passengers into and out of Crookston as any other line, and the amount of the business compares favorably with the lines mentioned above. Just why passengers who pay nearly four cents a mile for decent accomodations should be compelled to travel on a stock train, and be hung up at every way station is beyond comprehension. If other lines fared the same there would be no kick coming. The "first class" accomodations on this line are on par with the famous Slow Train Thru Arkansas. Towns on this branch are entitled to some semblance of service when they are paying for it.

Invites Comment

Local garages and eating places received this week from the state highway department self addressed mailing cards on which to make suggestions of ways in which the highway using public may be better served by changes calling for small expenditure. The highway commissioner states constructive criticism from any person will be appreciated. If a highway employee is doing good or bad work; if someone is escaping paying taxes on his car; if the official marking in some turn could be made plainer, the department wants to know it. Costly improvements at this time are outside this particular plan. Anyone having suggestions to make should sign their communication with name and address as evidence of good faith.

THE DIFFERENCE

By MILDRED WHITE.

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

When Carlton met Izzie, she was working in a city law office, the very office in which he, himself, found employment.

It had been Carlton's boyish ambition to become the respected lawyer in his own home town when old Judge Lambert should give up practice.

In Hillcrest Lawyer Lambert was a great personage; Carlton, the youth, had looked up to him with reverential awe. But here in the big bustling city it was different. "Lambert," did you say?" queried his new employer, "don't believe I've heard the name."

Carlton thought longingly of his old home so unlike the city boarding place. The village home had not been given over to strangers. He wanted to keep it as long as he could, with things just as his mother had left them; the blue-rimmed teacups that she had placed in the old cabinet, the very evening of her sudden call to the Great Beyond.

Carlton hoped to go back there some day, when he could get over this dull feeling of loneliness and when he could save enough money to take the vacation. Then he came to know Izzie. She had formed a habit of stopping at his desk to say good-morning.

"Isabel" Ware was her name.

"We never had a garden," laughed Izzie, "never wanted one. The little high-up balcony is good enough for dad and mother and me. How could you endure living in the country? Seems as if I'd die there."

Carlton looked at her bright eager face, her jaunty turban aslant over her dancing eyes. "Maybe," he said slowly, "you would."

Kind heartedly Izzie invited him one evening to her home. "I've told mother about you," she confided, "and mother says it's lonesome for a strange young man in a city, so come and see us whenever you feel like it."

The evening in pleasant Mrs. Ware's cozy apartment was such a comfort to Carlton that he did go again, and again. And so—he became engaged to Izzie. It happened in a most natural manner one evening as they walked to the theater together.

"I wish," said Carlton earnestly, "that we could be together, just you and I, Izzie, forever. I wish you would marry me."

"All right," cheerfully responded that young person, as she gave his arm a hug, "I will."

But even as Carlton sat blissfully holding her hand in the darkened theater, disappointment came to him. He had been picturing, half unconsciously, his Isabel moving about the old loved home in Hillcrest, while he, his diploma attained, sat in Judge Lambert's place, looked up to, depended upon by his own people—the kindly people of Hillcrest.

Isabel interrupted his thoughts with a low laugh. "Carlie," she whispered, "look at the contrast of scenery. The effect is pretty. On this side, tall lighted buildings of the city, the streets gay, thronged. On the other side the village, long lonely spaces, desolate houses with their intermittent lights. Some contrast! Give me the city every time to that wilderness."

Carlton stared steadily. He had loved the silent pictured street. It was there that his memories wandered, yearningly. Then with a start he put his dream aside. Izzie was to be his wife, Izzie must be happy; he would sell the house in the country.

Carlton turned with a sigh. "Izzie, dearest," he said, "I am going out to the village tomorrow, to see about disposing of my house. Would you like to go with me?"

"I'd love to," the girl responded eagerly.

He was proud of her, as he walked down the village street by her side; proud, too, that she should witness the welcoming smiles and greetings bestowed upon him.

Isabel was interested in the houses, some of them quaint, some pretentious.

When Carlton led the way down the deserted path to the white house that had been his home, she was silent, sympathetic. She picked a white rose from the porch vine to fasten at her breast, and she touched the blue cups reverently. Her eyes grew misty as she gazed on the picture of Carlton, a boy leaning against his mother's knee. And as the girl sat before the old square piano, the light coming through the window made a picture of her there—the picture of which Carlton had dreamed.

Out in the garden at twilight they walked together; then the man spoke abruptly: "Let's get away from all this," he said, "I—can't bear it. You don't understand."

Izzie sank down on a garden bench. Her smile was tender, maternal.

"But I do understand, dear, now," she said softly. "This is your home, a real home, Carlton. I am seeing the place tonight through your eyes, the eyes of love and so I love it, too. I want to live here, dear. I am realizing that I have always wanted a garden, your garden"—Izzie's voice halted tremulously—"and blue teacups, Carlton. I've wanted them too, and kitchen things to fuss over."

Joyously he caught her in his arms and because he was eager in voicing his happiness, he told her [illegible]

The Better Way To Health

Chiropractic, the modern health science, has established the fact that man's brain controls the health of every organ in his body. The lung,s heart, spleen, liver, kidneys, stomach, bowels —in fact, every part of the body is dependent upon the brain activity.

Your body is a perfect net work of nerves, leading out from your brain over the spinal cord, and thence to the different tissues and organs throughout your body. These nerves are the electric wires that carry the nerve electricity or NERVE FORCE. Every portion of your anatomy must have its share of this NERVE FORCE in order to be kept healthy.

This is what happens when you are sick,—there is a mechanical pressure on nerves where they leave the spinal cord between the small oval joints of the spine. If it is a nerve supplying the stomach, stomach trouble result. If a nerve leading to the kidneys—kidney trrouble is the inevitable result. In other words, the particular part of the body supplied by the pinched nerve becomes diseased because it does not receive its share of the nerve force. We will be glad to supply you with indisputable proof of what we are able to do for your particular sickness. Consultation is

"Quench Not The Spirit"

BY ELGIN HALTER
Pastor of M. E. Church
ST. HILAIRE, MINN.

Jesus of Nazareth was the noblest soul that ever breathed. His character was uniquely beautiful and inspiring. and his personallity was most attractive and appealing. So perfectly did Christ manifest the whole will and true character of the Father, and live the true life for men that Peter was led to exclaim, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God," and the angry mob heard Pilate declare that he could find no fault in him and marveling say, "Behold the MAN."

"Great is the mystery of godliness." It is the power of God thru an indwelling Spirit. This same Spirit that made Jesus what he was is also in everyone. "Quench not the Spirit." When its still small voice within bids you be pure and honest and earnest, and to lead a life of unselfish service; then quench not that spirit, but obey its voice, even as Jesus did, and by so doing you will glorify the power of God that is in you, and enter into the true life that is in Christ Jesus.

Oscar Fellman Dies

Oscar Fellman, for many years section foreman on the Great Northern here, passed away yesterday afternoon at 5:00 o'clock. He had been in poor health for over a year but did not retire from active service until this spring. He was a patient at the Sanitorium at Thief River for a short time during early summer, but his condition was such that no hopes were entertained for his recovery. He is survived by his widow and four children, Julia, Harry, Clara and Birdie.

Harry Fellman who is employed in Dakota is expected home today and the funeral will be held from the home tomorrow.

Old Pioneer Dies

Adolph Anderson, well known Black River pioneer, passed away yesterday at the home of his son, Felix Anderson. The old gentleman, who always enjoyed fairly good health, was taken ill suddenly. Among the immediate suriving relatives are:

Felix and Albert Anderson and Claus Adolphson of Black River, Mrs. Ole Brink of this village, Mrs. C. W. Johnson and Erick Adolphson who reside in California. No details as to funeral arrangements are available at this writing.

A number of friends and relatives of Mike Fricker sprung a surprise party on him last Saturday evening on occasion of his 49th birthday anniversary. A fine time was enjoyed by all present, and Mr. Fricker was presented with suitable reminders of the occasion.

Mr. A. W. Lund, of the Thief River Falls and Moorhead ice company, stopped here Tuesday for a short visit with P. E. Bergh while enroute from Thief River to Moorhead.

Might Say "Human Nature."

When we read Thackeray's remark in his note on happiness: "And if Eve had been perfectly happy would she have listened to the tempter?" we begin to doubt his understanding of the feminine nature.—Boston Transcript.

Task Before America.

America, too, will have to strain its energies, crack its sinews and all but break its heart, as the rest of us have had to do, before it can become a habitation for the gods.—Thomas Carlyle.

Try to Say Something Good.

Have a good word for everybody. The only man who has a right to look down on others, is the man in an airship. Even the tombstones speak well of those beneath them.—J. H. Turner.

The Pampered Zone.

Christopher Morley remarks that "the fat man is his zone enemy." Apparently, then, he obeys the injunction to love one's enemies.—Boston Transcript.

For Double Signatures.

Letters from business houses should have a double signature, first in typewriting and below that the writer's personal signature. Just try to read the signatures of some of the people who write into any big office, especially those of small banking house cashiers and bond men. There are hundreds of thousands of people who write signatures which require much time to decipher. Many offices have had firms called up by phone to find out tactfully the name of the man who had written a certain letter but whose signature the receiver could not read.

GRAIN GROWERS RE-ORGANIZED

Reed On Board, In Charge Of Co-op. Grain Marketing Agency.

Reorganization of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., under the direction of Farm Bureau leaders, representing creditors, was announced this week at Chicago. Essentials on the new program are:

First: A new board of directors upon which presidents of nine midwest Farm Bureau federations will serve. Among these, is J. F. Reed of Minnesota, who will give as much time to the work as his duties will permit.

Second: Reduction of overhead expense at national headquarters by placing the Chicago office in charge of one person, a paid secretary.

Third: An advisory committee made up of eminently prominent financiers.

Reorganization was completed August 4 and 5. Resignation of all former officers and directors were accepted.

Presidents of the Farm Bureau federations in Minnesota, Illinois Missouri, Kansas, Indiana, Iowa, Ohio and Wisconsin. the secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau federation and ten other farm leaders were elected to fill the vacancies. These men will serve for a per diem of $10.

Announcement of reorganization came shortly after a meeting in St. Paul called by Mr. Reed, to consider steps toward marketing the 1922 crop cooperatively, if the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. was unable to function.

The meeting resulted in appointment of a committee of five, headed by Mr. Reed. This committee was instructed to take all practical steps to put into the field a sales agency to serve farmers in Minnesota This committee made up of N. J. Holmberg, commissioner of agriculture, T. E. Cashman of Owatona, member of the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation's grain marketing commitee, T. H. Hagen, of Lakeville, and H. C. Lau, Minnesotan who had served on the U. S Grain Growers' directorate, will meet this week to hear a report from Mr. Reed, who left for Chicago Monday evening.

New officers of the U. S. Grain Growers are: E. H. Cunningham, president, H L. Keefe, vice president, J. M. Mehl, secretary and Charles E. Gunnels, treasurer. Mr. Mehl served as Assistant to the President of the U. S. Grain Growers

County Fair Closes

The Pennington County Fair closed last Friday night after a successful session of three days. Large crowds thronged the grounds every day, but the last evening brought out the largest crowd ever assembled on the ground, to witness the sham battle put on by the American Legion To say the last mentioned scene was realistic, is putting it mildly, and the crowd was well satisfied with the performance.

ASKS INCREASE IN LOAN LIMIT

Federal Land Banks Should Be Able To Loan Up To $25,000, Says Reed

Active steps to obtain legislation increasing the loan limit of Federal Land Banks from $10,000 to $25,000 were taken last week by J. F. Reed, president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation. In 800 letters to presidents, secretaries of county farm bureau associations and county directors of the state federation, he urged that Minnesota Senators and Representatives be asked to support amendments to Land Bank laws now pending in Congress.

"In many places in Minnesota the maximum of $10,000, now allowed, is insufficeint to meet farmers' demands for capital invetsment needed in acquiring lands or making improvements," the letter says. "It is proposed to raise this limit where the security is sufficient. It is generally agreed by all interested in the welfare of the farmer, as well as those posted in good credit facilities, that this change should be speedily made.'"

Greenbush Coming

Next Sunday afternoon the Greenbush ball team will be here to try conclusions with the locals. This is the first game staged between these two teams for some time.

Gerenbush has played some fast ball this season, and being as many clubs up the line have disbanded, they will undoubtedly have some outside players in their lineup St. Hilaire. has put up some mighty good battles this season, the last being their victory over the fast East Grand Forks team last Sunday, so the visitors can be assured they are not going to have a walkaway. This,will no doubt be one of the fastest games played here this season and no baseball fan should miss it.

1006 LABORERS SENT TO FIELDS

Government Agency Unites With Farm Bureau. Obtain Low Fare

Government employment offices in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Superior, co-operating with the Farm Bureau, last week sent 1006 farm hands to Red River Valley and North Dakota harvest fields. In one day the Minneapolis office sent out 391 men.

From August 1 to August 15, inclusive, farm hands are traveling from the Twin Cities or the Twin Ports to norhwest harvest fields for a flat fare of $5.00 a man. This rate was granted by the railroads after conferences with State and Farm Bureau officials of Minnesota and North Dakota, who made representations showing that a drastic fare reduction was the only way in which the farm hand shortage could be saitsfactorily met.

The railroads agreed to carry men to any point designated by the government employment agncies for $5.00, provided five or more travel together. J. D. Williams, Industral Commissioner, directing the free employment service, expects to supply farmers with 3000 or more men during the 15-day period.

Additional data received by F. L French, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, who is making a labor survey of the state, bears out earlier indications that the the Red River Valley is the only section of Minnesota where there is a farm hand shortage.

Goergen Sells Out

In a deal made this week, Henry Georgen sold his general merchandise stock to The O. Monson Co., a concern who has stores at various points in Minnesota and North Dakota. The new owners are busily engaged in rearranging the stock on hand, and they also intend to increase the stock to a considerable extent. They have extensive experience in merchandising, and will fit out the local store in first class shape. Mr. Goergen has no definate plans for the future, but plans to spend the balance of the summer here looking after collections and other matters.

THE AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION

If it is the intention of the railroads to swing pubilc sentiment in their favor and against the striking workers by giving as poor an imitation of service as the roads can possibly devise, they are working on that plan now.

It makes mighty little difference to the public in general what wages the railroad workers are paid. Rates for freight and passenger service are not based upon the amount paid shopmen and other workers now on strike. The railroads have always charged all the traffic would bear regardless of whether they paid section men the old wage of $1.10 a day, or what they are getting at present. The workers who operate the roads are as much entitled to living wages as the private owners of the roads are entitled to top rates for hauling freight and passengers with their old, out of date equipment. If the private owners of this public utility cannot agree with their employees to give the public the service for which it is paying, its high time something was done to set them right in regard to the obligations they owe to the people, as a whole, who made possible the building of roads in the first place.

The Potato Outlook

The potato yield in Pennington and Marshall County will be somewhat decreased by the prevalence of early blight and wilt. The early blight shows in deceased spots on any portion of the leaf with concentric ring markings. The wilt shows the stems affected and browned internally, especially in sap tubes, somtimes the whole lower stem browned; the tube showing brown rings or rot at the stem end.

Rhizoctonia disease is also showing in some patches. The stems showing rot in definate areas, brown, not slimy; tubers are affected with black spots on surface. These diseases are more common this year than last and many fields will be decreased in yield at least 25 per cent. The leaf hopper, a small bug working on the underside of the leaf has shown up in some fields, but is not doing much damage. The leaf hopper can be driven off by the use of Bordeaux mixture.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Riley of Milbank South Dakota were dinner guests at the W. P. Wilson home Saturday evening. They came by car to St. Hilaire to look after their farming interests. They are old acquaitances of Mrs. Wilson.

Threshing is on in full swing in this locality. Many machines started to work the first part of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hartje are making preparations to move from here back to his old home at Austin where they will operate a farm owned by Mr. Hartje Sr.

Emil Eckstrom Dies

Last Friday at the hospital at Warren occured the death of Carl Emil Eckstrom, well known, young Sanders farmer. It is understood that death was caused by blood poisoning brought on by an injury received a short time ago. While many friends were aware that he was at the hospital, very few knew his condition to be so serious.

Emil, who was raised in this community, was well thought of and his passing is to be regretted. Deceased is survived by his widow and two minor children besides his mother and sisters.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. O. J. Lundell and H. Pope at the Eckstrom family home Tuesday afternoon, and interment was made in the Rux cemetery on the Eckstrom farm.

Heartfelt sympathy of many friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity is extended to the bereaved family and relatives in their loss of husband, father and son.

Leo Carpenter, who is employed near Detroit, came home last week-end for a visit with his family.

Mrs. H. Loken was down from Thief River Tuesday evening for a short visit at the home of Mrs. D. Patterson.

John Foilstad has been appointed section foreman for the G. N. at this place to succeed Oscar Fellman, deceased, who resigned in June.

PICKING DUCKS FOR BREEDING

Active, Healthy Females of Medium Size Are Recommended—Use Only Mature Fowls.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Ducks are usually mated in flocks of about thirty females with five or six males, as the drakes do not fight one another. The number of males may be reduced to one for every seven females about the first of March, and again changed a month later to one male for eight to ten females.

Active, healthy females of medium size should be used for breeding; that is, weighing about eight pounds when mature. Only mature birds should be used as breeders. Select ducks with short necks, medium long bodies, flat backs and of good depth to the keel bones. Watery eyes usually are a sign of weakness in ducks. The drake is coarser and more masculine in appearance than the duck, and has a distinct curl in his tail feathers. Ducks should be sold, usually, after they are two years old, although the best breeders or layers may be kept over their third year, say poultry specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture.

Ducks Should Be Sold After They Are Two Years Old.

In handling ducks, pick them up by their necks, as their legs are very easily broken. Ducks lay their eggs early in the morning, and should be confined to the house or pen until 9:30 or 10 o'clock in the morning. If allowed to roam early in the morning they may lay in a pond or stream and the eggs may be lost.

SEEK VACCINE FOR CHICKENS

Field and Laboratory Tests Are Being Conducted at the Kansas Agricultural College.

Experiments involving many field and laboratory tests are being conducted at the Kansas State Agricultural college to determine the efficacy of a vaccine for fowls to prevent cholera, typhoid and roup. It has been determined that cholera and roup are caused by the same organism. In field tests a vaccine produced at the college by Prof. F. R. Bandette has given some very satisfactory results and this is now being tested out in the laboratory. If these tests are successful more field work will be done by college experts. No vaccine is being given out at this time because the chemists are not in a position yet to guarantee it.

The Better Way
To Health

Indisputable proof is a natural demand. Establish it beyond questionable doubt and people become satisfied.

That's why people all over the lands are accepting Chiropractic as the Modern Science of Health. The testimonials of hundreds of thousands of patients who have regained their health through spinal adjstments alone is convicning proof.

Many of your neighbors—some of them your personal friends—people you trust and honor have been convinced of the wonderful results obtainable from Chiropractic. These folks have been made sound and healthy after having given up hope of ever again knowing what real health and happiness meant.

If YOU do not understand what Chiropractic means or what it can do for you we will be glad to explain it fully. We will be glad to make an analysis of your spine without cost, and give you an honest opinion as to what benefits you may expect.

STATE FAIR TO THRILL 500.000

World's Greatest Features Engaged by Minnesota State Fair Sept. 2 to 9.

Action! Speed! Thrills!

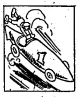
These three words—in a nut shell—describe the $100,000.00 entertainment program which will feature the coming Minnesota State Fair—Twin Cities—September 2 to 9.

Never before in the history of the Northwest has there been an attempt to stage such a stupendous amusement bill as will be presented each day at the State Fair. So many novel features have been engaged that visitors will be dazzled.

Exciting horse races; thrilling automobile races; a spectacular aerial circus; twenty-five big vaudeville acts; a gorgeous fireworks spectacle; auto polo, pigeon races, horseshoe pitching, a midway with twenty big attractions, and a dozen big bands and orchestras will be among the leading features on the program.

Auto polo, ranked by many as the most thrilling of all sports, will be the daily feature at both the afternoon and evening shows. Two of the leading auto polo teams of the country will furnish the excitement—and spills!

A slip of a school girl, just turning 18, Miss Lillian Boyer, of Chicago, will headline the aerial circus, which bears her name. Miss Boyer is the only woman who successfully changes from a speeding automobile to a low-flying airplane, with both car and "ship" going at 60 miles an hour. Miss Boyer is alone in her field, and is regarded as the greatest woman aviatrix and acrobat of all time. Since the death of Lieutenant Louis James, killed recently while making a change, Miss Boyer is the only person performing the stunt today.



With Miss Boyer will be two of the best known aviators to see service in the recent war, Billy Brock and Jimmie Faulkner. These daring birdmen will assist Miss Boyer in all her dizzy stunts.

As part of the evening show, Pilots Brock and Faulkner will stage an aerial battle. Using specially constructed planes, illuminated by fireworks, they will bomb the fair and perform other hair-raising maneuvers depicting modern warfare.

Lovers of harness horse racing will enjoy themselves to the limit on four days, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, September 4, 5, 7 and 8. More than 400 horses have been entered in various events, and the best racing in years is forecost. The management is offering $22,000 in purses, with added money, which means the horsemen will carry away at least $30,000.

The world's fastest automobile—the Wisconsin Special, built in Minneapolis last fall—will be seen in the big automobile races that have been carded for three days of the fair, Sig. Haugdahl, the blond Scandinavian speed king, who piloted his freak machine over the Daytona Beach course faster than three miles a minute, will go after all records, including the world's circular dirt track record, with his new car.

Haugdahl set the world's record with his Fiat car at the Minnesota State Fair last year when he made the mile in 46⅘ seconds. Haugdahl has sent word to the State Fair officials that he is having his car thoroughly overhauled for the meet. He declares that he will cut several seconds from this record with his powerful 300 horse power airplane motor, when he cuts loose. The car was designed by Haugdahl, and differs in appearance from other types of machines. It is only 18 inches wide, and wind resistance and vacuum have been reduced to a minimum.

In addition to Haugdahl, a score of other leading dirt track drivers of the country will compete for the $10,000.00 in purses offered by the fair.

The vaudeville and circus program will be a stunner. So many acts will be going on in front of the grandstand that patrons will grow dizzy trying to watch the many performers at the same time.

Bands and orchestras galore will dispense music. Al Sweet's Singing Band, one of the foremost concert organizations in the country, will be brought to the fair from New York. The Duluth First American Legion Band, the crack doughboy band which won premier laurels at the American Legion convention in Kansas City, will appear the entire week. Other bands include the Minnesota State Band, the Spring Grove Band, Bemidji Boys' Band, and the Sanborn cornet and reed band.

1,000 Children to Exhibit.

More than 1,000 children will compete in the Boys' and Girls' club contests at the coming Minnesota State Fair, Twin Cities, September 2 to 9, according to T. A. Erickson, State club leader. [illegible]

Forbes--Ellington

One of the lovliest weddings of the season took place on the beautiful grounds of the Robert Forbes home yesterday, when their daughter, Lois became the bride of Alvin Ellington of Watertown, Minn. The hour of the ceremony was 4 o'clock and the bride and her attendants approached an altar formed of flowers banked against the side of the summer house in the midst of a flower garden, through an isle formed of cornucopias twined with green and filled with a profusion of garden flowers. White daisies, gypsophilia, larkspur and snapdragon predominated in the exquisite arrangements.

The bride entered on the arm of her father, preceeded by two small flower girls, Joy Forbes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Forbes, and Mary Forbes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Forbes, and her maid of honor Miss Eleanor Anderson of Brainerd. The service was read by Rev. William F. Scoular of the Glen Avon Presbyterian church and Ward Coppes of Chicago acted as best man. —Duluth Herald.

The above from the Duluth Herald will be of interest to many St. Hilaire people who were acquainted with Miss Forbes when she taught in the local high school two years ago.

Minnesota Has The Goods

Minnesota has more lakes than any other state, and she is due to have better roads than any other state within a few years. The combination of lakes and roads will make the state a playground for the nation, and the people of Minnesota will profit to the extent of millions of dollars every summer. There is no reason why Minnesoa's summer tourist business should not bring as much money to the North Star state as California's winter tourist business brings to the Golden Sunset State.—Dawson Senti-

Inc., since its incorporation. Mr. Gunnels is treasurer of the American Farm Bureau federation. Secretary Mehl is to receive a salary of $5,000 a year. This is the only salaried position at the national headquarters.

The new board of directors elected an executive committee of three: Cunningham, Cowles, and Reed and vested in it broad powers.

An advisory executive committee of three was appointed to advise on questions of finance and marketing. The members are: Barnard M. Baruch, financier, New York, Alexander Legge, president of International Harvester Company, Chicago, Frank O. Wetmore, president of the First National Bank, Chicago. Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace and Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover have been invited to serve as ex officio members of the new board of directors, representing the public.

The reorganization of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. was effected through the recommendations of the midwest Farm Bureau creditors committee. This committee consists of Mr. Cunningham, secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau federation, W. S. Hill, president of the South Dakota Farm Bureau federation, and J. W. Coverdale, secretary of the American Farm Bureau federation. It was authorized on May 18 in a conference of the midwest Farm Bureau presidents and secretaries.

On July 19, officers of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. submitted to the commitee a written statement saying arrangements for sales agencies had gone amiss. "We have nothing further to offer," the statement said.

The officers therefore requested the midwest states committee to undertake reorganization.

In The Oil Game

The following clipping from the Peirre, S. D. State Journal will be interesting to the numerous friends in this vicinity of Milo Drake who formerly resided here. Here's hoping Mr. Drake's venture into the oil business will be both pleasant as well as profitable.

"The annual stockholders meeting of the Blunt Oil Well, Inc., was held yesterday afternoon in Blunt and directors for the ensuing year were elected, three Pierre men, Milo Drake Jack Lockhart, and A W. Ewert, being among the eleven chosen. The other directors chosen, were:

N. P. Wenge, P. D. Foote, John Hols, R. B. Garver, Charles Noland, and H. H. Gregg of Blunt, Mason Samco of Canning and Joe Marso of Harrold. Over 33.000 votes were cast.

It is expected the annual meeting of the board of directors will be held in the near future when officers will be selected for the coming year.

The reports of the officers of the company shows that drilling is still going forward and all interested in the company are increasingly hopeful of a strike and are bound to go down and find out what is below the surface in that part of Hughes county."

LOAN AMENDMENT FIRST

Rural Credits Law Designated As Amendment No. 1

The rural credits amendment to Minnesota's constitution, up for adoption this fall, will appear on the official ballot as Amendment No. 1. This announcement was made Wednesday at St. Paul by Mike Holm, Secretary of State.

Placing the amendment first on the ballot will greatly improve its chances for adoption, according to Harry Edmunds, general manager of the Farmers' Terminal Packing Company and member of the farm organizations' commitee that is sponsoring a state-wide campaign to impress on all voters the importance of favorable action.

"As the campaign progresses," says Mr. Edmunds, "the amendment will become known as 'No. 1.' The popularity of the good roads amendment two years ago, which also was first on the ballot, will be an important factor in overcoming the present danger of indifference. The amendment must be favored by a majority of voters voting to be adopted; hence failure to vote is the same as voting against it.

Being first on the ballot also will help the amendment to adoption because it will get greater consideration in voting booth rushes than if it was second.

Putting On Sale

Mr. O. Munson, the new owner of the former Henry Goergen store, has bills out advertising a cleanup sale at his place of business. Mr. Munson has pared prices to the bone, and is offering some extraordinary bargains. Nothing in the store is reserved; everything is going at prices less than goods were ever offered before.

Spud Growers To Meet

A meeting of the members of the Pennington County Potato Association will be held in the Farm Bureau office at 7:30 P. M. Friday, August 18th. The grades of potatoes will be discussed at this time, also the price paid to pickers, setting a uniform amount per bushel to be paid throughout the county. It will be to the advantage of all members to be present.

C. H. Peterson Is Called

Last Monday at Thief River occured the death of Christian H. Pederson, a pioneer resident of this community and a former resident of this village. Mr. Pederson was ill but a short time before his death.

Deceased was born in Trondbjem, Norway, April 3rd, 1848, and was 74 years, 4 months and 11 days of age at time of death.

He came to this country in 1872, settling at Eau Claire, Wis., where he remained for a number of years. It was in that city he had the misfortune to lose his left leg thru an accident. From Eau Claire he moved to Hillsboro, N. D., and it was there on November 26, 1892 he married his esteemable wife who survives him.

Mr. Pederson and family came to St. Hilaire in 1896 and made this place their home until in 1919 when they moved to Thief River Falls.

Mr. Pederson was a quiet, unassuming man regarded by all as a good neighbor, and valued as a friend. He met with more than his share of misfortune during his eventful life, but he was always cheerful in spite of it all.

To mourn his loss he leaves his widow, two daughters, Mrs. E. M. Sandvold of Ada, and Clara, one sister, Mrs. J. Hovd of Parkland, Wash., and three brothers, Martin, Peter and John of Shelly, Duluth and Cohasset, respectively.

The remains were brought here Tuesday afternoon and funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud from the Norwegian Lutheran church yesterday. Interment was made in the Lutheran cemetery north of town.

Heartfelt sympathy of this community is extended to the bereaved family and other relatives.

Trims Greenbush

The St. Hilaire ball team won from Greenbush in their game played here last Sunday afternoon, by a score of 7 to 2.

The visitors started out with running in two scores, and for a time it looked as tho they were going to hold the game at their figure, but the locals tightened up and begun pounding the pill for safe ones until they had four tallies.

From that point on to the last inning the locals contented themselves with bringing in three more. Due to the high wind, both fielding and pitching was difficult.

The visitors carried a very good battery, and put up a nice, clean game.

THE LOCAL FIELD

Happenings of the Week, Briefly Told

The new concrete walks on Minnesota Avenue are completed, and make a fine improvement for that part of town.

The John Peterson, Martin Peterson and Elias Peterson families motored to Fertile last Sunday to spend the day at the home of E. B. Gustafson.

Harry Jackson, who is employed by the Hardware Specialty Man'fg Co. in St. Paul, arrived Friday to spend a weeks vacation with his parents.

Mrs. Oscar Fellman has bills out for an auction sale of household goods which sale will be held at the section house in south part of town tomorrow afternoon.

Rev. and Mrs. A. F. Nelson and daughter, Gunhild, left Tuesday by car enroute to Cambridge where they will spend a couple weeks at the W. A. Holmstrom home.

Miss Esther Fricker returned Tuesday from Perham, Minn. where she has been visiting for a week with friends at their summer cottage at Little Pine Lake.

A break in a power wire near the transformer station, cut of the current for all motors in town Monday morning. E. F. Wheeler came up and repaired the break.

Edwin Dahl, who has been taking a course in agriculture at the university of Idaho at Moscow, arrived here Tuesday morning to spend a month or more with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Dahl.

Mrs. Ed. Burton and children who have been visiting at the M. Fricker home returned to Thief River Falls, Tuesday. They will visit there a short time before returning to their home at Biggar, Sask. Canada.

Oscar Kolstad who has spent the summer at Spokane, Wash. returned home Tuesday morning. He was injured in an accident at Spokane, and has not yet entirely recovered from its effects although he has spent many weeks in a hospital.

Mrs. Edward Thompson and niece, Myrtle Erikson, of Canby, Minn., left for their home Friday evening, via the Soo, after a brief visit at the home of the former's brother, Carl Johnson, and also with relatives at Thief River Falls.

Coming August 26, "THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS."

George Brink Is Dead

A telegraph dispatch was received here Monday by the Brink family stating that George Brink youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Brink, had passed away at a hotel at Indiana Harbor, Indr., near Chicago.

The young man went to that section of the country a couple years ago as driver of racing cars belonging to parties at Hibbing. While the dispatch did not state the cause of death, it is more than likely an automobile accident was reponsible.

Mauritz Brink, brother of the deceased, left Monday night for Indiana Harbor arriving there late Tuesday night. A message from him late yesterday stated he would arrive in Thief River Falls on the early morning train Friday, but stating nothing as to cause of death.

Mrs. O. W. Brink, who was spending the summer with her sons, Tudy and Elmer, at Jordan, Mont., was notified and arrived here yesterday.

Stock Judging Contest

The Merchant's Association of Thief River Falls will have their second stock judging contest and show on Wednesday, August 23rd at 2:30 in Fisher's barn. On July 19th a dairy calf show and judging of these animals was held. This time the beef raisers and sheep men will have an opportunity to display their stock.

$18,000 SAVED TO CREAMERIES

First 100 Cars Shipped By Ass'n. Proves Value Of Co-operation.

On the first 100 cars of butter marketed by the New York office of the Minnesota Co operative Creameries Association, Inc., net savings were $18,000, according to A. J. McGuire, general manager. This is at the rate of $180 a car.

The saving grew out of the accociation's plan to ship Minnesota's co-operatively-made butter in carload lots instead of part-car consignments. The latter plan was the rule before the association entered the field.

Since June 22, the New York office has been receiving practically all the butter made by member creameries. A large percent of the first 100 cars has been handled during the last two weeks.

"This $18,000 saving," says Mr. McGuire, "is but an indication of what the association will do, as it extends its activities. It, moreover, is dollar and cents proof of the worth of co-operation in marketing dairy products. At present our freight savings are 100 per cent more than the entire cost of running the association.

Mr. McGuire is in Chicago this week, attending a final hearing which he expects will result in still further freight savings. He has been working for some time to obtain additional rate reductions on concentrated shipments.

Married Sunday

Mr. Selmer Rosette and Miss Selma Larson, well known and popular local folks, sprung a surprise on their friends last Sunday by announcing their marriage that day. Mr. and Mrs. Rosette left over the Soo the same evening for Balaton where they will make their home on a farm recently leased by Mr. Rosette.

A host of friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity join in wishing them lifelong happiness and prosperity.

Mrs. Nels Benoit returned last evening from Warren where she recently underwent an operation at the Warren hospital.

Paul Roy is the owner of a new Ford coupe purchased last week from Henry Olsen.

PERHAPS some young men of this community who have refused our good advice will need the advice of Benjamin Franklin. Here is what Benjamin said to the young men: "Save, young men, and become respected and respectable. It is the surest way." The only mistake he made was in not mentioning our bank as the place to begin saving. The fact is, our bank had not started when Franklin made the above remark or he would have told the young men to start a bank account at the

$2,500,000 FAIR PROGRAM READY

Greatest Exposition Ever Staged in World Promised on Sept. 2 to 9.

A score of fairs within a fair—that is what the great Minnesota State Fair, Twin Cities, September 2 to 9, will be this year.

In point of entries and in quality of exhibits, this year's fair will function as an international exhibition. More than 260 acres of exhibits, valued at more than $2,500,000, will be presented by the biggest and best educational fair ever staged in the Northwest.

No other fair or exposition staged in America this year is offering as much money for prizes and premiums as the Minnesota State Fair will pay to winners in the many exhibits and contests on the program. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand, four hundred and forty-nine dollars in prizes is offered by the fair management—about $7,000 more than was offered in 1921, when winners in many contests divided $121,817.00.

A livestock show that will not be excelled anywhere in the country will feature the coming fair. The fair has offered $59,905.00 in premiums for livestock exhibits. The remarkable interest that has been shown in the cattle show this year presages the finest collection of animals that has ever graced a show at the fair. So many entries have been received by the management that the new mammoth cattle barn erected recently at a cost of $500,000.00—and which was thought big enough to take care of the needs of the cattle department for years to come—will prove inadequate to house all of the animals which will be exhibited.

Especially interesting will be the exhibit of dairy cattle. No other industry has enjoyed such wonderful growth in recent years as has dairying. The stocking of farms with purebred dairy cattle has proceeded at so rapid a rate that scrub animals are becoming fewer and fewer on farms throughout the Northwest. That prosperity follows the dairy cow was proved to farmers and breeders many times the past two years, when the Northwest remained one of the most prosperous agricultural sections in the entire country.

Both the swine and the sheep shows will be larger than ever. Nearly 1,000 head of swine will be exhibited for the $7,110.00 in premiums offered. For the sheep contests, the fair is offering $4,470.

The agricultural building, with its inspiring exhibits of grains, grasses and vegetables of all descriptions, will be a veritable paradise to visitors interested in farm crops. Counties of the state will vie with each other in their arrangement of attractive displays from our 1922 "Billion Dollar Harvest." Nearly $20,000.00 in cash prizes will be paid out for winning exhibits.

The thousands of plants and flowers; and heaping displays of fruits and vegetables, will convert the horticultural building into a veritable fairyland. Luscious plums, rosy-cheeked apples, shapely pears and peaches, and delicious strawberries and grapes, will peep out at visitors from long rows of exhibits. Beautiful flowers and shrubs, rich in color and design, will draw out numerous "Ah's" and "Oh's" from passers by.

The greatest barnyard chorus of the year will be heard in the poultry show, where more than 2,000 birds will be shown. The prize winning birds will be given premiums of $2,967.00.

The women will come into their own at the fair. An entire building with an annex has been set aside for exhibits of canning, sewing and baking. Women's exhibits will prove to all that interest in home-making is as great today as fifty years ago, still making it the greatest occupation in the world. Delicious breads and cakes, pies and cookies, canned foods and other home-made products, will be on tempting display. Home needle work of every kind, from fancy work and laces to the most practical sewing and dressmaking, will be a feast for women's souls.

Boys and girls, too, will have exhibits. To them, the fair is to be an "Achievement Week." It will give them a chance to show their parents and friends what they have learned in school, and what they are getting out of their enrollment in Boys' and Girls' Club Work. There will be team demonstrations of all kinds by boys and girls, showing how expert they have become in bread making, in sewing, canning, and in the judging of livestock.

Record Cattle Show at State Fair.

The biggest cattle show ever staged in the middle west will feature the Minnesota State Fair, Twin Cities, September 2 to 9. More than 1,000 head of cattle will be exhibited on the main floor of the $500,000 Cattle Barn. Premiums amounting to [illegible] have been [illegible]

The Better Way To Health

In Andrew Carngie's library is a motto which reads, "He who cannot think is a fool; he who will not is a bigot; he who dare not is a slave."

It is time that people arouse themselves to think on matters of health. Benjamin Franklin knew a thing or two in his day, and he wasn't far off when he said, "He is the best Doctor who knows the worthlessness of most medicine."

What is considered good one day in medicine is declared the next as worthless. It reminds one of the Doctor who said to his patient, "Take this quickly while it is still a cure."

The truth is that HEALTH is a power within you, and it can never be obtained by something from without.

Chiropractic is based on the fundamental truth that the human body has within it everything necessary to maintain health, provided there is an unimpeded flow of nerve force or mental energy from the brain, over the nerves. Disease is caused by an obstruction to the flow of this nerve force. Chiropractic Adustments remove this obstruction, and health is the inevitable result, because the CAUSE has been corrected. Consultation is free—investigate and learn WHY Chiropractic has been accepted as the better way to health.

ON HIS OWN

By RUTH SONG

©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Mrs. Raymond regarded her youngest son with resignation. Yet she felt she would never be resigned to his impossible ways.

"Johnnie," she remonstrated for the third time, "I wish you'd sit straight in your chair and stop finger-combing your hair. You look a fright."

Vaguely, like a sleep-walker, Johnnie smoothed his sandy locks, upstanding by twisting fingers.

His mother sighed, thinking of his two brothers. She never nagged them. Trim and alert they were, both employed in a Boston bank. Such a comfort. As for Johnnie—hopeless! What he did down town where he worked, she couldn't imagine. Even if he emptied waste-baskets or swept floors, someone probably had to remind him, as she was endlessly doing at home.

These thoughts, audibly expressing themselves, urged Johnnie finally to go out, the parting injunction to take the key ringing in his ears.

Mrs. Raymond's taut nerves waited for the slam of the door, in spite of her caution to close it softly, then she settled down to sewing, a habit that had grown through colorless years of widowhood.

Later, the evening was brightened by a neighbor's visit. These friendly chats under the sewing-lamp, were welcome. They meant an unburdening of the day's grievances.

"Do you have to nag your boys endlessly, Mrs. Harst?" She was squinting toward the light in an effort to thread a fine needle with a coarse thread. "My Elmer and Alfred never bother, but Johnnie—" she paused, sighing. The subject engulfed her.

"Your youngest?" the neighbor inquired. "Bad company, maybe."

The mother bristled.

"Oh, no, Johnnie's a good boy. It's his habits. I'm always reminding him—his rubbers, his handkerchief, to wipe his feet—I don't know how he gets on where he works. I don't see him start for he goes early. It's a marvel he wakes up. He'll never amount to shucks."

"I haven't seen him lately," the neighbor temporized. "Where does he work?"

"At Jones, Allan & Company. Lawyers."

"What does he do?"

"Office-boy, I guess. It's all he's fit for. Untidy. Shiftless. Never talks about his work. It's discouraging."

A day or so after, this same neighbor had business in the building where Jones, Allan & Company's offices were. No harm to peek at the youngster for his mother's sake. She didn't remember him, now that he had grown up.

Impressed by the emblazoned door that confronted her from the elevator, she hesitated, looking around in hopes of seeing touseled-headed Johnnie with a waste-basket, or hiding in a corner reading a paper novel.

Seeing no one, she timidly touched the call-bell on the outer door.

With startling alacrity the door swung open, causing her to retreat a step or two, and a tall, straight, keen-eyed young man popped out to demand her business with said Jones, Allan & Company.

So brisk and not-to-be-trifled-with was he, that Mrs. Harst regretted the errand which brought her.

She gasped, speechless, under the disconcerting scrutiny of this young guardian of the law offices.

"I—I beg pardon for disturbing you," she apologized, at a loss how to begin, "but a neighbor of mine has a boy working here. Being in the building I thought I'd drop in and say 'Howdy-do' to him. He wouldn't remember me, I guess, now he's grown big enough to work—"

At her uncertain pause, the young man stepped out, closing the door behind him. He swung a chair under the astonished woman before she had time to see from whence it came. Having thus deposited her safely away from the business entrance, he inquired:

"Can I help you? We have a great many employed here and not everyone is always available. If the boy isn't too busy or isn't needed for the moment, I'm sure he'll be glad to see you. If you'll tell me his name, I'll look him up for you."

Having thus made the inquisitive neighbor feel that business hours were no time for social calls, the formidable medium between Mrs. Harst and her desire stood ready to receive information.

Crushed and ill at ease, she glanced timidly up into the pleasing, although unsmiling, eyes.

"I'm sorry I bothered about it, but now I'm here it can't be helped. If he's busy, never mind. His name is Johnnie Raymond. If it's any trouble"—

For the first time the serious face of the young man broke into a charming smile and his hand went uncertainly up to the sandy hair and came down again without touching it. He bowed rather splendidly.

"You see, it's no trouble at all," he informed her in his crisp, pleasant tones. "I am John Raymond."

Ashes Strewn On Lake

After spending twenty five years as captain on different vessels on the Great Lakes, Captain John Durbin retired from active service to make his home at Thief River Falls where he died last year. Having a fondness for the lakes where he spent the greater part of his life, Captain Durbin made provision in his will that his body be cremated, and his ashes scattered on the waters he loved so well. Last Thursday morning three giant airplanes from Ashburn field near Chicago flew out over Lake Michigan to carry out the last wishes of Captain Durbin. One of the huge machines was piloted by James Curran a lifelong friend of Captain Durbin, and he preformed the last service for his friend from a height of 3000 feet when he threw overboard the little cylinder containing the ashes.

Captain John Durbin was a member of the Masonic fraternity at Thief River Falls, and as such, was known to quite a number of local people.

Legumes Profitable

Farm crops division men at University Farm agree that Minnesota livesock producers should give more attention to the growing of legumes. Soybeans, for instance, are recommended as being good for the soil and the best sort of feed for hogs and sheep. Experiments in the east have shown that dairy cattle relish the beans and give more milk when fed them.

Andrew Boss, vice director of the Minnesota Experiment station, believes that the soy bean is a coming forage crop for Minnesota. It can be grown with the corn crop to the improvement of the corn, the soil and the profit of the grower. Fed with cheap corn, it is a money-maker for the pork producer.

POULTRY FLOCKS

TURKEY EGGS FOR HATCHING

They Should Be Gathered Daily Where There Is Danger of Them Being Destroyed.

When there is danger that turkey eggs may be chilled or destroyed they should be gathered every day, and a nest egg left in each nest. Skunks, opossums, rats, crows, and dogs are the greatest destroyers of turkey eggs, although occasionally minks, raccoons, coyotes, wolves, foxes, cats, and certain large snakes also eat eggs. When a turkey hen has been disturbed by one of these pests, she may change her nest to some other place and abandon the eggs.

Eggs for hatching should be kept at a temperature of as near 50 degrees or 60 degrees F. as possible, and should be turned over every day, say poultry specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture. They should be jarred as little as possible while handling and should be incubated while fresh, never holding more than two weeks if it can be avoided. It is an excellent plan to mark the date on each egg as it is gathered, in order to be certain that no eggs are kept too long before they are incubated.

PRODUCING EGGS IN WINTER

Palatable Mash Can Be Made From Mixture of Bran, Meat Scraps, Oats and Meal.

A palatable mash which should produce winter eggs in a well-bred flock of fowls—kept in light, roomy and sanitary quarters, can be made as follows: One hundred pounds of bran. 100 pounds of gluten meal, 100 pounds of meat scrap, 150 pounds of crushed oats and 150 pounds of cornmeal. Two ounces of this mash with one and one-half ounces of cracked corn, and one-half ounce of whole oats should be fed to each hen daily.

Burglar Alarm Guards Cookies.

The wife of the absent-minded professor was afraid to go out in the afternoon because of the danger that he would not watch the children. While he was in his study they might easily get into mischief. "I knew," she said, that he would never hear them getting into the cupboard where the cookies and jam are kept. And I hate to put things under lock and key. So I had the electrician fix up a burglar alarm on the closet door. If they try to get at the cookies a bell rings up in his study. Then he can come down and stop them."

A Friendly Tip.

A young woman tells of dining out and being seated next to the six-year-old daughter of the house. When her mother left the table for a moment the little one leaned toward their guest and said in a low, admonitory tone, "Now, do be careful, 'cause these are our very best table glasses."—Boston Transcript.

GEORGE BRINK MEETS DEATH IN AUTO CRASH

Gave Life In Heroic Attempt To Warn Other Drivers Of Impending Disaster.

Detailed account of the death of George Brink, brief mention of which was made in this paper last week, was received upon return of relatives from Indiana Harbor last Friday.

George, who left here three years ago, was employed in a garage at Indiana Harbor, and during the racing season drove racing cars at the Roby race course near that city. On Sunday, Aug. 13, he was entered with seven other drivers in a five mile Ford race, George driving a speed car of his own make and design.

It seems George had a comfortable lead over the others and was within 500 feet of the finish line when the steering knuckle of his car broke. He managed to stop the car, and fearing that those coming behind might crash into his machine, he got out of the car to signal them. A cloud of dust raised by two cars passing to one side enveloped him and obscured the view of the oncoming machines. One machine driven by a Chicago man hit the Brink car turning it over and burying the driver in the wreckage. Another car traveling at the rate of seventy miles an hour crashed into the tangled mass.

George had both legs broken and was injured internally, the driver of the third car was badly injured, but the second man was thrown clear and escaped unhurt.

George was rushed to the hospital at Hammond where an operation was performed in an endeavor to save his life, but his injuries were such that surgical aid was of no avail, and he died the following morning just twelve hours after the fatal accident.

One particularly distressing part of the unfortunate occurance was that George was to have been married in a few days to a most esteemable young lady at Indiana Harbor and was expected back here for a visit this week. His fiancee was at the trackside when the fatal accident occured.

George, who was the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Brink, was born here January 17, 1898 and was 24 years and 7 months of age at time of death. His was a likeable nature and he was an especial favorite among

Bumper Oat Crop

The best yield of oats so far reported from any threshing in this vicinity is that from the N. E. Beebe farm east of town. A 49 acre field which had several acres, drowned out last spring by overflow of a small creek running thru it produced over 3300 bushels of oats, or about 72 bushels to the acre. Not only was the yield good but the oats were of excellent quality.

Mr. and Mrs. Axel Westerlund and family, and Leo Carpenter, autoed here Saturday evening from vicinity of Battle Lake for short visits at their homes. They returned Sunday to Battle Lake where the Westerlund family will stay until opening of school here. Messers Weterlund and Carpenter are engaged on some building contracts which will keep them busy until later on in the fall.

SPUD CROP IS DAMAGED

The potato crop which had such a fine start last spring, and on which many growers depended to make a cleanup this year, will not be as large as expected. In many fields a sort of blight has blackened and killed the vines. The leafhopper has caused some damage, but these little pests did not come until too late to do much harm. Some growers report the spuds to be mouldy in the ground, and others have found evidence of dryrot. While the crop in general will be fairly good, returns will not come anywhere near expectations of early summer.

CREDITS SYSTEM NO COST TO TAX-PAYERS

Plan To Be Adopted Will Be Operated Without Expense, Says Reed

State farm loan machinery to be authorized by the Minnesota legislature after Amendment No. 1 (Rural Credits) is adopted on November 7, will be operated without a cent of expense to taxpayers, according to J. F. Reed, chairman of the farmers' committee that is urging favorable action on the amendment.

"While it would be presumptive, as well as unwise, to contemplate the details of leigslative action, there are certain fundamental features that are sure to be included," says Mr. Reed. "One of the most important of these is that tax-payers shall not pay a cent of expense incident to operating the system. In loaning money to farmers the interest rate charged will be just enough higher than that paid on bonds to take care of necessary overhead expense. One-half per cent should be sufficient.

"Another feature that surely will be recognized is an amortization plan for repayment; that is, payments will be extended over a long period—30 to 35 years. Each installment will be for the same amount, to be met annually or semi-annually. Of each such payment a part will go to meet interest charges then due and the remainder will apply on the principal. The older the loan, therefore, the greater will be the payment on principal, so when the term expires the loan is paid automatically.

A Check, Your Receipt

A bank account has many advantages proving an absolute safe place for your money. Your bank deposit book affords a complete record of cash receipts, while the stubs of your check book are a perfect record of expenses and payments. Paying a laborer, store account or any other bill with a bank check is much safer than with money, because you avoid the risk of handling the actual cash and the endorsed check returned by the bank is the best kind of a receipt.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by James O'Brien, a single man, mortgagor, to Northwestern Trust Company, as Trustee under last will and testament of Mary Schroeder, deceased, mortgagee, dated October 5th., 1915, with power of sale, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, November 10th. 1915, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 3 of Mortgages on page 568; which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee, to Northwestern Trust Company, of St. Paul, Minnesota, by written assignment dated March 15th. 1922, recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds June 17th. 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M. in Book 11 of Mortgages on page 624; which default consists in the failure of said mortgagor to pay the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon which became due October 1st. 1920, and which default still continues. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon with interest on both at 5½% per annum since October 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $311.24 taxes paid by the undersigned under the terms of said mortgage on the premises hereinafter described on April 4th. 1922, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since April 4th. 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of Two thousand one hundred forty dollars forty cents ($2,140.40), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by the same, to-wit: Lot Seven (7) of Section Twenty-four (24) and Lots Four, Six, Eight (4, 6, 8,) and the Southeast quarter of the Northwest quarter (SE¼ NW¼) of Section Twenty-five (25) all in Township One hundred fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls in said county and state on, the 9th day of September, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $2,140.40 and interest from date of this notice and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

A Dangerous Place

One place where the slogan "Safety First" could be practiced to a good advantage is at the south bridge across the Red Lake River at this place.

The half circle road at the west approach is hidden behind a dense screen of brush and undergrowth just high enough so a driver coming onto the bridge from this end is unable to see whether he has clear road or not. The east end approach has a brush screen on the south side which cut off view of the road which makes a turn to the south immediately after leaving the bridge. The plank approach on the east end should either be lenghtened out, or a few loads of filling put on top. Anyone traveling faster than five miles an hour over the approach as it now is, is in danger of being thrown out of his machine.

Cutting out the brush and leveling out the approach will cost but a very small sum, and will mean both safety and comfort for all autoists who travel that road.

The coal strike is settled and mining of coal has begun again. While this action is welcome to those who are depending upon the mines product for their winters fuel, it will never replace the millions of dollars lost to the miners in wages since they have been idle, nor will it help industries to regain what they have lost, nor will it help the public in general who will be compelled to pay higher prices than ever for their fuel the coming winter. Unwillingnes on part of the operators and miners to accept a slight reduction from wartime incoms when practically every other industry has been compelled to take it, is the only reason for the present condition of affairs. All that is needed now is to grant the railroad workers all they demand, or else turn the roads over to them, and there will be peace once again, and the farmers can start hauling out their 94 cent wheat and 50 cent rye, which has cost them that much to produce, to pay the bills.

When the producing farmers become organized so they will have some voice as to what their products will sell for, and how they shall be marketed, these strikers will have their choice of either staying on the job or going hungry when they chose to quit work. It's a poor rule that does not work both ways.

The Better Way
To Health

The history of medicine shows that the remedies of one age become discarded the next.

At one time desease was a sure indication of evil spirits within you, to be driven out by charms and incantations. Later you were though to have too much blood, so it was drawn off by leeches and the surgeon's lancet. Still later they dosed you with calomel until toothless and hopeless.

But medical fashions continue to change. Now you may have all your teeth extracted for everthing that ails you. You may have everything cut out that hurts you, as you don't need the organs the Creator gave you anyway. If you are well, you may take serums to keep from getting sick. If you are sick, you may take serums to get well. If you are old, you may take monkey's glands to recover youth. Woderful, isn't it?

But history repeats itself, and as other fads and fancies have passed, so may these fade also.

Conrast medicine with Chiropractic—the release of presure on nerve shutting off the vital power generated in the brain—a power that can and will give heatlh to every organ in your body.

A little thought and investigation will convince you that the principal of Chiropractic is right a principal that has never changed since its discovery. Consultation is free.

THE WRATH AND LOVE OF GOD

By Elgin Halter

Pastor of M. E. Church

"For all this His anger is not turned away. but His hand is stretched out still. Isaiah X:4b.

Although the love of God is the central teaching of Jesus and according to him, the highest attribute of God, yet we must not forget that Jesus' message also contains impressive warnings of the terrible reality of God's judgments. (Lul 3:3-5; Mt. 25:30, 41; Luke: 12:5)

In the appeal made today for people to come to God and be saved, the emotion of love rather than fear is induced, the love of the father for his prodigal son, the love of Christ on the Cross, the picture of God stretching out his arms to the sinner. The tendency is to so over emphasize the love of God as to create the impression that God is a sort of good natured papa, easy going and indulgent toward men's sins. The result is that men lose their sense of the awfulness of sin, which is the message of the Cross and a necessary factor in a saving gospel.

Let us not think that the wrath of God is antithetic to his qualities of love and mercy. Rather it is complementary. God is Righteous and Holy. He has revealed his moral and ethical nature to us in Christ Jesus, and also his will for us. Naturally therefore, God reacts against and repudiates all what is unrighteous and unholy in us, his creatures. This disposition against sin is the anger or wrath of God. It is fierce and terrible, tho always just; provoked by moral causes for moral ends, while at the same time his hand of love is still stretched out to us.

Card Of Thanks

We hereby wish to extend our heartiest thanks to the friends who so kindly assisted us at the funeral of our beloved husband and father. To those who decorated the church, to those who sang so beautifully, and to those who otherwise showed their sympathy in our bereavement.

A Lesson From the Ads.

The charm of color in advertisements makes one realize that the simple everyday recipes can be more tempting if placed in dishes of attractively contrasting colors and the table arranged in varying styles with fruit or a vase of flowers for a centerpiece. Not only do the colored advertisements tempt the eye, but one can learn innumerable new household and cookery ways and means from them.—American Cookery.

Ever Try This One?

A Frenchman has suggested that with a little training the soldier may be amphibious to a certain degree. It is contended that with practice a body of soldiers with their arms and accoutrements could walk across a stream 90 feet wide by merely walking across on the bottom with the water over their heads.—Granite State News.

Havana tobacco is the most delicate and sensitive of any tobacco grown. You can test this by subjecting a box of Havana cigars to extremes of heat or cold, moisture or dryness. The best temperature for Havana cigars is 60 degrees Fahrenheit. You may get a box of a good brand and find it a failure. But before you condemn the brand be sure that it is not the fault of the dealer, says a tobacco expert.

State High On Road List

Minnesota Makes Favorable Showing In Government Highway Figures

Minnesota under the so-called Babcock good roads plan is carrying on federal aid highway improvements more than double in number and covering nearly five times the mileage of the average for the United States, according to a recent bulletin from the government bureau of public roads. The figures supplement the report giving Minnesota first place among the states for the longest mileage of completed federal aid highways and indicated that this state is putting funds on the road as fast as they come in.

Minnesota's excellent showing is in spite of the larger funds provided through bid bond issues and in other ways by various states to advance highway depvelopment.

This state is credited by the bureau of public roads with 110 jobs on which federal aid is being used, compared with 50 projcets in the average state.

Minnesota's improvements under way cover 1,145 miles aginst the 280-mile average for all the states. Projects average 10.4 miles in this state and 5.5 miles in others.

Cash outlay comparisons disclose that Minnesota is not extravagant in building roads. Its average aid project now totals $95,289 of which 39 per cent or $36,925 is government money, while the average satae job total is $10,326 including 42 per cent or $42,615 of federal aid. Again, Minnesota is using $9,150 a mile agaınt 18,050 or nearly twice a much for the general average among the states.

the young folks in this community where he grew to manhood. During the latter part of the World War he was in the army, being stationed at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

Deceased is survived by his father and mother, one sister and five brothers. His sister, Eda, who is in California, and two brothers, Tudy and Elmer, who are in Montana, were unable to be present at the funeral.

After arrival at Indiana Harbor of Mr. and Mrs. Mauritz Brink, who went down immediately upon receipt of the message conveying news of the accident, funeral services were conducted at that place after which the remains were shipped here, arriving Friday morning.

Funeral services were conducted in the local Swedish Lutheran church Friday evening at 6:30 by Rev. Albin Larson of Thief River Falls. Members of the American Legion acted as pallbearers and honory escort. The profusion of flowers with which the bier was fairly covered showing the esteem in which the deceased was held here.

After service a funeral cortege of over fifty cars was formed which followed the remains to the cemetery east of town where a firing squad gave the customary three vollleys over the grave, and a bugler sounded "Taps" after which the remains were lowered to their last resting place to await the Awakening when there shall be no more sorrow or parting.

Heartfelt sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved relatives and friends in their dark hour of sorrow.

LOCAL SCHOOL NOW ACCREDITED

Application Of Local Board Granted By State Board Of Education.

At the annual meeting of the State Board of Education, held August 1st., the application of the local school for classification as a high school department, was acted upon and the application granted. This means that the high school department of St. Hilaire school is accredited at the University of Minnesota and Colleges of the State. This gives duly accredited graduates of the local school the priviledge of entering the University and the Colleges without examination. This action places the local high school department on the same status as any other high school in the state, except that this district does not draw the extra state aid allowed duly accredited high schools because the valuation of this district does not reach the total required for such special aid. Hereafter a graduate of the St. Hilaire high school will have exactly the same status in applying for admission to the University as the graduate of any other high school in the state.

Local merchants have received shipments of especially fine fruits this week. The price is exeptionally low considering the early season, and quality of the fruit.

Harvesting of potato crop will be under way within a week in this vicinity. The crop at the Satre farm north of town was dug and marketed last week.

With another week of good weather, threshing will be about finised in this locality There is still a small acreage of flax and buckwheat still uncut.

Mrs. Weston, who has spent the summer here at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. N. Bjerken, left last week-end for her home at Red Wing.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bothmann are the proud parents of a baby son, born Tuesday.

Soft Coal Mining Starts

With settlement of the strike of soft coal miners last week mining of that commodity was resumed in practically all eastern fields. Coal is now moving to the docks at Duluth, though not in quantity sufficient to guarantee against a coal shortage. Soft coal will be available by September 15th, but it is not likely there will be any hard coal until later on in the fall.

Sneak thieves got away with several articles of wearing apparel from the O. T. Munson store between Saturday night and Sunday morning last. It is presumed that the thieves got in thru the front door on which the snap lock had failed to catch when the store was closed Saturday night because there is no evidence that entrance was gained by force.

Wide or narrow pencil tablets, composition books, drawing tablets, note books smooth paper tabets, all with the picture of the school on the cover, are a nickle each at the Spectator office.

POTATO ASS'N. HOLDS MEETING

Grading Of This Season's Potatoes For Market Discussed.

The Pennington County Potato Association held a meeting in the Commercial Club rooms Friday evening, at 7:30. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the grading of potatoes for the market this season. Due to the large surplus of potatoes this year the different grades call for a better potato than formerly.

The growers also passed a recommendation on the price of picking potatoes per basket. It was the opinion expressed that where the field yielded 200 buhels the picker should receive 3c per basket, where they yielded 150 bushels, 3½c, 100 bushels or less 4c. In each case the laborer furnishing his own meals, unless the grower so desires to make it differently. This schedule would necessarily be changed where pickers work by the day or where they stay on the farm continually, but the above will be a basis on which all growers can work.

Following up the meeting of Friday night the State department of Agriculture held a grading school in Thief River Falls, on Tuesday, August 22, for the benefit of Northwestern Minnesota. Representatives of Kittson, Roseau, Marshall, Pennington and Red Lake counties were present.

Mr. E. W. Smith, representing the Extension Division of the University of Minnesota, opened the program by telling the importance this year of grading potatoes very closely stating that any grower shipping inferior potatoes will only have to pay a bill for the freight. According to the closest estimate there is a large surplus of potatoes in the Northwest this year. This will make it necessary to ship only U. S. No. 1. These according to Mr. Smith must consist of potatoes similar varietal characteristics which are not badly misshappen which are free from freezing injury and soft rot, and from damage caused by dirt or other foreign matter, sunburn, second growth, growth cracks hollow-heart, cuts, scab, blight, dry rot, disease, insects, or mechanical or other means. The diameter of potatoes of round varieties shall be not less than 1⅞ inches and of potatoes of long varieties 1¾ inches.

In order to allow for variations incident to proper grading and hand-

A Check, Your Receipt

A bank account has many advantages proving an absolute safe place for your money. Your bank deposit book affords a complete record of cash receipts, while the stubs of your check book are a perfect record of expenses and payments. Paying a laborer, store account or any other bill with a bank check is much safer than with money, because you avoid the risk of handling the actual cash and the endorsed check returned by the bank is the best kind of a receipt.

The Better Way To Health

The history of medicine shows that the remedies of one age become discarded the next.

At one time disease was a sure indication of evil spirits within you, to be driven out by charms and incantations. Later you were though to have too much blood, so it was drawn off by leeches and the surgeon's lancet. Still later they dosed you with calomel until toothless and hopeless.

But medical fashions continue to change. Now you may have all your teeth extracted for everthing that ails you. You may have everything cut out that hurts you, as you don't need the organs the Creator gave you anyway. If you are well, you may take serums to keep from getting sick. If you are sick, you may take serums to get well. If you are old, you may take monkey's glands to recover youth. Woderful, isn't it?

But history repeats itself, and as other fads and fancies have passed, so may these fade also.

Conrast medicine with Chiropractic—the release of presure on nerve shutting off the vital power generated in the brain—a power that can and will give health to every organ in your body.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by James O'Brien, a single man, mortgagor, to Northwestern Trust Company, as Trustee under last will and testament of Mary Schroeder, deceased, mortgagee, dated October 5th., 1915, with power of sale, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, November 10th. 1915, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 3 of Mortgages on page 568; which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee, to Northwestern Trust Company, of St. Paul, Minnesota, by written assignment dated March 15th. 1922, recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds June 17th. 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M. in Book 11 of Mortgages on page 624; which default consists in the failure of said mortgagor to pay the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon which became due October 1st. 1920, and which default still continues. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon with interest on both at 5½% per annum since October 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $311.24 taxes paid by the undersigned under the terms of said mortgage on the premises hereinafter described on April 4th. 1922, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since April 4th. 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of Two thousand one hundred forty dollars forty cents ($2,140.40), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by the same, to-wit: Lot Seven (7) of Section Twenty-four (24) and Lots Four, Six, Eight (4, 6, 8,) and the Southeast quarter of the Northwest quarter (SE¼ NW¼) of Section Twenty-five (25) all in Township One hundred fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 9th day of September, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $2,140.40 and interest from date of this notice and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

LEGAL NOTICES

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by James O'Brien, a single man, mortgagor, to Northwestern Trust Company, as Trustee under last will and testament of Mary Schroeder, deceased, mortgagee, dated October 5th., 1915, with power of sale, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, November 10th. 1915, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 3 of Mortgages on page 568; which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Northwestern Trust Company, Trustee, to Northwestern Trust Company, of St. Paul, Minnesota, by written assignment dated March 15th. 1922, recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds June 17th. 1922, at 8 o'clock A. M. in Book 11 of Mortgages on page 624; which default consists in the failure of said mortgagor to pay the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon which became due October 1st. 1920, and which default still continues. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sums of $1600.00 principal and $58.66 interest coupon with interest on both at 5½% per annum since October 1st. 1920, and the further sum of $311.24 taxes paid by the undersigned under the terms of said mortgage on the premises hereinafter described on April 4th. 1922, with interest thereon at 6% per annum since April 4th. 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of Two thousand one hundred forty dollars forty cents ($2,140.40), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by the same, to-wit: Lot Seven (7) of Section Twenty-four (24) and Lots Four, Six, Eight (4, 6, 8,) and the Southeast quarter of the Northwest quarter (SE¼ NW¼) of Section Twenty-five (25) all in Township One hundred fifty-three (153) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County at the front door of the court-house in the city of Thief River Falls in said county and state on the 9th day of September, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $2,140.40 and interest from date of this notice and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

MAN OF INFINITE RESOURCE

Washington Official Would Seem to Be Especially Fitted for High Diplomatic Post.

Capt. David S. Barry, Jr., who is in charge of the marines guarding the mail of the country, is a resourceful man. He has been all over the world, stood on the great wall of China, explored the mystic isles of the South seas, and now he sits at a desk in the Postoffice department.

The other day two young women called at the department. They were on a sightseeing tour and wanted to go over the department. Some one thought it would be a good joke to play on Barry, so the two young ladies were introduced to him.

"We would like to see the postmaster general's room," said one of the young women with a smile.

Barry disappeared into an inner office, soon to return.

"I'm sorry," he replied, with his best smile, "the postmaster general is in his office now."

The young woman smiled sweetly.

"We would like to see the postmaster general," she said.

Captain Barry did his disappearing act again, but soon returned.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "the postmaster general is out now."—Washington Star.

Your Duty Is Done.

What I must do, is all that concerns me, not what the people think. This rule, equally arduous in actual and in intellectual life, may serve for the whole distinction between greatness and meanness. It is the harder because you will always find those who think they know what is your duty better than you know it. It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after your own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.—Emerson.

Asthma From Animals.

It has been found that asthma is often caused by inhaling particles of the hair of animals, particularly that of the horse, the cat, and the dog, and, above all, of the pet dog that sleeps on the bed. Chicken feathers also cause the disease. There are many other factors in the production of asthmatic attacks, but the first step in curing the disease is to avoid the source. If the cat or the dog is to blame, then these animals should be kept out of the house.

Stair Climbing for Fat Men.

"Elevators are doing much to spoil the figures of residents of cities," declared an elderly southerner, according to the New York Sun. "If all the mechanical devices for dodging stairways could be put out of commission for even a week, waistlines would be reduced 10 per cent." "But think of the strain on their tempers," suggested a listener. "There is something to that," assented the other. "Perhaps it would be just as well and less radical to bar riding of less than three floors for a time and gradually increase the number. It provokes me to see a fat man, a man who cannot sit up straight and see within two yards of his feet, wait two minutes for an elevator to take him up or down one floor."

Pictures and Frames.

Those old picture frames that go begging around the attic or cellar may be made into some of the delightful new models with little trouble and less expense. Old white enamel or oak frames may be treated as follows: With a bit of glass carefully scrape off all the enamel or polish. Sandpaper it to a smooth finish with a coarse sandpaper and later with a finer grade. For a soft brown print the frame will be just right at this stage. Some of the newest picture frames that are finding place in the best shops show no stain or color of any kind. Artists claim that the decorative frame detracts from the beauty of the picture [illegible] ling not more than 5 per cent, by weight, of any lot may be below the prescribed size, and, in addition, no more than 6 percent, by weight, may below the remaining requirements of this grade, but not to exceed one-third of this 6 per cent tolerance shall be allowed for potatoes affected by soft rot.

U. S. NO. 1 SMALL

U. S. No. 1 Small shall consist of potatoes ranging in size from 1½ inches to 1⅞ inches in diameter but meeting all other requirements of U. S. No. 1.

In order to allow for variations incident to proper grading and handling not more than 25 per cent, by weight, of any lot may vary from the prescribed size, but not to exceed one-fifth of his tolerance shall be allowed for potatoes under 1½ inches in diameter. In addition not more than 6 per cent, by weight, may be below the remaining requirements of this grade, but not to exceed one-third of this 6 per cent tolerance shall be allowed for potatoes affected by soft rot.

Pennington County growers were told that some of the best tubers in the state were shipped from Thief River Falls last year and firms in St. Louis in ordering potatoes stated that they wanted another carload from Thief River Falls or no shipment at all. Henry Oen, Jens Letnes and Halvor Fosted brought in samples to be graded. These were of excellent quality and were classed by Mr. Smith as premium potatoes. This grade must consist of potatoes of one variety which are mature, bright, well shaped, free from freezing injury, soft rot, dirt or other foreign matter, sunburn, second growth, growth cracks, hollow heart, cuts, scab, blight, dry rot, disease, insect or mechanical injury, and other defects. The range in size shall be stated in terms of minimum and maximum diameters or weight following the grade name, but in no case shall the diameter be less than 2 inches.

In order to allow for variations incident to proper grading and handling, no more than 5 per cent, by weight, of any lot may vary from the range and size stated and, in addition, not more than 6 per cent, by weight, of any lot may be below the remaining requirements of this grade, but not to exceed one-third of this 6 per cent tolerance shall be allowed for potatoes affected by soft rot.

Mr. R. F. Hall, Chief inspector of the department of agriculture, was next on the program, emphasizing Mr. Smith's statements in regard to the grading and giving the feeding value of the poor potato, rather than shipping them down to the southern markets where some of them could never be sold and a large freight bill would have to be paid regardless of the grade. Mr. Hall explained the work of the department of agriculture in having State inspection. He claimed that this inspection would stand in all courts of the United States, citing several instances where the purchaser had to live up to the grade delivered to him. The State Department would if necessary place a State Inspector in Thief River Falls as the number of cars shipped from that place would pay the expense of having such inspection. At the close of Mr. Hall's talk the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved: That it be the census of opinion, that all present, grade potatoes shipped strictly up to U. S. No. 1 standard, in order to insure the same prestige for the potato shippers that the American Fruit Growers receive for their product by marketing only No. 1 fruit. Further be it resolved that the members present would call for state inspection and that an effort would be made to secure an inspector for each county in the valley.

Poultry Week Sept. 18-25

The directors of the Pennington County Poultry Association have placed the date of "Poultry Week" from September 18th to 25th. The first meeting will be held on Monday evening, September 18th, in Valhall hall; Tuesday afternoon a demonstration on a poultry farm in Goodridge and a meeting the same evening: Wednesday afternoon a demonstration on a farm near St. Hilaire and a meeting in St. Hilaire during the evening; Thursday, Mr. Stanfield will talk at the Commercial Club noonday luncheon and at the chicken supper Thursday evening; Friday, Sept. 22nd a demonstration will be given on a farm near Rosewood and a meeting in Rosewood in the evening; Saturday afternoon a demonstration in Silverton and a meeting in the Silverton town hall in the evening.

It was decided to hold the annual chicken supper on Thursday evening, Sept. 21st, in the basement of the Zion Lutheran church. The members named on the committee to make arrangements for this banquet are Harry Schuster, Mrs. Ed. Battenfeldt and C. M. Buoen. Poultry breeders will donate one or two birds, the same as previous years, to be used at the banquet

The dates for the annual poultry show were set for Dec. 12th, 13th and 14th, with the 11th as entry day and up to noon of the 12th

Rural Credit Act Sponsored

Minnesota voters this year will have the unusual experience of passing judgment on a measure that is sponsored by every political party in the state.

This measure is a constitutional amendment, which comes up at the general election on Nov. 7. Amendment No 1, the rural credits amendment, has the outspoken endorsement of every party. The platforms of the Republican, Democratic and Farm-Labor parties approve it in unmistakable terms. Politics play no part in the campaign now under way in Minnesota to obtain passage of the amendment.

Leaders in the campaign for the amendment are emphasizing that the measure is designed to develop the prosperity of the whole state, without one cent of cost to the tax payers.

The St. Hilaire Y. P. S. of the Swedish Mission church will meet at the John Peterson home west of town, Saturday evening, September 9th. Rev. Brodin will speak.

Misses Mabel Loberg, Gladys Gigstad and Gertrude Blaska left Monday for Moorhead where they will attend the state Teachers' College.

Wins Prize

Orton Olson of Thief River Falls, who won first and sweep stakes on his sample of wheat at the Crookston Farm Crop Show at Crookston last year has won a much greater prize at the Central Fair and Exposition held in Aurora, Illinois. Orton received a blue ribbon on his sample with a statement enclosed which entitles him to $65.00. This fair includes all the states in the Central and northern United States with much competition in all lines and grains.

Mr. Olson will ship his sample from Aurora to other state fairs including Minnesota and Wisconsin. Having won at the largest exposition should make it easy for him to draw first place at the others.

School Opened Tuesday

The local school reopened Tuesday morning after the annual summer vacation. Exceptionally good enrollment is reported in all grade rooms as well as in the high school department. While a number of those who attended the latter division last year will not attend this season, a number of new scholars are enrolled making the number about equal with that of last year. With several who are employed now and who will join later, the high school enrollment will be the largest in history of the school.

The ball team autoed over to East Grand Forks last Sunday to take on the fast aggregation there for an afternoon game. The boys seem inclined to blame the umpire for result of the game which was 6 to 0 in favor of East Grand Forks. After the game an agreement was reached to play another game Labor Day. The locals with re-inforcements, went over Monday and took the East Grand Forks bunch into camp by a score of 3 to 0. As this makes two games each for the teams, they are planning on having another contest at the Forks perhaps next Sunday.

Mrs. A. Simonson Passes

Mrs. Andrew Simonson passed away at her home south of town last Saturday morning after an illness of three weeks which was brot on by an attack of influenza suffered last spring.

Mrs. Simonson was born in Norway and was 68 years, 1 month and 17 days of age at the time of her death.

After her marriage to Mr. Simonson, who preceeded her in death five years ago, the family made their home in Ottertail County until they moved here in the fall of 1899.

She was regarded as a good neighbor and friend, and was held in high esteem by all who had her acquaintance. To mourn the loss of of a kind and devoted mother, she leaves one son and six daughters. The children are: Henry, Julia, Gunda, Alma, all at home, and Mrs. O K. Sevre and Mrs. Fred Leach who reside in this community. Mrs. Simonson's aged father and mother also survive her, they residing at Pelican Rapids.

Funeral serices were conducted by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud from the famliy home Sunday afternoon, and interment was made beside the remains of the late Mr. Simonson in the Swedish Lutheran cemetery east of town.

Heartfelt sympathy of many friends is extended to the bereaved family in their time of sorrow.

After spending a year here at the home of her aunt, Mrs. R. Stephenson, and graduating from the local high school last June, Miss Blanche Robson left Saturday for her home at Mossy Creek, Virginia. A Check, Your Receipt

A bank account has many advantages proving an absolute safe place for your money. Your bank deposit book affords a complete record of cash receipts, while the stubs of your check book are a perfect record of expenses and payments. Paying a laborer, store account or any other bill with a bank check is much safer than with money, because you avoid the risk of handling the actual cash and the endorsed check returned by the bank is the best kind of a receipt.

Pay the Printer

The Strathcona Star which started out with good prospects twenty months ago, sung its "swan song" with the issue of this week Lack of support, and failure of the readers to pay their bills, is reason for suspension. The public has long been accustomed to believe a newspaper can exist whether it receives any patronage or not. Many people seem inclined to put subscription accounts at the foot of the list when paying bills.

There is no business that operates on a smaller margin than the publishing business. Bills for paper, fuel, machinery, labor, rent and other items has to be met promptly at the end of every month by the newspaper publisher in order to keep his credit in working order. It takes real money, and not a little of it, to run even a country newspaper. There is no mystery whatever about the business Advertising space and subscriptons are the only two articles of stock in trade. With income from these two, the publisher expects to meet his bills.

In practically every country shop one can hear the same story. "If we would get in what we have coming we could pay our bills." The Spectator, in common with many other papers, has extended credit to the extent of many hundreds of dollars to its subscribers, and is looking forward to the time when this comes in. If you who read this, are in arrears for subscription or other account, you will earn our everlasting gratitude by paying us so we can pay those we owe.

A Weak Policy

A settlement has been effected in both branches of the coal mining industry in which strikes have existed since early last spring. At present the country is facing a breakdown in transportation due to a strike of railway workers. Had the present administration perused a firm policy regarding the rail strike instead of trying to curry favor from both sides in this controversy, crops would be moving now and fuel would be assured the people of this section of the country.

Just why it should be any more impossibe to settle the railway strike than the mine strike, is a mystery. Being as the public always foot the bills for freight and fuel, it seems they ought to have a voice in the matter. If, as the railway operators claim, it is only a matter of a few cents an hour more wages for the workers, why not give it to them? Why should the entire country become demoralized and people be compelled to suffer by reason of this wage dispute when the public pays the bills no matter which way the strike eventually turns out?

Had the present administration been half as much concernd about the welfare of the people in general as it is about political power, there would be no cause for the numerous complaints so generally voiced at present.

THE BEAST

By ADELAIDE BROWN

©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Dusk softened the outlines of the sordid mill town; vague lights pricked the darkness here and there like dim fireflies. The dreary, dusty little city became, for the moment, austerely beautiful. Dusk deepened also in the "third-floor-back" of Mrs. Gammage's third-rate rooming house. In the room a girl sat crouching in a broken chair and shivering in spite of the heat. The shiver came because for the first time in her eighteen sheltered, coddled years, Betty Martin sensed the approach of a Beast. The name of the Beast was Fear.

It all came about because John Martin had a flash-in-the-pan temper, because Betty had inherited the same—and most of all because a quiet mother rested in a quiet grave on the hillside with only clumps of pale harebells for company. Had she been with them it never would have happened.

Seventeen years and eleven months of having one's own petted, pampered way does not, somehow, prepare one for a father's apoplectic rage and harsh sundering of love's young dream. To Betty, the young man in question seemed passing fair, but not to be taken seriously—oh, no, not yet!—until that same father's foot was put down with thunderous emphasis. Then—well then, daddy had ordered her, mind you—and Betty's quivering lips straightened in the darkness as she lived it over for the two hundredth time—to choose between Billy Devine and getting out to earn her own living, or being a nice and obedient little girl. Betty got out. Betty also left behind the check for $300 which her father had deposited stealthily on her dresser.

With the change she had on hand, Betty started out for the nearest city, head held high and courage in her heart. Two weeks later, as she sat in her stuffy little room, her courage had evaporated her heart (she thought) was broken, but her pride still held. Sixty-seven cents and her landlady had ordered her out of the house with one week's rent unpaid. For Betty had not yet learned a single move in the grand game of bluff. After all, she was only a child.

She did not know how to get work. She did not know of "uncle" who would have cheerfully advanced her $50 on her rings. She did not know why Mrs. Gammage eyed these same rings and her beautiful clothing so queerly; she did not know that this same girlish finery had already "queered" several jobs for her; she did not know where to go to find kind hearts. In fact, the only things she knew how to do well were to make delicious fudge and wheedle checks out of daddy. But go back to him? Not she. She'd spend the night on the park bench first—which she proceeded to do.

Policemen were few and far between in this little town, so no one said her nay when she dragged herself and her suitcase to a bench in a dark corner of the park. She had decided to go without supper. The town clock struck nine. The town clock struck ten, and with each succeeding hour it seemed to boom more solemnly. She crouched closer to the friendly shadow. Fear, the Beast, crouched beside her. Would—would daddy find her starved body hid away in some park corner? How long did one live without eating? Was it very painful to die that way? Eleven o'clock, and how tired and—hun-g-r-y she was! Footsteps sounder on the nearest path and she held her breath. A man, alone, walked past. She could not know that he was the kindhearted father of four girls. So the Beast, snarling a bit now, drew a step closer. Suppose, in the middle of the night, some man should come—! She stilled a scream with both hands pressed against her lips. She lived a year for every hour of that slow-passing night.

And for exactly thirteen days and ten hours, John Martin had been tearing his hair and rushing frantically from one city to another, from police station to police station. He had come home to lunch, with a peace-offering under his arm, to find Betty gone and the check where he had left it. And from that moment peace knew him no more.

As a last resort, he had come to the little city nearest home (for he had felt sure that Betty would feel the lure of distance) and he had spent two days tracing Betty to Mrs. Gammage's rooming house. That evening he had said things—terrible things—to Mrs. Gammage which that worthy was never to forget. Then he hunted the streets, the lodging houses, the hospital, the morgue, hour by hour, aided by a corps of detectives.

By one o'clock Betty had fallen into an uneasy doze. Her handbag dropped to the pebbled walk with a thud. A furtive shadow slipped nearer, grinned wolfishly as he laid a possessive hand upon Betty's arm. The breath of the Beast fanned the girl's white, terror-stricken face. No escape? The kindly gleams of searchlights dotted through the park and—

"Daddy!" One choked cry.

The Beast, snarling viciously, slunk into the shrubbery. But the shadow of the shadow of Fear never quite left the soul of Betty.

MAN OF INFINITE RESOURCE

Washington Official Would Seem to Be Especially Fitted for High Diplomatic Post.

Capt. David S. Barry, Jr., who is in charge of the marines guarding the mail of the country, is a resourceful man. He has been all over the world, stood on the great wall of China, explored the mystic isles of the South seas, and now he sits at a desk in the Postoffice department.

The other day two young women called at the department. They were on a sightseeing tour and wanted to go over the department. Some one thought it would be a good joke to play on Barry, so the two young ladies were introduced to him.

"We would like to see the postmaster general's room," said one of the young women with a smile.

Barry disappeared into an inner office, soon to return.

"I'm sorry," he replied, with his best smile, "the postmaster general is in his office now."

The young woman smiled sweetly. "We would like to see the postmaster general," she said.

Captain Barry did his disappearing act again, but soon returned.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "the postmaster general is out now."—Washington Star.

HAS JOB AS AID TO CUPID

New York Youngster Directs Young Couples How to Reach the Desired Marriage Bureau.

New York is renowned for the large number of unique jobs some of its residents have found for themselves, but here is one job that bids fair to outshine most of the others as regards quaintness. To a Bronx lad of about ten goes the honor for discovering this latest method of gathering the coin of the realm.

This youngster stations himself at the entrance to the Bronx borough hall, at the northwest corner of Crotona park, and waits patiently about for the appearance of young couples. As soon as he spots a couple he approaches and announces "Up one flight." Invariably the shy young man and bashful young lady break out into smiles and the former removes a coin from an openhearted pocketbook and hands it to the youthful Wallingford.

The Bronx marriage license bureau is "up one flight."—New York Sun.

What Makes You Shiver?

Just as heat leads to a feeling of drowsiness, cold has the effect of exciting and disturbing the nervous system. The muscles which move various parts of the body are acted upon in such a way that they cause the limbs to vibrate, and this, repeated many times, produces the sensation which we recognize as a "shiver." This is really a mild variety of spasm caused by the cold, in much the same way that some poisons produce muscular spasms which cannot be controlled. Like most things which are perfectly natural, shivering produced by cold has its useful function, for it warns us that it is time for us to do something to restore the normal amount of heat, lest we "catch cold" or are affected in some other way by the unusual absence of warmth.

One authority concludes, in a study of the conditions of life in the sea, that fishing operations as at present conducted, appreciably diminish the stock of fish on the sea bottom. He also regards it as proved that there is a greater productivity of ocean life in high than in low latitudes. To explain this, he presents the suggestion of Putter that animals inhabiting warm waters live faster than those inhabiting cold water, and so consume more food, and since the food supply is everywhere limited, a less numerous population can be maintained in the warmer than in the colder seas.—Washington Star.

Damage Done by Wild Beasts.

Wolves are the chief offenders in doing injury to herds and flocks, though the coyote is a good second. The damage inflicted by single specimens of the wolf tribe is surprising. The famous Custer wolf that operated in the vicinity of Custer, South Dakota, for six or seven years, killed $25,000 worth of cattle and escaped for many years, though there was a bounty of $500 on his head. A pack of eight wolves destroyed $20,000 worth of calves, pigs and sheep in and around the Arkansas national forest.

Misses Sylvis and Wildavine Denhart and brother, Virgil, left Monday for Thief River where they have enrolled in the high school for the coming term.

HILDA SANDBERG DIES

Hilda, the twelve year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Sandberg, passed away Monday evening at seven o'clock, at the family home, after a lingering illness of five months duration. She was taken to the Thief River hospital last spring for an operation of an infection of the knee, and it seemed for a time that she was well on the road to recovery when cancer of the bone set it, and that, together with pneumonia, finally resulted in her death.

She was always of a cheerful and smiling disposition, and will be sadly missed in the home by her parents, sisters and brothers, as well as by her little friends and school mates.

To mourn her departure are her parents, six sisters and eight brothers.

Funeral services will be conducted from the home at 1 o'clock and from the Swedish Lutheran church at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

Heartfelt sympathy of the community is extended to the grief stricken family.

MARVELLO-US!

By EDITH ROBERTS

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Rebellion smoldered in Sibyl Graves' pretty brown eyes as she looked across the breakfast table at her husband.

"We may as well understand each other once and for all, George," she announced. "I have no intention of resigning from the club. I get a great deal of enjoyment and knowledge from it. You just don't understand. We have some very fine members."

George Graves smiled indulgently, at the same time consulting his watch.

"Sibyl," he said impressively, "you're far too sensible to be interested in such things as ouija boards, fortune tellers and trance mediums. They are all fakes, I tell you—what if they do tell you something that happens to be correct? They're liable to tell you ten things that are not. Why, since you've joined that queer club along with Mrs. Ray and the rest of those occult chasers, you're a bundle of nerves. But suit yourself. I just want to tell you one thing. I'm tired of sitting home here alone two evenings while you attend those meetings."

He had hardly departed for business when the telephone bell summoned Sibyl. It was Mrs. Ray.

"My dear," she gushed, "a friend of mine called me up to tell me about this wonderful mystic that is appearing at the Lyceum this week. She says he is positively uncanny. A crystal gazer—Hindu, I believe. I thought perhaps you might like to go this evening."

"I'd love to," confessed Sibyl, "but I really don't see how I can. George would be furious. He dislikes those things so."

"Hm," remarked Mrs. Ray, significantly, "sometimes men take that attitude because they are afraid certain things in their own behavior will come to light—but of course, with George it is just prejudice, I'm sure," she ended sweetly.

The following afternoon, Sibyl was ushered to a seat in the third row of the darkened theater, just before the mystic act came on. The strains of the music were hushed, as the curtain slowly ascended, disclosing a most attractive stage setting.

Amid a dense silence, Marvello entered from the right wing.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced, "my assistants will now pass through the audience, distributing cards upon which you may write your questions."

Almost before she realized it, Sibyl had stretched out her hand and received a card from one of the youths. Pressed for time, she had no opportunity to ponder about what to ask. Hurriedly she wrote, "Is my husband true?" The card was almost immediately collected and the attendants returned to the stage, placing the cards on a table.

Marvello lifted his crystal into the air before him. The audience was hushed.

"There is a lady here tonight who asks me if her husband is fickle. I would say to that lady—Madame your husband spends much of his time with a person more blonde than yourself."

Breakfast in the Graves household next morning was an uncomfortable event for George Graves. In answer to his wife's accusations, he at first ridiculed, then reasoned, then swore.

The arrival of Sibyl's young brother Harry at this point, enforced an armistice for the sake of appearances, and Sibyl gave more attention to her brother's juvenile chatter than usual.

"Gosh, I'm tired," ejaculated Harry, helping himself to some coffee.

"What have you been doing with yourself all week?" asked his sister.

"Well," said Harry, putting down his cup and mutely commanding their undivided attention. "You know, of course, that Chet Stone's father manages the Lyceum. Well, Mr. Stone has been away and left Chet in charge. They had a mystic down there this week—and right in the middle of the week, he got sick. Chet's always been a bear in theatricals so he just borrowed Marvello's stuff and did his act for him. Yesterday afternoon and evening he got by finely. I've had to be his maid, and doll him up."

Sibyl and George exchanged glances of astonishment.

"But I don't understand," faltered Sibyl. "How did he answer the questions?"

"Oh, well, of course he couldn't do Marvello's stuff, but he answered them in general. For instance, some woman always asks if her husband it true. Well, he answered that one, and said the husband wasn't true—and would you believe it, when we looked at the cards after the show, seven women had asked the same question. I wouldn't want to be one of those husbands this morning. Oh, boy!"

Again Sibyl and George exchanged a long look of understanding.

When they were alone, Sibyl turned to her husband with a perplexed expression.

"Still," she said, "I don't yet understand where you were those two nights this week. Why all the mystery?"

"I'll confess," laughed George. "I was down to the Lyceum watching the real Marvello. Honestly, Sibyl, he had me going. I can't see how he does it. I'll tell you—he'll be there again tonight—the real Marvello. I [illegible] down and see him do [illegible]

Vegetable Show Soon

The two civic organizations at Thief River Falls have planned a vegetable show to be held in their auditorium in the near future. The idea back of the show is to demonstrate that prize vegetables can be raised in this section, and to prove representatives of canning factories that this is a fertile field for future activity in their line.

In order to stimulate interest in the show, the organizations mentioned are offering prizes totaling $100.00 for the best showing of peas, beans, pumpkin, sugar beets, sweet corn, cucumbers, crab apples, currents, pie plant, plums, raspberries, strawberries, ground cherries, tomatoes, and corn.

A special prize of $10.00 will be given for the best collection containing a dozen crab apples, quart each beans peas, three cucumbers, six ears of sweet corn, three sugar beets and one pumpkin. Free lunch will be served at noon on day of the show, to exhibitors. Date of show and other details will be given in the next issue.

Additional Service

Beginning with this issue The Spectator will be issued in eight page form instead of four as has been the custom for a few years. A page of live agricultural features, various articles of interest to women, state news briefly told and late news of country-wide importance besides other good features is contained in this issue. Perhaps with the next issue, we will commence publication of a good serial story, one of the latest. If these additional features please our readers, we will appreciate if they tell us so.

Open Season Sept. 16

The first day of open season for hunting small game this year will be next Saturday the 16th. Ducks, geese and other species of water fowl except wood duck, may be hunted on and after Saturday. There is no open season for chickens or grouse, but partridges may be taken on or after October, 15th.

Supplement This Week

The Spectator together with other papers in the Valley, is carrying a supplement this issue giving valuable information and data concerning activities at the Northwest school of Agriculture at Crookston which should be of interest to every reader. The school has done more for advancement of agriculture and diversified farming in this section than any other agency, and the young men or women who intend to make agriculture a life calling, will do well to see what the school has to offer them in way of preparation by courses of study.

Shop Crafts Policy Committee Called to Chicago; Strike May Be Settled.

RAIL EXECUTIVES SAY NO

Government Will Not Enforce Injunction Too Drastically—Ending of the Anthracite Strike—Landslide for La Follette in Wisconsin—Greeks Whipped by Turks.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SETTLEMENT of the railway shopmen's strike may be at hand. Last week B. M. Jewell, head of the shop crafts, called their policy committee to meet in Chicago September 11, the day set for hearings on the motion to make permanent the sweeping injunction obtained by Attorney General Daugherty. There are 90 members of the committee, and some of them said freely that it was obvious that a settlement was in sight.

President Willard of the Baltimore & Ohio was said to be working on a plan for separate agreements.

On the other hand, various railway executives flatly denied that any movement was on foot looking to an agreement with the shopmen. Their chairman, T. DeWitt Cuyler, asserted the railways already had won the strike, that on September 1 they had 305,000 shopmen at work, and are adding thousands daily to their shop forces.

Criticism of the unparalleled inclusiveness of the injunction issued by Judge Wilkerson was not confined to labor circles by any means, being shared by members of congress, many editors and other presumably unbiased persons. Probably taking note of this fact, the administration let it be known that the government had no intention of enforcing the injunction to the point of abridgment of free speech or otherwise invading the constitutional liberties of citizens. Attorney General Daugherty indicated that there would be no interference with labor meetings "held for lawful purposes," but that the government would step in if the strike meetings were for the purpose of "inciting riots" or other violation of the law. So far organized labor has practically ignored the restraining order, but the government agents, while keeping close watch on the proceedings, have done little in the way of attempting enforcement. Naturally, on Labor day, the union leaders, from President Gompers down, took the opportunity to attack bitterly the action of the attorney general. Later the labor chiefs mapped out a plan of attack on the injunction, seeking counter-injunctions.

Talk of a general strike largely subsided during the week, for all but the more radical laborites recognized that such a thing, hitherto unknown in the United States, could not succeed. They probably realize, also, that the workers, no less than the rest of the population, would be deprived of most of the necessities and comforts of life by a general strike.

OPERATORS and miners in the anthracite fields accepted the terms proposed by Senators Pepper and Reed, and the strike was settled by an agreement which, like that in the bituminous case, is alomst a complete victory for the men. The old wage scale has been extended until August 31, 1923, both sides joined in recommending national legislation creating a separate anthracite coal commission, and the continuance of production after the extension date is to be upon such terms as the parties may agree upon in the light of the report of the commission.

The senate by a vote of 40 to 7 passed the administration coal distribution and price control bill.

The grand jury at Marion, Ill., which is investigating the Herrin massacre, has indicted 39 persons so far, and more true bills are expected. President Farrington of the Illinois miners has announced that the union will stand back of every union man who is accused of participation in the murders, and already he has declared that all such are innocent. Interest of the American Legion has been aroused by the discovery that two of the murdered men were overseas veterans.

JOHN H. CLARKE of Ohio resigned as associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States, and George H. Sutherland, former senator from Utah, was appointed to fill the vacancy and confirmed by the senate. Justice Clarke gave slight reasons for his resignation except that he had reached the age for retirement. He was appointed by President Wilson in 1916 and had sometimes been criticised by conservatives because of his decidedly liberal tendencies. Mr. Sutherland, whose great legal ability is widely recognized, is classed as a liberal. He was born in England in 1862 and received his education in the schools of Utah and the University of Michigan. He is a close personal friend of President Harding.

RUNNING true to form, the Republicans of Wisconsin renominated United States Senator Robert M. La Follette in the primaries last Tuesday. No one with any knowledge of the situation expected they would do otherwise. However, "Bob's" majority was probably a surprise even to him, being well over 200,000 according to incomplete returns. It was a landslide and carried with it the entire slate backed by LaFollette, including Governor J. J. Blaine, who won by more than 150,000. Rev. W. A. Ganfield, college president and candidate of the Anti-Saloon league, was unable to detach from the senator's support many of the Republican drys although La Follette is openly wet. Then, too, the senator naturally received the votes of the large population of Teutonic origin. The one surprise of the day was the defeat of Congressman A. P. Nelson of the Superior district by H. H. Peavey. Nelson is a prominent leader of the drys and his downfall was accomplished by a combination of the LaFollette organization and the Association Opposed to Prohibition.

The Democratic nominee for senator against La Follette is Mrs. Jessie J. Hoover of Oshkosh.

In the second Democratic senatorial primary in Mississippi, according to partial returns, former Senator James K. Vardaman was beaten by Hubert D. Stephens, former congressman. Woodrow Wilson, when informed of this, expressed his satisfaction, which will be shared by the American public generally.

GREECE'S army in Asia Minor has been almost demolished by the forces of Kemal Pasha, the nationalist leader, and at this writing the latter is not far from Smyrna. The situation for the foreign colony in that city is critical and British and American warships have arrived there to protect their nationals. There have been some bloody encounters between the opposing armies, but for the most part it appears the Greeks have retired, in considerable confusion, without putting up much of a fight. The Turkish leaders are said to be much superior to the Greek commanders. It was reported that General Tricoupis, recently made commander in chief of the Greek forces, was captured by the Kemalists.

The Greek morale, both in Smyrna and Athens, seemed to have been broken. Movements were said to have been started to compel King Constantine to abdicate and there were rumors that the cabinet was about to resign and that Former Premier Venizelos would return to power. However, it was stated that the government would not consider the evacuation of Smyrna or the surrender of the Greek mandate in Thrace. Both of these things the Turks demand before they will talk of peace. The Kemalists, and the French who are friendly to them, blame Great Britain for its support of the Greeks and their claims. A rising of Turks on the south side of the Dardanelles has alarmed the British, who are concentrating on Gallipoli peninsula to check a possible march on Constantinople. Bulgaria has taken advantage of the situation by sending to Athens new demands concerning Thrace.

THE assembly of the League of Nations is holding another session in Geneva and Augustin Eduards, Chilean minister to England, was elected its president. The chief matter before the league is the Austrian situation. Chancellor Seipel presented the case for the suffering little republic and tried to make it clear that unless the allies granted immediate and liberal relief, Austria might have to merge with another nation, possibly Germany—which would violate the treaty of Versailles—or preferably Czechoslovakia, or maybe Italy, which desires such an outcome. The league council, after hearing the chancellor, soothed him with honeyed words and referred to a committee the entire question of how Austria shall be aided and under what guarantees. Seipel scored the British and French banks in Vienna whose manipulations added to the downward crash of the crown and prevented the Austrian government from taking constructive measures. "Austria realizes she must submit to financial control to obtain sums necessary to her salvation, but this must not affect her sovereignty," he said.

Great Britain's seizure of the entire phosphate deposit on the island of Nauru in the Pacific was the subject of protest to the league council by the United States, and Marquis Imperiali of Italy also demanded information concerning this. The treaty of Versailles provides for equal exploitation opportunity of national resources in mandated territory by the allied and associated nations. After a heated debate Lord Balfour considered and finally consented to the "request for additional information as long as it is expressly understood there is no criticism of the British government's action."

HUGO STINNES, German industrial magnate, and Senator de Lubersac, president of the committee on French devastated regions, have made an agreement providing for the delivery by Germany of one billion dollars' worth of reconstruction material and work. To obviate the bad effect of having many Germans working in France, de Lubersac explains, it was arranged that the greater part of the labor will be utilized in Germany. The German manufacturers of the goods delivered are to have 6 per cent profit. The Socialist press in Germany attacks the whole plan as purely a selfish contract at the expense of the German government and labor, and it estimates Stinnes' profits at 45,000,000,000 marks.

Dr. Hermes, German finance minister, is negotiating with Belgium concerning guarantees for six-month treasury certificates which Germany is to give Belgium in lieu of cash. His difficulty is threefold, for he must satisfy not only the Belgians, but also the German cabinet and German financial and industrial leaders. It seems likely he will have to seek for the guarantees from foreign financiers.

SECRETARY OF STATE HUGHES and his party arrived at Rio de Janeiro, were given an enthusiastic reception and housed in a palace, and on Thursday the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of Brazilian independence was inaugurated with impressive ceremonies and patriotic festivities. The centennial exposition is still far from complete but will be opened soon. It is interesting to note that at the presidential reception Secretary Hughes took second place to Mgr. Cherubini, ambassador from the Vatican, because Brazil is a Catholic country. Two immense Vatican guards, in red uniforms and gold helmets accompanied the representative of the Pope.

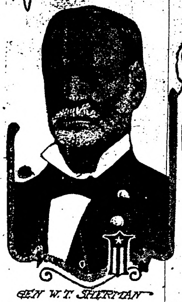
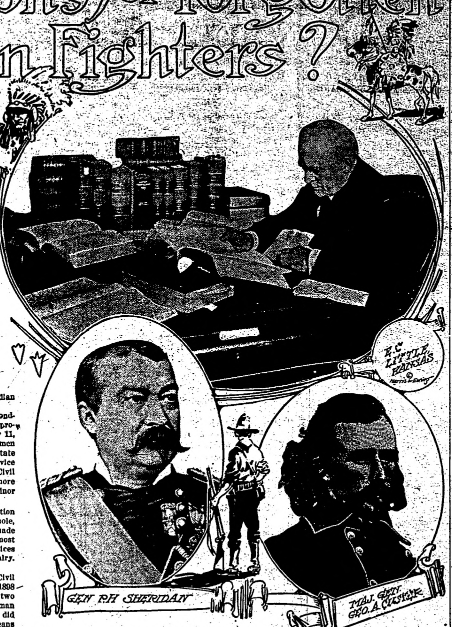
ONE eminent American died last week—Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows of Chicago, head of the Reformed Episcopal church. He was a veteran of the Civil war, from which he emerged a brevet brigadier general and thereafter he devoted his life to religious, educational and patriotic work of the highest order.

Pensions for Forgotten Indian Fighters?





PENSIONS for the forgotten Indian fighters!

There is a bill (H. R. 211) pending in congress "to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, to the officers and enlisted men of all state militia and other state organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil war for a period of 90 days or more and providing pensions for their widows, minor children and dependent parents."

While the bill was recently under consideration by the house sitting in committee of the whole, Representative Edward C. Little of Kansas made an interesting speech which opens up an almost forgotten bit of American history and the services of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Kansas cavalry. Said Mr. Little:

"Mr. Chairman, between the close of the Civil war and the beginning of the Spanish war in 1898 the United States government enlisted only two regiments of volunteer cavalry. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order. He did not say what it was, but I presume he means that they do not belong to the Civil war troops nor to the Spanish war troops, and so there is no way in God's world to take care of them."

Mr. Langley—What I had in mind was that this is a bill dealing with the Civil war legislation, and these men came into the service after the Civil war was over.

Mr. Little—Here are two volunteer regiments, and the only ones in a generation that did not have a Civil war record or a Spanish war service. They do not belong to anything. Nobody cares anything about what happens to them, and the gentleman makes the point of order. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will reply to the point of order by subpoenaing a witness, and let us find out whether it is right to do anything. I am reading from the official report of Gen. George A. Custer:

"The point at which we found the Cheyenne village was in Texas, on the Sweetwater, about ten miles west of the state line. Before closing my report I desire to call the attention of the major general commanding to the unvarying good conduct of this command since it undertook the march. We started with all the rations and forage that could be obtained, neither sufficient for the time for which we have already been out. First, it became necessary to reduce the amount of rations; afterwards a still greater reduction was necessary; and tonight most of my men made their suppers from the flesh of mules that have died on the march today from starvation. When called upon to move in light marching order they abandoned tents and blankets without a murmur, although much of the march has been made during the severest winter weather I have experienced in this latitude.

"The horses and mules of this command have subsisted day after day upon nothing but green cottonwood bark. During all these privations the officers and men maintained a most cheerful spirit, and I know not what I admire most, their gallantry in battle or the patient but unwavering persistence and energy with which they have withstood the many disagreeable ordeals of this campaign.

"As the term of service of the Nineteenth Kansas cavalry is approaching its termination, and I may not again have the satisfaction of commanding them during active operations, I desire to recommend them—officers and men—to the favorable notice of the commanding general. Serving on foot, they have marched in a manner and at a rate that would put some of the regular regiments of infantry to the blush. Instead of crying out for empty wagons to transport them, each morning every man marched with his troop, and—what might be taken as an example by some of the line officers of the regular infantry—company officers marched regularly on foot at the head of their respective companies, and now, when approaching the termination of a march of over three hundred miles, on greatly deficient rations, I have yet to see the first straggler."

When Gen. George A. Custer sends the heroes of that great organization before you for decent treatment and recognition, they are met with a point of order. Is that a good argument against it? Which side do they belong to, the Spanish war or the Civil war? Where are you going to put them? From 1869 down they have never had any recognition. They have been "unwept, unhonored and unsung" for fifty years. Gentlemen, here are two regiments. For the first time they come here and really get the opportunity to ask for decent treatment, which you are going to give the militiamen, and they are met with a point of order. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. I do not believe it is good; but if it is, I suggest to him that he do this honor to General Custer and the two splendid regiments and let them be treated as you are treating other militiamen.

Here are interesting excerpts from Mr. Little's address:

Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, the greatest cavalry chief the world ever saw, and one of the greatest Indian fighters we ever had on the border, said in his report of November 1, 1869, that in the last six years the Indians along the border had murdered more than eight hundred men, women and children. The Seventh United States cavalry and the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Kansas regiments carried on the campaign against the southwestern Indians—the Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas and the Comanches. The Eighteenth Kansas cavalry was organized under a circular of June 21, 1867, from military headquarters for the Division of Missouri, and was mustered in at Fort Harker, Kan., from July 13 to 15, 1867, and mustered out there November 15, 1867. An epidemic of cholera attacked the Eighteenth immediately at Fort Harker and twenty of them died.

Companies B and C fought the Cheyenne Indians on Prairie Dog creek on August 21 and 22. Major Armes of the Tenth United States cavalry commended the officers and men in the highest terms. They preserved the state of Kansas from further Indian depredations at that time. On August 30 Maj. H. L. Moore of the Eighteenth and his men fought the same Indians again. This gentleman was one of my predecessors in the congress of the United States, having served in the Fifty-third congress, and he afterwards served as commanding officer of the Nineteenth Kansas, being lieutenant colonel, I believe. (The lieutenant colonels of both the Nineteenth and Twentieth Kansas have served in these halls. The campaign made by the Eighteenth Kansas in 1867 drove the Indians to winter quarters and left the frontier settlements of Kansas in comparative peace.

The following year the Nineteenth Kansas was mustered in by companies from October 20 to 29, 1868, at Topeka, and mustered out at Fort Hays, Kans., April 18, 1869—organized under authority of a telegram from the secretary of war to Lieut. Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, dated October 6, 1868. On November 5, 1868, the regiment moved from Topeka toward the Arkansas river, crossing at Wichita, marched southwest, and joined the Seventh United States cavalry near the junction of Beaver creek and North Canadian, 112 miles south of Fort Dodge, at the Camp Supply cantonment. Owing to severe snowstorms and the entanglements of the Cimarron canyons, the regiment reached Camp Supply at the end of the month. General Sheridan says:

"The regiment lost its way, and, becoming entangled in the canyons of the Cimarron and in the deep snow, it could not make its way out and was in a bad fix. . . . . . It had been subsisting on buffalo for eight or nine days. . . . . . Officers and men behaved admirably in the trying condition in which they were placed."

General Sheridan tells of their march down the Washita, and says:

"The snow was still on the ground and the weather very cold, but the officers and men were very cheerful, although the men had only shelter tents. We moved due south until we struck the Washita, near Custer's fight of November 27, having crossed the main Canadian, with the thermometer about 18 degrees below zero. On the next day we started down the Washita, following the Indian trail; but finding so many deep ravines and canyons I thought we would move out on the divide, but a blinding snowstorm coming on, and fearing to get lost with a large command and and trains of wagons on a treeless prairie without water, we were forced back to the banks of the Washita, where we at least could get wood and water."

The result of this campaign was that Santanta and Lone Wolf, chiefs of the Kiowas, were taken prisoners, and by a threat of execution that tribe was forced to report at Fort Cobb, together with the Comanches and Apaches, and finally induced to go on their reservation.

From Fort Cobb the command marched to the base of the Washita mountains and established Fort Sill, near Medicine Bluff. On the 2d of March following the Nineteenth Kansas cavalry and the Seventh United States cavalry, under the command of General Custer, went in pursuit of the Cheyennes.

The Cheyenne trail was struck on Salt Fork on the 6th of March, 1869, and followed to the north along the eastern edge of the Llano Estacado until the 20th of March, when the Cheyennes were caught camped on Sweetwater creek, about ten miles west of the eastern line of Texas. This march was made practically without transportation or adequate supplies, and for the last few days the men subsisted on mule meat without bread or salt.

General Sherdian, General Custer and Colonel Moore, with the soldiers of the Eighteenth Kansas, the Nineteenth Kansas and the Seventh United States and Tenth United States cavalry, rescued the women prisoners from the Indians in the Texas Panhandle and drove the Indians far into the Llano Estacado and preserved southwestern Kansas for all time, practically, from Indian assaults. They followed and fought the Indians in driving storms, at times with no resources but the buffalo they killed, and the obligations the Southwest is under to them have never really been acknowledged by the government of the United States.

The most romantic feature of the campaign was the rescue of the women from Logan county, Kansas, whom they found in the Panhandle among the Indians, whom they beat after a fierce fight. Capt. John Q. A. Norton of Lawrence, Kan., who is credited with marching alone in front of a Confederate battery, told me personally the particulars of that episode, a tale that would do credit to the pen of a Dumas. As General Custer says in his report:

"In obtaining the release of the captive white women, and that, too, without ransom, the men of my command, and particularly those of the Nineteenth Kansas, who were called into service owing to the murders and depredations of which the capture of these women formed a part, feel more fully repaid for the hardships they have endured than if they had survived an overwhelming victory over the Indians."

Col. H. C. Lindsey of the Twenty-second Kansas, in the Spanish war, was a sergeant major of the Nineteenth Kansas under Colonel Moore. Captain Norton, a soldier of the Civil war, then in 1869 a young lawyer at Lawrence, and an officer of exceptional courage and capacity and equipment, still lives at Lawrence, one of the foremost citizens of our great state, a soldier and a gentleman of the highest and best type, always gentle, capable, courageous and chivalric.

The Eighteenth and Nineteenth Kansas were the only volunteer soldiers that the American government raised in a third of a century from 1865 to 1898. They performed a service that had as many difficulties as any of our veterans. They made a campaign as romantic and remarkable as a novelist could depict. They rescued from the horrors of Indian captivity the wives and daughters of the frontiersmen who made for us the great West and brought it into civilization. They have lived in patience for half a century without any fair or just expression of appreciation by this republic for their excellent services. All that I ask now is that you give to them the same financial consideration that you give to other soldiers of similar accomplishments and similar heroism.

Popular Styles in Coats;

Shows Paris Styles in Hats

ONLY a walking dictionary could remember all the new trade names given to coatings this fall—for every variation in weave is christened before it is launched. More or less lustrous pile-fabrics, "suede-finished" or "soft-faced" cloths make up the story of the mode in the dressier coats, and these descriptive terms tell one far more than the new names do.

Straightline and bloused coats appear to be about equally popular—slender women showing a preference for the bloused style. It is all a matter of becomingness, which is the most important item to be considered in selecting a coat. Linings are soft and often of two or three plain colors combined. They add much to the interest and finish of wraps which are so often thrown back off the shoulders, making the lining a background for the costume. Quiet colors are liked for them.

Among the good points of the pile-fabrics is their fitness for decorative purposes. Bands, panels or emplacements, cut on the bias or crosswise of the material, make handsome embellishments. An example appears in the coat at the left of the two pictured, in which cross-straps of the material are set on the skirt and form deep half-cuffs on the shaped sleeves, which are bordered with fox fur. A long choker collar of the furs, ends in exaggerated tassels and very large, handsome buttons, on the front and cuffs, match the rest of the garment in class.

Glossy, black wolf fur, in a huge collar and as a border for the ample sleeves, distinguish the smart straight-line coat at the right. Its girdle is made of material like that in the coat and is run through handsome metal links, fastening at the front with clasps.

Twice, at least, in each year, every woman longs to be a millionaire. It is when the shops bring out new millinery at their initial openings in the spring and fall and there are so many flattering hats on display, all at one time. One longs to be reckless and buy hats to suit moods, no matter how many or how high priced.

Here is a group of newly-imported hats from which some of the most important features of the styles may be gathered. They are all of velvet, which is one item to be noted. Velvet hats dominate the displays, but there are many others of hatters' plush and suede-finished cloths. There are many black hats and the favorite colors are brown, bronze, wood, the pleasant tones, almond and mignonette green, ocean and porcelain blue, deep purple, mauve, platinum gray and beige. Bottle green and what are known as "sunset shades," are to be included and bright red is represented among hats for younger women. Shapes look simpler than they are; they are graceful in the hand, but one must see them on the head to fully appreciate their subtle art of flattery. There are many wide-brimmed hats among them, many spirited tricorns and some picturesque pokes. The cart wheel has devotees, but smaller hats are universally admired by American women.

The group leads off with a round hat having a brim that laps at the right side, becoming a double brim. The crown is quite soft and the brim far from rigid. Its sole trimming is an immense bow of rich ribbon. This is the paramount feature in trimmings—bows and more bows of ribbon, velvet and metallic cloth. The hat at the right with its droopy brim has pleasant features for trimming; it is a great favorite. Every display includes a hat of shirred velvet and many of them are large or smaller poke shapes. One of them is pictured of black velvet with facing in a pleasant shade. It has a collar of twisted ribbon ending in a knot and long ends. Take note of the smart tricorn at the right, flaunting a sunburst of burnt goose at the front; there are many modifications of this spirited shape. Finally comes one interpretation of the marquise, in black velvet, with plaiting of silver roses across the front.

Now that the coal strike is settled and the public was just beginning to heave a sigh of relief, comes the cheering information that the coal operators have advanced prices. People must have coal and the coal barons know just the right time to put on the "screws" to extort the last penny of profit out of a long suffering people. The small dealers are going to get the kicks for a situation they cannot control, while the big fellows are going to sit tight and collect the shekels. No wonder the country is turning bolshevik when farm produce is down to nothing while the other necessities of life are soaring every day.

Art Treasures Restored.

The difficult task of finding a method for restoring ancient treasures in the British museum which are gradually showing signs of decay was entrusted sometime ago to Dr. Alexander Scott and he has announced that he had been successful in making such a discovery. A vapor of hydrogen peroxide which he used has worked wonders in bringing out the original colors and designs both in ancient manuscripts and on metal. A print, made for Emperor Maximilian in 1518 so treated was restored in all its wealth of detail. . . . Another specimen, believed to be a petrified block of wood, found under a 14-foot guano deposit in Peru, when treated proved to be a delicate carving.

Even So!

"Mother," said a six-year-old Columbus boy, "what does 'approximately' mean?" The mother explained, and gave several illustrations in order to be sure that the lesson was properly driven home. The boy listened attentively. That he did so was demonstrated a moment later. His older sister was in the room, looking at the clock, as she carefully adjusted the hands of her wrist-watch to the right time, making the usual remarks as to the erratic behavior of wrist-watches in general and her own in particular. "I see, mother," exclaimed the boy, "a wrist-watch keeps time approximately, doesn't it?"—Indianapolis News.

Sleeping Sickness Is Catching.

Sudden hysterical laughter is one of the symptoms of sleeping sickness, according to Professors Netter and Sicard who recently addressed the Paris Medical society on the subject. After studying scores of cases of sleeping sickness they have discovered the lethargy is followed by uncontrollable spells of laughter, this suggesting that the bacilli are still active. Some cases of this illness have been succeeded by fits of sobbing, hiccoughs and sighs, but the most typical symptom of the last stages of the malady is incessant hilarity. Inasmuch as the malady is contagious it certainly is safer not to approach anyone who is laughing too heartily.

THE RETURN

By FRANCES E. GOODRICH

©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

To the human derelict walking down the crowded avenue, it seemed there had never dawned a more nearly perfect new year. It was cold, but not the wind-driven, piercing cold, that cuts one's thin clothing like a knife. The sun was melting the last remnants of snow, and as he stopped in a sheltered doorway he felt almost warm.

After ten years James Creland was in his native city. He had crept in during the dark hours, and had walked the streets to keep from freezing.

Two blocks away was the stately home he had known until ten years ago. He knew just how it would look that morning. Wreaths in the windows and doors; the fires blazing in the great fireplaces; the fragrance of the holiday greens and flowers. His own room would be warm and sunny. How he had loved that room, and yet he had given it all up—all the wealth and love and companionship, because of imagined slight.

He had been proud and stubborn, and because he thought his older brother had been given preference over himself, he had sworn he would go and never return until he could come back with assured position and wealth that would cheapen his brother's possessions. With bitterness in his heart he had turned a deaf ear to his mother's pleadings and his sister's tears. He had refused to see the hand his brother held out to him, or hear the urge in his brother's voice, as he begged him to reconsider, if only for their mother's sake.

He had gone, and after ten years came sneaking back like a criminal, without the money or position he had so arrogantly boasted would be his.

Two months before he had secured a copy of a newspaper in which his mother's name was mentioned in connection with some charitable event. It was this which had created the longing in him to come back and see her if possible from a distance, and to see the home he had left.

He had three dollars in his pocket. It was problematical when he would earn more, but he would have a good breakfast, anyway. He went to a cheaper section of the city, where he knew he would get satisfying food for little money.

After he had eaten, he wandered about the streets, fighting a constantly increasing restlessness and homesickness. To be so near his own home, his own family, and feel he could not go to them, seemed more than he could bear. Pride whispered to him all the vows he had made when he left home. No, he couldn't go back now. He cursed himself for a fool in coming back at all.

"Paper, sir?" barked a shrill voice in his ear. He started. It had been months since a newsboy had thought it worth while to ask him if he wanted a paper. A faint feeling of self-respect crept over him. He straightened up and felt in his pockets for the pennies.

He sat down in a sunny little park and opened the paper, wondering what he would find to interest him again in the news of his native city.

Suddenly his lips whitened. Blazing at him from the crowded sheet was a small item. It told him his mother was seriously ill.

In a blinding flash the folly of the last ten years came to him. The bitterness and hate swept away. He saw only his own error.

He must go to her, penniless and ragged as he was. His mother would welcome him in whatever garb he came.

It did not take him many minutes to reach his home. The door was opened by a new servant, who looked askance at him. But just then his sister came into the hall. For a doubtful instant she regarded him, then with a little cry of recognition and welcome, drew him in. There was no hint of reproach in her greeting, or wonderment at his shabby appearance, only a tenderness that cut him to the heart.

He held out the newspaper item.

"How is she?" he managed to whisper.

"A little better, this morning. In fact, she is not as ill as the papers stated, and I feel sure now she will recover quickly. I think I had better prepare her before she sees you, however. Wait here, or, no, perhaps you would rather go to your room first. It is just as you left it, and every morning mother has had a fire built there."

Chokingly, he went up the familiar stairs, down the long hall to his room. It was as his sister had said. The fire burned redly in the fireplace. His clothes were hung carefully in the closet. He took down a gray suit he had liked especially well. He bathed, then dressed in the gray suit. A knock came on the door and his sister was ready to take him to his mother.

At the door of his mother's room she kissed him and left him to go alone.

Straight to the big bed he went, his head bent low. He knelt blindly beside her. A warm soft hand touched his cheek; the dearest voice in the world called him "son," and he sobbed like a little child, while the tears washed away the hardness, leaving only the clean spirit of the New Year.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Peter A. Dahle and Emma Dahle his wife, mortgagors, to First State Bank of Plummer, mortgagee, dated February 20th, 1920, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, May 13th 1920, at 8:30 A. M. in Book 61 of Mortgages on page 128, with power of sale therein contained, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Thirty dollars ($30.00) installment by said mortgage secured. And whereas the said mortgagee has elected and hereby does elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One hundred twenty dollars ($120.00) with interest thereon at 10% per annum since February 20, 1920, being a total due to date hereof of One hundred fifty and 8-100 dollars ($150.08), and whereas the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: the Northwest quarter of Section Fourteen (NW¼ 14) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with exception of two acres reserved for church purposes, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County, at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 23rd day of October, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $150.08 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $25.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of said as provided by law.

Travel in Labrador.

There was still plenty to see at Natashquan, and I took a long walk, chiefly in stunted spruces and in the bog—the barrens or tundras of Labrador—which occupies so much of the country in the sub-Arctic and Arctic zones. Audubon says in his journey: "To tread over the spongy moss of Labrador is a task beyond conception until tried; at every step the foot sinks in a deep, soft cushion which closes over it, and it requires a good deal of exertion to pull it up again. Where this moss happens to be over a marsh, then you sink a couple of feet deep every step you take; to reach bare rock is delightful, and quite a relief." In another place he says: "We crossed a savannah of many miles in extent; in many places the soil seemed to wave under us, and we expected at each step to go through the superficial moss carpet. . . ." These descriptions are very accurate. I should compare the labor to that of walking in deep, wet snow. . . ." —Charles Wendell Townsend.

England's Biggest Forest.

To the naturalist, artist and the general lover of nature, the new forest possesses special charms, which probably surpass any other part of rural England. It is a portion of primitive Britain, dating back to the conquest, when, it is stated, William I ordered the forest to be formed and in so doing laid waste whole villages, hamlets and other properties, including more than 30 churches, ranging more than 30 miles of country. Until the reign of William III, the Christian Science Monitor says, the forest remained under natural growth, when the naval demand for oak timber for ship building was so great that an act came into force to inclose 6,000 acres for the production of timber. These inclosures and others of more recent date are scattered over the forest and form some of the most beautiful and interesting of the woodland scenery.

Experience Best Teacher.

Mr. Garver is often invited to say a few words to the students whenever he visits the public schools. As he is an entirely self-made man, every boy who has listened to his stories is made aware that if it is not economy, it is industry that eventually lands one in his position of dignity and power, but a newcomer to town drew his conclusions from the depths of his personal experience. Mr. Garver had been addressing the school on the subject of the bee—its marvelous capacity for labor and accumulation. "And now," he said, in conclusion, "what does the busy bee teach us?" "To keep away from the hive," said the new boy, simply, but feelingly.—Harper's Magazine.

NORTHWEST SCHOOL OFFERS OPPORTUNITY

NORTHWEST SCHOOL, CROOKSTON, BIG FACTOR IN DIVERSIFIED FARMING.

FALL TERM BEGINS OCTOBER 9, OPEN TO YOUNG AND OLD, NO TUITION, LOW EXPENSES

SIXTEEN YEARS OF SERVICE, 600 GRADUATES, NEARLY 2000 FORMER STUDENTS, ANNUAL WINTER SHORT COURSES, WELL EQUIPPED BUILDINGS, TRAINED INSTRUCTORS—TELL THE STORY OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY FARM SCHOOL. LARGEST FALL ENROLLMENT ON RECORD EXPECTED. STILL HAVE ROOM FOR MORE. WRITE TODAY FOR FULL INFORMATION.

Strong Courses in Farm Crops, Horticulture, Live Stock, Poultry, Farm Engineering, Music, Business Training, English and Citizenship Departments.

The Northwest School of Agriculture, a part of the University of Minnesota, is a state institution to serve the people of the northwestern part of state. It does not belong to a particular town or county, but to this section of the state as a whole.

It has four distinct lines of work:

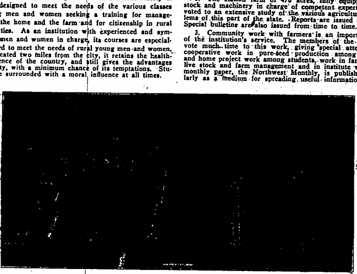
1. As an institution of learning.
2. As an experiment station and demonstration center.
3. As an extension service center.
4. As an organization center.

THE CAMPUS AS IT WAS IN 1906

1. As a school, it is organized with a liberal variety of courses designed to meet the needs of the various classes of young men and women seeking a training for management of the home and the farm and for citizenship in rural communities. As an institution with experienced and sympathetic men and women in charge, its courses are especially planned to meet the needs of rural young men and women. Being located two miles from the city, it retains the healthful influence of the country, and still gives the advantages of the city, with a minimum chance of its temptations. Students are surrounded with a moral influence at all times.

2. The station farm of 476 acres, fully equipped with stock and machinery in charge of competent experts, is devoted to an extensive study of the various agricultural problems of this part of the state. Reports are issued annually. Special bulletins are also issued from time to time.

3. Community work with farmers is an important part of the institution's service. The members of the staff devote much time to this work, giving special attention to cooperative work in pure-seed production among farmers and home project work among students, work in farm crops, live stock and farm management and in institute work. A monthly paper, the Northwest Monthly, is published regularly as a medium for spreading useful information.



VIEW OF CAMPUS, 1922

4. The Annual Farmers' Week and Women's Meetings, held during the Red River Valley Winter Shows Week is the school's one week short course for farmers. The Red River Valley Crops and Soils Association gives an extensive exhibit of grains, corn, clover, alfalfa, and potatoes in connection with the meetings. The Red River Valley Livestock association holds an exhibit and sale of purebred livestock in three large buildings provided by its 2,000 members for this purpose through the cooperation of the people of the Red River Valley. The school is effectively encouraging organization and cooperation along all lines of rural endeavor. Members of its faculty are officers in the Red River Valley Dairymen's Association, the Red River Valley Livestock Association, the Northern Poultry Association, the Red River Valley Horticultural Society, the Northwestern Minnesota Educational Association, the Red River Valley Crops and Soils Association, the Red River Valley Certified Seed Potato Association, and other organizations.

The school and station is sparing neither time nor effort to help the people, especially in rural communities, to make their farms more productive and their homes more attractive.

SPEAKERS FOR MEETINGS

Members of the Northwest School and Station staff are available for farmers' and women's meetings held in the interest of improving farming conditions, home, school, and community interests. Last year over three hundred such meetings were held. This service is a part of the work of the school.

NORTHWEST SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

ESTABLISHED IN 1906. IS A PART OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA. ALUMNI NOW NUMBER NEARLY SIX HUNDRED. HISTORY OF THIS INSTITUTION IS AN INTERESTING STORY

It takes a long time to grow an oak. It takes a long time also to grow an institution, especially when the planting is made in a wild duck pond. There were many who said it couldn't be done. It has been done. The growth of the Northwest School of Agriculture, moreover, has been so rapid that it has exceeded the hopes of the most optimistic supporters. Today it stands as a monument to achievement. Its record is one of unselfish service. Its influence reaches into every nook and corner of Northwestern Minnesota. It is today a permanent part of the northwest. It has created its own ideals and traditions which are being perpetuated for time to come. With nearly two thousand graduates and former students on the school roster, the bonds of love and fidelity to the school are yearly becoming more firmly cemented in the common ideal of service to which it is dedicated.

Many Have Helped

It would take much space to give in detail the events from the genesis of the school. To do so would be to mention the names of hundreds of men and women throughout the state who have played a part. Every community in the Red River Valley has labored for its success with a loyalty which cannot be surpassed. Everywhere people speak of the institution as "our school" and are willing to do their utmost for the continuance of its work.

Experiment Station in 1896

This experiment station was established in 1896 for the purpose of procuring definite and reliable data concerning the agricultural problems and possibilities of this section. The land was given to the institution by James J. Hill with the understanding that a complete series of investigations and experiments in agricultural practice and particularly in drainage in the Red River Valley would be carried out. Mr. T. A. Hoverstad was appointed as the first superintendent.

In the summer of 1903, the University secured the right to use the farm land forever for educational and experimental purposes. In 1905 the Crookston Experiment Station was placed in the charge of Mr. William Robertson. At about the same time a movement was begun to secure for this section a school where boys and girls could be given a practical training similar to that which the parent school at St. Anthony Park had been giving to hundreds of young people from Minnesota farms. This demand came for two reasons: First, because agricultural conditions in the Red River Valley differed radically in many respects from those prevalent in the southern part of the state; second, because the distance from the parent school prevented many in this section from attending that school.

Agricultural School Established in 1905.

A small appropriation of $15,000.00 was granted in 1905 for a school building, but no funds were provided for maintenance or equipment; so in 1906, when the building was completed, an interested group of citizens from Crookston and vicinity raised $2,500.00 to pay for teachers and to provide for books the first year. The school opened in the fall of 1906, with an enrollment of thirty-one students. The school consisted of only one building (now named Home Economics Building) which was a combination of dormitory rooms, a dining hall, an office and two class rooms. Both the faculty and student body acquired an enthusiasm for the aims and the work of the institution. In 1907 it was decided to erect two buildings: one, a dormitory for boys, and the other an industrial building. These were completed in 1908. The boys' dormitory was named Stephens Hall in honor of Senator A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, and the industrial building was named in honor of Regent S. M. Owen.

School Enjoyed Splendid Growth

The student body was increasing every year, and during the third year there was an enrollment of over one hundred. The first class that graduated from this school was composed of three girls and five boys.

In January, 1910, a serious loss befell the school when Superintendent Wm. Robertson died. His interest and enthusiasm had been great factors in the prosperity of the school. Mr. C. G. Selvig was selected as his successor. On August first he entered his position. He came to us with high ideals and with ability to carry his aspirations into effect. Two new buildings were completed in the fall of this year. One was named Robertson Hall, in honor of Mr. Wm. Robertson. This provided a dormitory for the young ladies. The other building was called Kiehle Building in honor of Dr. D. L. Kiehle. This building contains the gymnasium, library, auditorium, and the administrative offices.

In 1911 permission was granted to use the grounds, buildings, apparatus and library of the school for a summer training school for the teachers of Northwestern Minnesota. This indeed proved to be a great benefit for teachers. In 1915 two hundred four attended.

New Buildings Provided

As the enrollment increased, it was found necessary to provide for a new building, which was to contain the class rooms. This structure was completed in 1912. It was named in honor of James J. Hill, who donated the experiment station land. In 1913 a central heating plant was installed. Another boys' dormitory was constructed in 1914, and named Senior Hall. This provided additional dormitory room for boys. In 1919 an appropriation was passed for the erection of a dining hall, which was completed in 1920. This made possible the remodelling of Stephens Hall so that the first floor could be used for students' rooms and also hospital quarters. In 1920 a concrete highway was built from Crookston to the school, and a motor bus placed in service. Alumni and former students who have vivid recollections of the days when "Casey" and "Kaiser" drove the bus through deep mud and snow can appreciate the value of this new road, perhaps more than the present student body.

Attendance Increases

The increase in buildings and equipment has not been able to keep pace with the increased attendance. The largest enrollment was 301 in 1920. Due to crop failure and financial depression this total has not been reached the last two years. However, the attendance has been satisfactory and with the return of prosperity and better agricultural conditions, additional facilities must be provided, or only a limited number may avail themselves of the privilege of attending this institution.

This briefly is an outline of the development and growth of the Northwest School of Agriculture. Alumni and former students are proud of the institution they have attended. It has been worth while to have been connected with it, to have shared in its progress, and contributed to its prominence.

WHY THE NORTHWEST SCHOOL

Alumni and former students are often asked why boys and girls should attend the Northwest School of Agriculture. This question will be asked about every institution as long as it exists. Every school must justify its existence. It must have an appeal of some kind. As an alumnus or former student you had good reasons for attending. Something about the school appealed to you. Have you thought about what prospective students want to know when they consider going away to school?

Unique Plan Followed

The Northwest School of Agriculture is a unique and interesting institution. Dedicated for service and the betterment of rural life, and maintained in order that boys and girls in Northwestern Minnesota may have equal educational opportunities, it has prospered and thrived. Its term is based on the plan of supplementing six months at school with supervised educational home work during the summer. The state schools of agriculture in Minnesota were among the first to conceive of this ideal method of instruction. If such a plan had not been developed, many thousands of young people would no doubt never have gone further than the common school. It is distinctly worth while for the state to provide this opprtunity. Hundreds who graduate from the common schools each year appreciate this institution, which fits so well with their home work. Those who have attended this school consider it a pleasure to tell others of it, that they in turn may come and benefit from the training it gives.

Many Advantages Offered

Let us briefly summarize some of the special advantages offered. First, should be mentioned the practical training that is presented by specialists in their respective subjects. This training fits the student for something worth while. The students work at the school with practical things. In live stock work the classes of stock are before them. In grain work the different varieties are on hand. In farm engineering the actual machines are taken apart, repaired, reassembled and made to run as if they are new. The girls cook actual meals for actual people after buying the supplies. They keep a record of costs, wash the dishes after the meal, and talk it over afterwards to determine what could have been improved.

The girls make their own dresses. This merely illustrates the nature of the work to show that whether it is judging, nursing, sewing, cooking or what not, the work is practical and the students like it for that reason. In academic courses, also, the students have subjects that give a broader outlook on life. History, mathematics, sociology, and economics, English, civics and so on, prepare one for citizenship as a member of society and for community service. Many students from this school often refer to the training received in public speaking, the value of the literary societies, the pleasure of belonging to a musical association and the other activities that help develop personality, character and build up the spirit, creating a desire for and an appreciation of things most worth while.

Individual Initiative Fostered

Another advantage is the opportunity for developing initiative and promoting individual development. The student organizations call for leadership. This brings out potentialities in students. The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., the band, the orchestra, the basketball teams, the societies, the glee clubs, the class plays and other activities depend on student cooperation and enthusiasm for their success. These organizations exist because of what they do for their members.

Dormitory Life

Dormitory life represents a training in itself. It is a training for citizenship that never will be forgotten. In the dormitory is learned the lesson of respecting the rights of others and to heed their welfare as well as your own. It is really a well ordered society in which the continuance of good will and fellowship depends on each individual. Study, fellowship, friendships and cooperative effort come from dormitory experience. The lesson that it is the ability to work with others for the good of all that is really worth while, is indelibly imparted in the student homes of the Northwest School campus.

Recreation Not Slighted

It is not all work and no play at the Northwest School. All work hard, but they play as hard as they work. Good times come without interfering with school work. All the students recall the annual pow-wow, the receptions, the outdoor festival, the Thanksgiving dinner and program, the song contest, the farm crops show, the faculty program, the field meet, the parties and moving picture shows that occupy Saturday evenings. School days are pleasant days. They leave a full measure of happy recollections and memories. This all Northwest School students feel. The recreational life is permanently established. New features are added through the cooperation of both faculty and students.

Character Building

No student can attend the institution, hear the speakers at assembly, the Sunday evening speakers, and take an active part in school activities and not learn the great lessons of Christian life. The ideal of service is continually before the student body. This ideal was fulfilled on the field of battle, as the memorial and the service flag eloquently testify. In every Red River Valley community alumni and former students are taking a prominent part in community activities and community up-building. The school is as proud of this activity on the part of its students as they are proud of the training they received in fitting them for a rich community life.

Much more could be written as to why the Northwest School of Agriculture appeals to boys and girls. Much more could be said as to why those who have attended love their alma mater. Where there have been many hundreds who have attended, the number is small compared with the number who have not been able to come, or have lacked the will to make themselves better trained young men and women. The state provides the school and the instruction. Buildings, equipment and instructors are there to render service. The rest must be done by the individual. The opportunity is given, but no further can any institution go.

GIRLS ENJOY SCHOOL COURSE

The course of study at the Northwest School of Agriculture offers many opportunities to girls. During the last few years, new possibilities for employment have been offered young women. The needs and requirements of these different vocations are met in the courses offered. In addition, home training work is emphasized. Special courses in music are offered. Academic subjects are not neglected, English and literature are being given much time in the organization of the work.

At the present time the electives offered include:—

1. Home making. 2. Professional dressmaking. 3. Nursing. 4. Teaching. 5. Institutional management. 6. Music. 7. Business.

Whatever course a girl chooses, the work includes home economics work dealing with the fundamentals of food values, the preparation of food, needle work, garment making and costume designing. The opportunities provided for this instruction, as well as in the specialized work suggested above, have made the school popular with young wmen.

Practical Presentation

The instruction is presented in a practical manner. In sewing, the students readily gain much skill in garment planning and making. In the study of foods and food preparation a model home management practice house has been provided. Here the students live during a specified period, taking full charge of purchasing the food, keeping the household accounts, planning and preparing and serving the meals.

Many Study Music

Private music lessons in both voice and piano are offered. The school band, or orchestra, girls' glee clubs, quartets, and octets are open to those interested. In addition to the regular song contest, the school presents an operetta each year, in which about 100 persons take part.

Those who plan to become trained nurses find that the school courses are of much value, as preparation for later training. In the business courses practical office training is offered in addition to the regular work in shorthand, typewriting, bookkeeping, commercial penmanship, spelling and business forms.

Social Life Given Prominence

The social activities at the Northwest School center around the students' homes in the school dormitories. There many informal gatherings are held each term which leave happy memories that will remain after school days are over. In addition to these gatherings "just for girls" there are social events in which all the students participate, including field meets, festivals and parties.

Regular classes in physical training are offered for the girls. This work is very interesting and attractive. It is recreation in every sense of the word. The girls use the gymnasium for this training and for basketball.

The Y. W. C. A. offers opportunity for building up Christian life and character. Regular meetings are held on Sunday mornings and on Friday evenings. In conjunction with the Y. M. C. A. Sunday evening meetings are held at which leading Christian workers give addresses.

Through the Y. M. C. A. during the year the girls carry on welfare work. Last year they raised funds for distribution to needy families in the rural communities.

Many Sided Training Given

As will be seen from this brief sketch, the training offered for girls is many-sided. It is practical. It is interesting. It is wholesome. The meeting together of so many students from the entire section of northwestern Minnesota, and the sharing of school life and activities together cannot help but be of value to the young people who attend. The school has been a vital factor in creating ideals for better rural conditions. This is shown in the many happy homes where our students live. They carry out in homes of their own the training they have received, and live up to the ideals they formed during their school days.

A cordial invitation is extended to young women in this part of the state to visit the Northwest School of Agriculure and to share in its school life and activities. Those who find it impossible to attend the entire three years course, should plan to attend for as long a period as possible.

FARM ENGINEERING AND FARM MECHANICS

The courses offered in the farm engineering department have been developed with the idea of giving practical help in solving farm mechanics problems. Most of the students who enroll reside at a distance from town. Every farmer can do at least the elementary repair work needed, resulting in considerable saving, and stopping the loss of time needed to take his machinery to town for repairs. At this school all the boys, if they so desire, may secure instruction in blacksmithing and farm carpentry. As a result there will be found on almost every farm where our students reside, a forge and an anvil. Many have constructed their own farm buildings as well.

The ability to draw plans and to understand blue prints intelligently, has proved exceedingly useful to the Northwest School students.

Motor Courses

The application of power machinery has created a demand for trained mechanics on the farm. A thorough course is given in stationary engines, automobiles and gas tractors. The instruction in these subjects is of the most practical nature. The work done by students has received very favorable commendation. The training received has added many dollars to the farmers' income due to the more intelligent and economical operation of the motor machines. Equipment costing hundreds and even thousands of dollars requires intelligent use and care in order that it may give the greatest returns. During the last three months of the 1921-22 school year, eighteen separate machines, in addition to several tractors, were completely overhauled by students. No one can question the practical results of such work.

Farm Mechanics

In addition to these subjects, there are several courses that bear directly on the mechanical side of farming. Every farmer needs to have a practical knowledge of rope work, belt lacing, soldering and tin repairing. Babbitting, electric wiring, farm sanitation, including pipe work, are not omitted. Heating and lighting adapted to the rural home are studied. Northwestern Minnesota has its peculiar drainage problems. Northwest School students secure a working knowledge of the different methods of drainage for the varied soils in this section.

The increased cost of lumber requires that attention be given to cement construction, and proper mixtures for different needs. These are a few of the subjects that are taken up in the farm engineering department. The students learn by actual practice the things they will have to do when school days are over. To see the boys in their overalls, with black faces and hands, carrying on this class work, it is easy to perceive that they acquire practical ability to do things in the engineering classes. The students of the Northwest School are not afraid to get down and under in order to work out the lessons they are being taught.

Extension Service

The farm engineering department does much useful extension work. Assistance is given farmers in planning farm buildings. Plans for various practical buildings have been made by the department staff. They may be secured through the school. Plans are also available for installation of heating plants, water systems, ventilation systems, lighting plants and farm drainage.

It is the desire of the Northwest School to assist those having problems along these lines. Discuss them with the engineering department staff, or write them, and thereby enable the department to render the service it is prepared to give.

NORTHWEST SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE FARMERS' AND WOMENS' WEEK AND RED RIVER VALLEY WINTER SHOWS

The Northwest School of Agriculture Farmers' and Women's Week is a means of rendering an educational service to farmers and their wives, who are unable to spend a longer time at school. Its purpose is to extend the influence of the University to as many people of the State as possible. This week, therefore, is an inspiration to all. It offers an opportunity to those interested in agriculture to get in touch with new views and ideas dealing with home and farm life.

That the course has met a need is shown by its development until it has become the largest winter farm crops and live stock show and agricultural meeting held in the northwest. Today over 2000 men and women in Minnesota own cooperatively three live stock exhibit and sales buildings that alone are valued over $70,000.

First Short Course Held in 1910

The first Farmers' and Women's week, then called the Farmers' Short Course, was held at the Northwest School of Agriculture during the week of December 19-24, 1910. The movement originated at the school, and was the result of plans made by Mr. C. G. Selvig, who had assumed the superintendency of the Northwest School and Experiment Station in July preceding. The members of the faculty joined heartily in this movement, as did the farmers and towns people of Crookston and community.

Emphasis at the first meeting was placed on the importance of pure seed. Over 300 exhibits of grains were shown in the school gymnasium. All the meetings were held in the various school buildings and many of those who attended occupied rooms in the dormitories.

Wonderful Progress Made

The second Farmers' and Women's Week, held during the week of January 7-12, 1912, as well as the third one, held during February 10-21, 1913, were also held at the school. Each year, however, had demonstrated that within a short time it would be impossible to conduct the meetings at the school and care for the enrollment and the exhibits properly. In 1914, the Farmers' Week was divided into two parts. From February 10-17 inclusive, sessions were held at the school. On February 18, 19 and 20, the sessions were conducted at the Grand Opera House, Crookston, and the pure seed exhibit held at the present location of the Commercial Hotel, in Crookston.

Since 1915, all meetings and exhibits have been held in Crookston. Special meetings for women were held in 1915 and have become a permanent part of the week's program. The Minnesota Red River Valley Development Association has cooperated since its organization in taking charge of the farm crops exhibits. This assistance has been of great value as the association is a Valley-wide organization. The farm bureaus and county agents, also, have rendered invaluable assistance.

Live Stock Show and Sales

The February meeting of 1919 demonstrated the true importance and extent of the Red River Valley Winter Shows. This was the first time that the Red River Valley Live Stock Pavilion was used. Before this time it had been the University cooperating with the farming interests of Northwestern Minnesota. Now it became a mutual cooperative organization with the farmers and business men cooperating with the University. The first building, valued at $20,000, was made possible by the sale of stock, with shares valued at $10. Permission from authorities for building the pavilion was not granted until after the Armistice was signed. The fact that the money was raised, the excavation made, and the building erected between November, 1918, and February, 1919, will always stand as a record of achievement, showing what the people in the Red River Valley can do. The success of the 1919 meetings and shows was phenomenal. The attendance was the largest in the history of the event. The exhibits of grain and stock were an evidence of the new development in agriculture. The first live stock sale ever held netted $23,359, when 115 head were sold. The record bid was $2,650 for a Holstein cow, while a Poland China boar sold for $480.

Additional Space Required

It was evident that facilities were inadequate for the large meetings and exhibits. In 1920 and 1921, two additions were built, and even these are not adequate. In 1922 the live stock show made a record in that all the exhibits were from Red River Valley farms. The importance of the Winter Shows is shown by the fact that the state legislature has increased it yearly appropriation towards the support of the organization.

This, briefly, is the history of the winter shows. Having for its beginning a small meeting held in the Northwest School gymnasium in 1910, it has grown to its present large proportions. From a local event it has become a state organization, so well known in other states that President Harding saw fit to send a personal message in 1922, expressing his wish for its success. Several large and influential organizations cooperate to make these shows and meetings the success they have attained. Besides the development association and the farm bureaus, previously mentioned, the Red River Valley Live Stock Association, the Northern Minnesota Poultry Association, the Red River Valley Dairymen's Association and others are working hand in hand with the Northwest School of Agriculture in up-building northwestern Minnesota agriculture.

The Red River Valley Spirit has spoken in terms that appeal to all. In its daily wanderings up and down this fertile valley, this spirit has touched all, resulting in making new standards of production, in creating new ideas of cooperation, and in teaching that a community life in which all work together, all live happily together, all sing together, all achieve together, is most worth while.

RED RIVER VALLEY IN DIVERSIFIED FARMING

Live Stock Biggest Factor in Diversified Farming

Red River Valley Making Great Advances in Live Stock Production

Forage Crops Grow Abundantly.

Northwest Experiment Station Recommends Varieties.

Crop Rotation System Necessary.

Diversified farming is a well known term. Just what it involves will probably vary with each individual and in different parts of the country. In this series of articles the members of the Northwest School of Agriculture staff at Crookston give their viewpoint gained from the work of the Northwest Experiment Farm, observation and experiences of others. Diversification has always been the watchword of the institution. It has been taught to the nearly 2,000 students who have attended the school, and the many additional thousands who have attended the annual Farmers' Week Meetings and the meetings held in all parts of Northwestern Minnesota. For diversified farming is the keynote here as well as in the older sections of the country.

Cattle, hogs, milk, poultry, corn, alfalfa, sweet clover, potatoes and sugar beets go together in the diversification program. It has been demonstrated that farm animals and the crops above mentioned grow and thrive in this section of the state. There remains the more general acceptance of the diversified farming plan.

Advocates Diversified Farming

D. D. Dayton, himself an owner of a Red River Valley farm, is a strong advocate of diversified farming. For the last 35 years he has advocated dairying as a sure means to success in farming. In a recent statement he says:

There is no danger of overdoing the dairy production for years to come. We import vast quantities of butter, cheese and eggs, all of which ought to be produced in the United States.

I know of no surer way for our young men to grow rich than to take a course at the Agricultural 'school and then go into diversified farming, raising cattle, hogs, chickens; selling the cream and eggs, the pork, beef and poultry—thus transforming the product of the land into that which in its concentrated form, easily can be turned into gold.

The amount of study and hard work which is necessary to win success in business in the city will produce as great, and often greater, results on the farm—and with greater safety, freedom, pleasure and comfort.

The men who are handling grain need not worry lest diversified farming lessen the volume of grain. The best way to increase the wheat yield of the northwest is to multiply the cattle for there is no way to fertilize our worn lands so successfully as scattering barnyard manure.

Forty-five years of study and observation convince me that one result of diversified farming will be more wheat to the acre and more bushels for our mills.

FARM CROPS FIT INTO DIVERSIFICATION PROGRAM

Crop Rotation System Necessary

Much has been learned of the value of rotation of crops in Northwestern Minnesota. Every system of diversified farming has for its foundation a definite rotation plan.

In this section of the state a rotation system is necessary to control weeds as fallow and cultivation are the two best methods of control.

Crops grown in rotation yield better. At the Northwest Experiment Farm continuous wheat yields 6 bushels per acre less than wheat in rotation.

Crop rotation lessens effects of crop failure or over-production as all the eggs are not in one basket.

Crop rotation helps maintain soil fertility as legumes (clovers and peas) obtain their nitrogen from the air.

Crop rotation distributes farm labor over the entire year.

Crop rotation controls diseases and insect pests.

The essentials of all rotations are (1) a cash crop; (2) a cultivated crop, and (3) a grass or legume crop.

Soil Management

1. For the heavier Red River Valley soils the most economical rate of manuring is 4 tons per acre.

2. Phosphate fertilizers increase the yields of hay on nearly all soils of the Red River Valley.

3. Phosphate fertilizers for grain do not pay on most soils of the Valley.

4. Phosphate is most important fertilizer for peat lands. Low-lime peats require nitrogen fertilizers in addition.

5. Complete fertilizers are usually too expensive for hay and grain crops.

The value of barnyard manure cannot be overestimated in cropping under a diversified farming plan.

Adapted Field Crop Varieties

Grain varieties that have proved the best are:

1. Wheat: Marquis and Mindum.

2. Winter Wheat: Minhardi and Minturki when afforded winter protection.

3. Oats: Minn. No. 281, Victory, Minota, and Iowa 103.

4. Barley: Minn. No. 184 and Svansota (a 2-row variety).

5. Winter Rye: Swedish, Minn. No. 2.

6. Flax: Minn. No. 25-7, a variety resistant to wilt to a superior degree.

Corn varieties that have proved valuable are:

1. N. W. Dent for grain.

2. Minn. No. 13 for silage.

3. Pearl Flint or Gehu for hogging off.

Culture of Grains:

1. Best rates of seeding: Wheat 5-6 pecks; barley, 8-10 pecks; oats, 8-10 pecks.

2. Best dates of seeding: Barley, early; rye, Sept. 1-10; winter wheat, Sept. 1-10.

Forage Crops Essential:

1. Alfalfa for hay. Grimm variety of seed, inoculate the soil, use well drained soil, use land free from weeds, prepare a firm seed-bed, sow in June or July without nurse crop, 12 pounds of scarified seed per acre.

2. Sweet clover for pasture, seed and soil improvement. White is heaviest yielder, yellow makes finer hay. Inoculate the soil, sow with nurse crop early, 12 pounds of scarified seed per acre. Sweet clover does not bloat cattle or sheep. When plowed under, land should be well worked up before seeding next crop.

3. Soy beans as an annual hay, seed, pasture, or silage crop. Select variety for purpose desired. Wisconsin Black, for seed or hogging off. Chestnut or Habara for hay or silage. Inoculate, sow in rows with corn planter, cut for hay when pods are well filled. For silage they may be planted alone or with corn. They furnish with corn a balanced ration.

4. Kentucky Blue Grass for permanent pasture.

Pure Seed Distribution:

Seed of recommended varieties may be obtained by addressing the N. W. Experiment Farm, Crookston. Seed grown by farmers of the Valley, certified as to purity will be on sale this year in addition to station-grown seed.

Every section of the country has its diversified farming plan. The above represents the best thought and experience for northwestern Minnesota. With corn and potatoes, sugar beets, alfalfa, sweet clover, other clovers, root crops growing abundantly, heavy grain yields on well-tilled soil fertilized with barnyard manure and enriched with clovers plowed under, this section of the state has the best possible means to grow into diversified or permanent agriculture, considered from the field crop viewpoint.

Potatoes and Sugar Beets Fit in Diversified Farming in Red River Valley

Root Crops and Fruits Have a Place Practical Suggestions Given.

Grow Trees, Fruits, and Flowers

A few acres on each farm planted to trees and fruits enhances the value of the farm and makes it a much more desirable place to live. Enough of the hardy types of deciduous and evergreen trees are adapted to northwestern Minnesota to give variety to plantings and give, in addition, financial returns that are profitable. Trees are necessary shelter for the farmstead from the hot winds of summer and the cold winds of winter. Good shelter adds directly to the returns that can be obtained from livestock production. Trees, flowers and fruits add to the joys and comforts of farm life and make life on the farm attractive.

Hints for Success

1. Plant varieties adapted to the region.

2. Arrange the species of trees in a logical order to secure quickest returns possible in shelter and financial benefits.

3. Give trees clean cultivation until they are capable of shading out grass and weeds.

4. Plant trees on land that is free from all sod or noxious weeds.

5. Plant trees in quantity, using small trees preferably.

Fruits Can Be Grown.

Small fruits such as strawberries, gooseberries, currants and raspberries and tree fruits such as plums and crab apples can with proper attention be grown profitably on a commercial scale.

Apples and grapes can be grown successfully in home fruit gardens if hardy varieties are secured and the following plan is observed:

1. Plant only hardy varieties.

2. Plant on locations sheltered from hot winds of summer and strong winds of winter.

3. Give clean cultivation to soils for all small fruits, and clean cultivation with a late summer seeding of a cover crop for tree fruits.

4. Spray fruits with all of the necessary disease and insect control spray materials.

5. Give winter cover to strawberries and grapes and raspberries when the snow cover is inadequate.

6. Apple and crab trees should be protected with wrappers to prevent injury from field mice and rabbits.

7. Prune fruits properly.

Cultivated Crops Necessary.

Potatoes, corn and sugar beets are the logical cultivated crops for northwestern Minnesota. Climatic and soil conditions in this section are ideal for the production of potatoes and root crops. Potatoes when produced free from disease yield from 150 to 300 bushels per acre, while production costs on the large level fields are reduced to a minimum. The high quality of stock produced in the Red River Valley district makes a ready market for the crops produced, hence the potato through a period of years is one of the most profitable crops grown. A secondary, yet important benefit from the potato crop is noted on grains seeded on potato land. Grain crops on potato land yield twenty-five to forty per cent more than when planted on small grain land and with potatoes in the rotation, weeds are controlled.

Experiments and demonstrations throughout the potato production section demonstrate that the following practices make for success in potato growing:

Potato Pointers

1. Grow the proper varieties. Early Ohio, and to a limited extent, Irish Cobbler, are recommended for the heavy soils of northern Minnesota. Irish Cobbler of the early, and rGeen Mountain of the late type are recommended for the lighter soils.

2. All seed potatoes should be treated with corrosive sublimate before cutting. Pure-seed plots should be grown each year in order to eradicate internal tuber diseases.

3. Short-term rotations for potatoes with clover for the grass crop and manure applied once in the rotation are conducive to the production of high yields.

4. A five-year rotation has proved most suitable in the production of clean, healthy seed. Higher yields have been obtained in the three-year rotation, but tuber diseases survive in the soil through the three-year rotation period.

5. Maximum yields can be expected when 16 and 18 bushels of cut seed are used per acre. Sixteen bushels of seed when cut in one ounce pieces and planted insure a drop in the row of 11 inches, an ideal distance for the Early Ohio variety.

6. Quartered or halved seed pieces weighing from one to two ounces produce the most profitable yields. Medium sized whole potatoes make the greatest yields, but can be used profitably only in years of very low cost.

7. A total of eight tons of manure in two applications in the four-year rotation has given higher yields than lesser or greater amounts in one application.

8. But slight increases in yield can be expected from the use of complete fertilizers on heavy soil, unless the soil is noticeably worn out.

9. Three sprayings of bordeaux mixture in combination with paris green have been profitable in controlling insects and common leaf diseases.

10. That the greatest returns are obtained by careful grading and shipping of stock produced.

Sugar Beets.

The sugar beet is fast becoming an important cultivated crop in northern Minesota. Ten to twelve tons per acre of high sugar content beets make the sugar beet a dependable cash crop.

The sugar beet fits in well with the small grain rotation and the beet tops, as a by-product, make valuable feed for stock.

Practically all sugar beets are grown under contract. The general supervision of the crops is cared for by a district supervisor. The farmer furnishes the land, housing accommodations for laborers, man and team labor necessary for planting, cultivating, harvesting and hauling the crop. The farmer pays for seed and labor indirectly out of the returns from the crop.

For greatest returns the grower should:

1. Select land free from noxious weeds.

2. Select land capable of producing large yields.

3. Be thorough in soil preparation.

4. Plant crops in season (May 10-20).

5. Keep ahead of the weeds with cultivating.

6. Provide comfortable quarters for laborers.

7. Comply with the requirements of the sugar beet company.

LIVE STOCK IS THE BASIS

While it may be said that livestock is the basis of successful farming, it is equally true that the profitable production of livestock depends on the production of a sufficient quantity of home-grown feeds and of freely feeding the crops produced to carefully selected, well bred live stock. It is not a question of breed to select nor altogether the type of livestock farming that will be followed. The selection of a breed or the kind of livestock farming are to a large extent individual factors, depending on one's liking for any particular breed and the location and adaptability of any particular farm for greatest success with the type selected.

Dairying Is Well Adapted

Dairying is a business well adapted to this region. No region holds greater possibilities for the production of swine as well. The increase in the production of feeding crops is giving the beef producer a better opportunity to send finished stock to market. Sheep should be on every farm in the northwest, whether the farm is in the prairie region of the Red River Valley or that of the timber further to the east. This type of livestock will assist in clearing the old grain farm of weeds or the timbered farm of undergrowth, which will add to the appearance of the farm, increase soil fertility and will return a profit with less care than any other class of livestock farming.

Feed is Abundant

The abundance of feed that is produced each year on the average northwest farm and not utilized, shows the need for more farm flocks.

Problems of Livestock Management

The leading problems connected with successful management of livestock on the diversified farm may be summarized as follows:

1. Selection of the profitable kind of stock.

2. Use of the pure bred sire in breeding.

3. Growing of feeds and general management and care.

Selection of Livestock

The fundamental point is whether the animal is capable of being a profitable producer. The question of disease must also be considered. Be sure your newly-purchased animal comes from a clean, disease-free herd.

Use of Pure Bred Sire

There must be a pure bred sire on every northwestern Minnesota farm, before the progress that is possible can be made with livestock. The pure bred sire, is the most economical method to pursue in improving the quality of stock needed on the average diversified farm.

Feeding Livestock

Profitable stock farming must consider the growing of feeding crops, liberally feeding these crops to livestock and returning the refuse back to the soil, thereby building up fertility for increased crop yields, making possible the keeping of more stock.

Sweet Clover, alfalfa and red clover with the help of corn, lay the very foundation for live stock industry in any country. All of these feeds are being grown with increasing success in northwestern Minnesota.

To make the feeding operation still more successful and profitable there is the need of more silos. No beef or dairy farm should be without a silo.

Live Stock Farming

Livestock farming is diversified farming. It calls for a system of crop rotation with legumes. It returns fertility to the soil. It adds interest to the work of the farm. It is the best insurance for an income. It is only through livestock production and diversification of crops and the using of our energies every day of the year that we can make a greater, richer northwestern Minnesota.

ST. HILAIRE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The total enrollment at the beginning of the second week of school, in the grades and high school, is 163. Of these, there are 23 pupils in the 7th and 8th grades; 30 in the 5th and 6th; 23 in the 3rd and 4th, and 25 in the 1st and 2nd grades. The number in each of the high school classes are as follows: Freshmen, 21; Sophomores, 17; Juniors, 13; Seniors, 11. This makes a total in the high school of 62.

The high school subjects that are offered during the first semester are: Algebra, Plane Geometry, Ancient History, Modern History, English 1st, 2nd and 4th. General Science, Physics, Biology. Civics, Physiography, French, Domestic Science and Manual Training for 7th and 8th grade boys.

Extra books are needed especially in the high school classes, and these have been sent for. We hope it is possible to receive them within a reasonable length of time.

A few students are taking regular lessons in typewriting as one of their industrial subjects.

The co-operation of the community is necessary in order to get children to school who are not now attending. A few are obliged to stay home until potato digging is done, but some are delinquent for other reasons.

During the opening days of school the office telephone was out of order but it has now been fixed.

With the aid and encouragement of our school patrons, we hope that this school year may be one of the best in the history of St. Hilaire. The opportunity for a education is theoretically the same for rich and poor—there is no distinction. All have the same splendid opportunity in this great democratic institution.

As an illustration to show the importance of education at the present time, it has been found that a boy or girl who completes the 8th grade has four times as many chances in life as one who does not, and the boy or girl who graduates from a high school has 7 times the chance that the eighth grade graduate has.

All the courses now being offered in high schools are designed to be practical as well as theoretical and all conspire to make for health, skill and character as well as a means toward making a livelihood.

EMBARGO ON ALL BUT COAL

Railroads Issue Orders Stopping All Freight Going East Except Foodstuffs.

START PERMIT SYSTEM

Clerks and Freight Handlers Brotherhood Leaders Have Ordered Strike Vote; Management Fails to Recognize Unions.

New York.—The chief eastern railroads declared a sweeping embargo on freight competing with coal shipments, the New York Central, Erie, Lackawanna and Lehigh Valley issuing orders stopping practically all freight from the west except foodstuffs at connecting points.

This announcement, together with a threatened strike of freight handlers and station employes of the Pennsylvania system, were the most important developments in the eastern railroad situation.

Wouldn't Recognize Union.

The clerks and freight handlers' brotherhood leaders said they were ordering a strike vote because the Pennsylvania management refused to recognize the union.

The New York Central, soon after the embargo was announced, issued a statement to the effect that freight originating on connecting lines beyond its own limits had to be stopped at connecting points because of the congestion which might result from embargoes by other lines.

The statement said the "permit system" inaugurated by President Smith of the New York Central, while he was regional director during the war, again had been put into effect.

Under the permit system, the statement explained, "shippers may apply to the freight traffic manager at Chicago or the general freight agents at New York and secure authorization for the movement of shipments."

MRS. HARDING IMPROVES

Mrs. Harding's Condition Improving Says Attending Physician

Washington.—The situation at the White House remains unchanged. No official statement had been issued, and no informal statement since Dr. Carl Sawyer said Mrs. Harding was getting along very nicely.

It was understood that the patient's improvement was continuing.

Mrs. Harding was said to be "getting along very nicely," by Dr. Carl Sawyer, son of Brigadier General Sawyer. "Her improvement is continuing," he said to newspaper men as he entered an automobile for a ride with Mrs. Sawyer and Chairman Lasker of the shipping board.

President Retires.

The improvement shown in the condition of Mrs. Harding was maintained, according to the official bulletin issued by the attending physicians. The patient enjoyed a "most comfortable day," the statement said.

While her temperature remained at 100, Mrs. Harding's pulse had decreased to 90 and her respiration to 28, the bulletin showed. Surgical procedure, it was stated, had been "further deferred awaiting localization of infection."

NORTH DAKOTA RAILROADS CONDITIONS VERY HIGH

Almost $21,000,000 To Good Over the 1921 Statement.

Fargo.—Railroads of North Dakota were almost twenty-one million dollars better off at the end of July, 1922, than they were at the end of July, 1921, according to the statement of the surplus after taxes have been provided for, published in the Financial and Commercial Chronicle of New York.

The four roads which have the largest mileage in North Dakota are the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Great Northern, the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie, and the Northern Pacific.

Behind Year Ago.

At the nd of August, 1921, the Milwaukee had a half a million surplus over taxes at the end of the August. The Great Northern was three-fourths of a million in the hole, the Soo was a cool million dollars behind and the Northern Pacific was failing to meet its charges for the year by two and a half million.

Each of the roads has had a little better gross earnings for 1922 over that of 1912 for the seven months for which the figures are given, but some of the increased earnings have come from a cutting down of the expenses of the road.

Washington — Attorney General Daugherty sent for Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho, chairman of the Senate labor committee and after a conference regarding the Chicago injunction issued against the striking rail way shopmen, it was indicated that the government would not insist in the hearing on the permanent injunction on the provisions alleged to curb freedom of speech.

A petition for an injunction has been filed in the Supreme court of the District of Columbia against United States Attorney Peyton Cordon and United States Marshal Edgar C. Snyder, marshal for the District of Columbia, by the International Bortherhood of Electrical Workers, James P. Noonan, president, and Charles P. Ford, secretary, which would restrain Gordon and Snyder from enforcing within the District of Columbia the provisions of the blanket injunction issued to Attorney General Daugherty.

GRIFFITH'S DOCTOR JAILED

Poison Found in Body, Is Rumor—De Valera's Capture Unconfirmed.

London—It was reliably stated by two reliable men who have just returned from Dublin that the Free State authorities have exhumed the body of Arthur Griffith and found traces of poison. A physician and two nurses are said to have been arrested. The news has been suppressed by Dublin censors.

Only a few hours after the announcement early in August that Arthur Griffith was dead, Dublin began to seethe with rumors that he had been poisoned. Reports were circulated that he was the victim of a clever, fiendish plot by enemies of the Free State provisional government, who hoped that his death would prove a coup to thwart the treaty by removing the Free Staters' most powerful leader.

Rescuers far from Goal at Mine Tomb.

Jackosn, Calif.—The 11th day of ceaseless effort to bore an underground channel to reach the 47 entombed Argonaut miners found rescue crews still far from their goal. Experts said "several" days would be required to go through the remaining wall of rock, earth, twisted iron and huge timbers which separated the rescuers and the imprisoned miners.

Strikers Fail to Get Work.

Jackson, Mich.—Twelve striking shop men who sought reinstatement at the Michigan Central shops were unsuccessful because of the lack of vacancies, according to the report of the Jackson Employers association. Four strikers were re-engaged.

38 Indicted in Herrin Slaughter.

Marion, Ill.—Lined up in a semicircle in the Circuit courtroom of the Williamson county courthouse, the special grand jury investigating the Herrin masacre returned 38 more indictments, all for murder.

Mrs. Harding is Ill.

Washington—Mrs. Harding, wife of the Persident, is under the care of Dr. Sawyer, the family physician. She has been confined to the White House for several days. Her illness is described as an ailment not alarming.

MRS. HARDING SOME IMPROVED

Dr. Mayo Joins in Consultation at The White House.

Washington—Mrs. Harding spent a "fairly comfortable day," the official bulletin from her attending physicians Sunday night said, and the decision relative to whether it would be necessary to operate has been postponed.

Mrs. Harding's condition showed: Temperature, 100.5; pulse, 116; respiration, 36.

"She had a fairly comfortable day, with such indications of improvement that the decision relative to surgical relief was postponed," said C. E. Sawyer, M. D.

While anxiety as to Mrs. Harding's condition was evidenced by the White House staff, some of the many intimate friends of the family who called were extremely hopeful, basing their view of the situation both on the continued absence of any new unfavorable symptoms and on the assurance that Mrs. Harding was relatively free from pain.

The medical chart as reported from the sick room showed a slight increase in temperature from that given in previous bulletins, when it was 100. The respiration also had increased from 32 to 36 and the pulse from 162 to 116. No comparative analysis was made of these conditions by the attending physicians, though it had been pointed out that the ailment from which Mrs. Harding was suffering, like most diseases, might be expected to show certain variation in its progress during the day and night hours, without proportionate affect upon the general condition.

UNION COUNTER WRIT DENIED

Federal Judge Refuses Temporary Injunction Asked by Electricians.

Washington—Efforts of striking railway shopmen to nullify the Chicago injunction by getting a restraining order from the federal court of the District of Columbia which would prevent government agents from enforcing the Chicago writ has failed temporarily.

Justice Bailey of the District supreme court denied the temporary restraining order asked by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, John P. Noonan, president.

The electrical workers had asked an order temporarily restraining Peyton Gordon, district attorney, and Edgar Snyder, United States marshal, from carrying out the injunctions of the Chicago writ.

In denying the temporary order asked, Justice Bailey announced that court's action was "without prejudice" to the permanent injunction also asked by the striking shopmen.

Argument of the strikers' permanent injunction, however, will be deferred until after the permanency of the government's injunction is argued before Judge Wilkerson in Chicago.

GIANT MOON BREWERY RAIDED

3 Men Jailed in Roundup—All Sent To Prison.

Minneapolis—A few steps from Hennepin avenue, in the heart of the loop district, police in a daylight raid confiscated the largest still ever found in Minneapolis. The still, they said, has been supplying corn liquor to the Gateway district at the rate of 100 gallons a day, in accordance with a carefully tabulated card index system. Three men were arrested.

Printed cards were tacked to each barrel of mash, a blank space being filled in to record the progress of the mixture from the cornmeal sack and the yeast cake to the moonshine jug.

In addition to the 125 gallon still, which was operating full blast, Sergeant John Belair confiscated four sacks of corn meal, four sacks of sugar, ten 10 gallon jugs, 100 one gallon cans, 10 packages of yeast, 100 gallons of corn liquor and 750 galons of mash, in 50 gallon barrels.

"It was an up-to-date place," Sergeant Belair said, "and I believe it was an important factor in ekeping the Gateway section 'damp'.

"It was carefully conducted, was sanitary, and a card index system showed the exact status of the mash in each of 15 barrels, each of 50 gallon capacity."

Pres. of Omaha Ry. Dies.

St. Paul—James Truman Clark, president of the Omaha railroad, died in his apatrment in the Comodore hotel, St. Paul, after a brief illness. He was 70 years old. While at the Minnesota State Fair on Tuesday evening Mr. Clark complained of being ill. The following day he was confined to his bed, but his illness was not considered serious even at the diner hour. Death was attributed to heart disease.

Greatest Fair Closes.

St. Paul—Minnesota's sixty-third State Fair, the greatest, despite a falling off in attendance, will be a financial success, W. W. Sivright, president of the fair board, said. The profit was not yet determined.

President Gets Page Resignation.

Wasington—Resignation of Thomas W. Page of Virginia, former chairman of the tariff commission, has been placed in the hands of President Harding but Mr. Harding has requested Mr. Page to reconsider. [illegible]

RAIL PEACE HOPES BRIGHTEN

Milwaukee, Northwestern Lines Reported Extending Olive Branch to Men.

Washington.—Assurances have been given by Attorney General Daugherty, according to information from administration leaders, that the meeting at Chicago of the striking railroad shopmen's committee would not be interfered with by the government under the federal court's restraining order.

Chicago—Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, met a few Western rail executives in conference in the Chicago club, presumably to discuss proposals for a basis of settlement of the shopmen's strike on certain roads by individual agreement.

So far as learned only a few of the western roads had planned to send representatives. H. E. Byram, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, was known to be at the meeting. Both he and Mr. Willard earlier had refused to discuss the conference and its subject matter although Mr. Byram had said his company still would discuss separate agreements if a satisfactory settlement basis could be found.

Some of the shop crafts leaders already were reported in the city for preliminary conferences in connection with the meeting of the union policy committee of 90 members.

It seemed likely, according to one railroad head, that the question of the strikers' seniority rights still would prove a stumbling block in efforts to reach separate agreements.

Among the Western roads mentioned in reports and rumors concerning revived efforts to find a basis for separate settlements, were the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago & Northwestern.

MRS. HARDING VERY ILL

Mayo Is Called to Consultation at White House.

Washington—A White House bulletin isued shortly before 10 o'clock Friday night declared the condition of Mrs. Harding, wife of the President, was critical.

Complications which set in, the bulletin stated, are "so serious that recovery is not yet assured."

Two eminent specialists have been called into consultation. Dr. John Finney of Baltimore and Dr. Charles Mayo is enroute from Rochester, Minn.

The calling of these two surgeons was taken to indicate that an operation may be contemplated.

President Harding also telegraphed for his brother, George T. Harding of Worthington, Ohio.

GREEK KING TO ABDICATE

Troops Are Preparing to Evacuate Asia Minor—Cabinet Falls.

Paris—Rumors that King Constantine of Greece intends to abdicate are current in several European Capitals. They are considered here to have been given some color by the sudden recall of the Greek heir apparent, Prince George, to Athens from Bucharest.

King Constantine's abdication is regarded here as an increased possibility, particularly as it is considered the only method of getting former Premier Venizelos, Greece's wartime leader, to return to Athens, form a coalition government, made an effort to restore order in Greek affairs and regain a part of Greece's lost prestige.

REBELLION IN SOUTH RUSSIA

Open Rebellion Against Soviets in Many Districts.

London—Rebellion has broken out in South Russia according to a Helsingsfors dispatch to the Central News via Copenhagen. The Odessa Soviets have declared south Russia and Crimea independent. There is fighting in many districts between the rebels and the soviets, the dispatch stated with the rebels in many instances holding their own against the Red armies.

The crews of warships stationed at Sebastopol were also reported to be in a state of mutiny.

Notice Served on Jewell.

B. M. Jewell, head of the Federated Shopcrafts; William H. Johnston, pres of the International Association of Machinists, and Martin F. Timely Comments on Agricultural Topics for Our Readers

AUTUMN IS ALWAYS BEST TIME TO SELECT HENS FOR BREEDING

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The improvident man who sold his heating stove in July because the circus was near and the winter far off differs only in the degree of his shortsightedness from the poultry raiser who waits until spring to select the breeding stock that is to be used to replenish his flock. This important work of picking out the superior birds must be done in the fall to get the best results, says the United States Department of Agriculture, for it is then that the greatest contrast between the profitable birds and the poor ones shows up. Of course the culling out of the poor layers should go on all through the summer and fall, but at last the top-notchers should be selected as foundation for the coming flock, which ought to be better each year.

Never Use Immature Pullets.

One good rule to follow is to keep the pullets out of the breeding flock until they are fully matured. An immature bird may be a good layer and may be from the best stock, but still it is undesirable. Eggs from pullets not yet fully developed will not produce as large or as strong chicks as those from older hens or fully grown pullets. There is no difficulty in knowing when a bird is mature enough to be used as a breeder, as at that time the eggs laid will have reached the size of the average produced by the general run of hens in the flock.

Pullets That Begin Laying Early in Fall Mature Quickest and Will Make Desirable Additions to Breeding Flock.

Young pullets always lay a rather small egg, sometimes very small at the start. Those that mature early may be picked out by keeping track of the birds that start laying first in the fall. These birds may be marked with leg bands, so that they will not become mixed during the winter with those that start their work later.

The late molters are the birds that stick to the job longer, and consequently they make up another group that should be used in forming the breeding flock next spring. Leg bands may be used to distinguish these profitable birds, or, better, the early molters may be marketed so that they will no longer have an opportunity to keep down the average egg production of the flock.

The general-purpose breeds, which include the Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, and Wyandottes, as a rule are not profitable after the second year. It is therefore advisable to cull out all of the older birds of this class. Of these, the late molters are the ones to select for breeders, just as in the case of fowls of any other breed.

But the selection of birds on the basis of age and time of molting is not all the preparation that need be made for raising the foundation for the new flock. The health and thrift of the fowls must be looked after carefully during the winter. After selecting the breeding birds the poultry house needs close attention. Keeping it in sanitary condition is one of the important points; also the comfort of the house, which is closely connected with the health of the birds.

Fowls are very sensitive to moisture conditions, and these should be controlled carefully by ventilation. When moisture from the fowls gathers on the ceiling and walls there is apt to be trouble soon. In cold weather this moisture may collect in the form of frost, but the heat from the sun in the middle of the day will melt the frost, and the water, dripping down, will make the litter wet. Hens are a good deal like sheep in their sensitiveness to wet feet, either in the house or when outside, and they cannot be kept in good health on damp litter.

A sick hen is a hard proposition to deal with if you expect to get out with a profit on her. It is a lot cheaper to depend on dry litter than on medicines to cure colds and roup. Roup is the sequel of colds, and when it gets into a flock, as one poultryman puts it, you are on the rocks.

Plenty of fresh air in the house is a well-recognized preventive of colds in humans, and it is just as efficacious in the case of poultry. The open front house with cloth curtains is the most practical means for the average flock owner to keep the house thoroughly aired, and the fowls will not suffer from the cold if the building has been properly planned; also the egg production will keep up. By going into the house frequently in changing winter weather it will be easy to judge of the condition of the atmosphere and bring it to normal by adjustments of curtains and windows. Moisture can be kept from accumulating by opening up the house for a thorough ventilation on sunny days.

The most successful houses, as found by the experiences of hundreds of poultry raisers and by experiments of the Department of Agriculture and State experiment stations, are from 16 to 20 feet deep if the open-front plan is followed. From this point the nearer toward the front the fowls are moved the fewer eggs are produced. In smaller houses the relative proportion of openings in the front of the house must be reduced during the winter months in order to keep the fowls comfortable. Open fronts or openings covered with cotton cloth are most practical in deep houses.

DATA FOR FIGHT ON STEM RUST

Government Expert in Europe Searching for Information.

Doctor Stakman, Minnesota Pathologist, Visiting Various European Countries, Making Detailed Study of the Disease.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In the hope of finding facts that will be of value in fighting the stem rust of wheat in this country, Dr. C. E. Stakman, agent of the United States Department of Agriculture and pathologist of the Minnesota Agricultural experiment station, is spending the summer in various countries of Europe making detailed studies of the occurrence and severity of the disease, especially with reference to its appearance on barberry bushes. He is also collecting much information on [illegible]

In France and Spain, where he visited the principal wheat-growing regions, he found no stem rust on wheat, oats, barley or rye. Although there were many barberries, few of them showed any signs of this rust, but in Spain plant pathologists informed him that the common barberry and an indigenous species are responsible for the early appearance of stem rust in the spring.

Doctor Stakman reports great interest in breeding and selection of wheat varieties resistant to this disease and emphasizes particularly the work of several eminent French investigators.

While traveling through France, Spain and Italy he found little stem rust, but this little was always associated with barberry bushes. The consensus of opinion in these countries is that, although stem rust does occur remote from the barberry, it develops later in the crop season and causes very much less damage than in those sections where the shrub is common. FOWLS NEED OYSTER SHELLS

Failure to Provide Laying Hens With Proper Materials Is Sure to Cause Disaster.

"Laying hens require oyster shells and limestone grit at all times as well as mash containing animal feed," said Prof. J. G. Halpin in an address to the poultry school at the Ohio experiment station.

This statement was based on an array of valuable data gleaned from years of experimental work at the Wisconsin experiment station. The data showed conclusively that failure to provide shells and grit for the laying hens is disastrous to profitable egg production, though, contrary to popular belief, this failure does not appear to cause soft-shelled eggs.

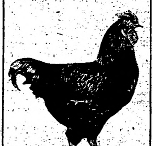
In order to get pullets in the habit of eating oyster shells and grit at an early age, it is the practice of the experiment station to keep these essentials before the birds during the brooder stage. When the pullets are out on range a quantity of the shells and grit are put on the ground near the colony.

BETTER PROGENY BY CULLING

Wise Plan to Discard All Fowls in Flock Except Most Vigorous and Prolific Layers.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

That culling the poultry flock to get rid of all those birds except the vigorous, prolific layers results in noticeable improvement in the progeny is shown by recent investigations at the United States experiment farm, Beltsville, Md. The late moulters selected from a flock of 100 Rhode Island Reds in the fall of 1920 laid seven more eggs per bird during their second year than the original flock of pullets. They were used as breeders the following spring, and the first Red pullets to commence laying in the fall of 1921 were found to be the offspring of these late-moulting hens. Their pullets in a period of seven months have already averaged about two dozen eggs per bird more than the original flock.



Single Comb Rhode Island Cockerel.

But it is not alone in number of eggs that the late-moulter's progeny excel, but also in the value of the product, as the distribution was more even, a much larger proportion of the eggs being laid during the winter months. In the last seven months the daughters of the late moulters not only averaged two dozen eggs per bird more than the original flock, but the value of their product was, figuring at the same prices, about $1.04 per bird more during the same period. It is expected that this margin will increase during the next five months.

CHEAP POWDER FOR POULTRY

Mixture of Gasoline, Carbolic Acid and Plaster of Paris Will Eradicate Insects.

A cheap lice powder for poultry may be made by mixing three parts of gasoline and one part of crude carbolic acid with as much plaster of paris as the liquid will moisten. This is the suggestion of the Ohio station. The powder is allowed to dry before using. It may be kept in an air-tight container where it retains its strength for a long period. The powder is inflammable and must be kept away from fire.

Infested fowls when thoroughly dusted are soon relieved from the attacks of lice. About 125 birds may be dusted in an hour, one pound of the mixture being needed to dust ten mature fowls. For head lice on chickens, the use of blue ointment or mercurial ointment has been found effective. One part of the ointment is mixed with two parts of vaseline and a lump of the mixture about the size of a pea is rubbed thoroughly at the base of the feathers about the head [illegible]

The Minnesota Farm

The Minnesota Farm

Pertinent Pointers for Practical Farmers

Prepared by the Agricultural Department, University of Minnesota

L. V. WILSON, APPOINTED

L. V. Wilson, dairy specialist with the agricultural extension division of the university, has been appointed official superintendent of cattle at the National Dairy Show to be held in the Twin Cities, Oct. 7 to 14. Mr. Wilson was assistant superintendent last year, and the promotion is a decided compliment for him as well as for the dairy interest of the university. Mr. Wilson is one of the most popular specialists of the extension division. He has been secretary of the Minnesota State Guernsey Breeders association for the last three years.

L. V. Wilson,
Dairy Specialist, Division of Agricultural Extension, University Farm, St. Paul.

NATIONAL DAIRY SHOW TO BE BIG SUCCESS

Show Will be Housed in Big Agricultural Building.

The agricultural extension service of the university is taking a leading part in the organization of the National Poultry Exposition association which will give its first exhibition in connection with the National Dairy Show on the Minnesota State Fair Grounds, Oct. 7 to 14. Leading poultry men of the country hope to make the new show as truly representative of the poultry interests as the National Dairy Show is of the country's dairying.

N. E. Chapman, poultry specialist with the agricultural extension division of the university has been put in charge of the educational department of the poultry exposition and has also been appointed a member of the executive committee of three. Mr. Chapman is an enthusiastic poultryman and will devote much of his energy and time the ensuing months in making the new poultry undertaking a great success.

The poultry show will be housed in the big Agricultural building at the fair grounds. There will be ample space for all exhibits and demonstrations. Speakers of national reputation among poultrymen will appear on the daily programs in the lecture room. Mr. Chapman says:

"We purpose to enlist every enterprise possible to make our first show a conspicuous success. We will have the active cooperation of the dairy show managers and of leading farm paper editors and the poultry interest everywhere. The club boys and girls organization will be a strong factor in attracting interest. Demonstration and judging teams will come from many states. Agricultural colleges will also be represented by judging teams and exhibits. Prizes will be liberal and attractive."

Spray Your Fruit Trees.

Definite results from the educational work carried on by the agricultural extension service of the university are not often instantaneous, in fact, they are from the nature of things often slow in appearing. W. J. Corwin of University Farm, an assistant state leader of county agents, makes this fact clear in an experience observed in Carver county. Back in 1918 in that county it was not the general custom to spray fruit trees, but in the good year of 1922 nearly everybody sprays and believes in spraying. "The first county agent had difficulty in getting anyone to try spraying," says Mr. Corwin. "The present agent is kept busy answering calls to show [illegible] to spray and what methods to use. BOYS' AND GIRLS' CLUB NOW STRONGLY ENTRENCHED

The Young People Seem to Fit Into A Peculiar Nick.

That boys' and girls' club work in Minnesota has been well presented and is now strongly entrenched, is vouched for by Ivan L. Hobson of Washington, D. C., a national club leader with the States Relations Service of the government. Mr. Hobson recently finished a tour of inspection with T. A. Erickson of University Farm, the Minnesota club leader, to club centers and communities in seven Minnesota counties. His conclusions are:

1. Farm people everywhere seem to be acquainted with and in hearty support of boys' and girls' club work.
2. The lines of work in which the boys and girls are engaged seem to fit admirably into the type of agriculture practiced locally and is, therefore, helping to solve the local farm needs.
3. Friendly relationship of various organizations to the boys' and girls' club work has made it possible for more and better work to be done. In Itasca, St. Louis and Lake counties the school systems have taken active part in fostering the work.

One of the problems encountered and yet to be overcome, said Mr. Hobson, is how to get hold of the older farm boys and girls and how to carry those now in the work up to a higher age. Another problem consists in increasing the size of the job performed by the boy and girl to a point where it will be more convincing to the community. A third problem is that of increasing the number of members in a given line. An approved practice seems much more likely to become common to a community if there are 10 boys and girls carrying on a line than if there are but two or three.

Potato Grading Schools Held.

The agricultural extension service of the university is cooperating with the State Department of Agriculture in conducting potato grading schools in all leading potato growing districts in the state. These meetings are attended by growers, shippers, county agricultural agents and many other persons interested. Representatives from the extension service and state department portray the 1922 potato market situation and give practical demonstrations of the methods employed by state and federal inspectors in grading potatoes for market purposes.

This work has been made necessary this year by peculiar conditions. A recent government survey shows that the United States has grown a surplus of 80,000,000 bushels this year. According to H. J. Hughes, director of markets of the state department of agriculture, 57,000,000 bushels of this excess is in the northern belt of the potato growing states.

"Under these conditions," says Mr. Hughes, "the only hope of preventing a disastrous price break is the rapid grading out and keeping at home of all inferior quality potatoes. From previous experience it is shown that the culling out of one bushel in 10 will make the average crop grade United States No. 1 and give the remaining nine bushels a much better chance on the market."

Just how the market prices work out in favor, for instance, of Michigan and Wisconsin graded potatoes as against the "field run" from Minnesota is indicated by figures and estimates made by university extension and state department men. On a 700 bushel or a single carload shipment of "field run" from Red river valley points to Chicago, inspection showed that 10 per cent, or 70 bushels, were culls. Expenses sustained by the producer in marketing these useless culls were:

Digging, 5 cents a bu.	$3.50
Hauling, 5 cents a bu.	3.50
Cost of 35 sacks	1.00
Local warehouse charges	3.50
Freight from Red river valley to Chicago	20.00
Loss on feed value on farm	7.00
Loss on remaining 630 bu. because not graded	63.00
Combined loss on single car load	$101.50

This is a loss which runs into money very fast. The estimated loss of Minnesota potato growers on 20,000 cars would be $2,000,000—a loss which the Minnesota farmer cannot afford to sustain in this year of low prices.

"HOW TO GET THE LAST TICK"

Much Valuable Experience Accumulated by Scientists Given in Recent Circular.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

As the territory infested by the cattle tick gradually contracts under the pressure of eradication work, the difficulties in the way of further reduction of the area increase. In the 15 years since the campaign was started to starve and poison the tick out of existence, counties and states have been freed of the insect at a rapid rate but there are knotty spots in the remaining ticky territory, and progress toward the goal of a tick-free country will be slower than in the past.

However, those who are now engaged in cleaning up infested country have the advantage of much valuable experience accumulated by scientists, veterinarians and local authorities, while more than 500,000 square miles were being made tickless. These fundamental facts, a knowledge of which is essential to those taking the lead in eradication, particularly the inspectors, have been gathered into a circular, "How to Get the Last Tick," by W. M. MacKellar, one of the inspectors for the United States Department of Agriculture who has had years of experience in various infested areas.

The circular contains no new formula, no panacea; it is classified experience of practical field men put into usable form for those who will have charge of the work of cleaning up the remaining ticky states and counties. Although it is designed principally for inspectors, others who are interested in eradication work may get copies by addressing the Department of Agriculture at Washington.

Such Cows as These Are Not Found in Ticky Territory.

CHANGE PIG PASTURE OFTEN

Healthy Animals Become Infested With Internal Worms From Feed, Water and Soil.

The main trouble which hog raisers have in raising pigs seems to be that when a trouble, such as worms, gets started in the lots, they let it spread too rapidly over the entire herd. Healthy pigs become infested with internal worms from feed, water and soil which has become infested by other pigs having the same trouble.

The logical thing, then, is to see that pigs have a frequent change of pasture. This is not so big a problem where they are given plenty of range. There are other desirable points in having a range of pasture for the growing pigs, although they can be raised successfully, and are so raised, in close quarters if these are kept clean. Dividing up a pasture and letting the pigs run a while in each part will keep the pigs healthy and give the pasture a chance to come back when not in use.

SUPERIOR CORN FOR SILAGE

Some Growers Can Use to Good Advantage Larger Variety—Choice Should Be Limited.

"Generally the same variety of corn grown for grain production will prove satisfactory for silage also," says Prof. A. C. Arny of the division of farm crops and farm management, University of Minnesota. "However, since it is not necessary that corn for good silage should mature beyond the beginning of the dent stage before cutting, some growers, particularly those in the northern part of the state, can use to advantage a somewhat larger corn for this purpose. The choice should be limited to varieties which will produce ears that reach the beginning dent stage before killing frosts."

Munchausen.

Baron von Munchausen—the Germans spell it Munchhausen—was a Hanoverian nobleman, a soldier and adventurer and a teller of tales of marvelous that even the most credulous ignoramus would refuse to believe them. Certain German critics aver that there never was such a person as the mendacious baron. The true author, they maintain, was one Rudolph Erich Raspe, a librarian, who after committing a robbery at Cassel ran away to London in 1775, where he wrote "The Adventures of Baron Munchhausen," pretending that he had collected and arranged the original manuscript. It was a time when wild and vivid flights of the imagination were mistaken for genius, and there was no effort made to give fiction the semblance of truth, so the adventures were read with avidity, and the word Munchausen became the synonym for palpable falsehood.

Royal Treasure Securely Hidden.

There is talk of draining the Wash and turning it into fertile farm lands. If this were done there is just a chance that the treasure of King John might be recovered, for we know that somewhere in that great sandy estuary lie his golden crown, his jewels and his treasure chests. There is another royal treasure lying hidden in some rocky chasms in the mountains of Wales. It is that of Edward II, which he hid in the year 826 when flying from his victorious Queen Isabella through the wilds of Glamorganshire. So securely was it hidden that the search made for it was vain.—London Tit-Bits.

One Million Days Ago.

Scientists are fond of telling us of things which happened ten, twenty or thirty million years ago, but does anybody realize what these immense periods of time mean? asks a writer in London Tit-Bits. What was happening a million days ago? If you make a simple calculation, you will find that a million days ago is 2,735 years; a million days ago, about the year 800 B. C., Rome had not been built, King Uzziah was reigning at Jerusalem, and 200 years were to elapse before the Jews went into captivity in Babylon. Of what happened a million weeks ago we know nothing except what we can deduce from prehistoric bones, implements and weapons!

Evolved in Prison.

Esperanto, the only one of all the many so-called universal languages that shows any signs of survival, was invented by Doctor Damenholf during his 15 years' of captivity in a Polish prison.

"H. I."

By FLORENCE MELLISH

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Come in, Lois," called plain, sensible Miss Buffum.

Lois Parmenter dropped upon her favorite stool, clasping her slim hands about her knees.

"This room is an oasis. How do you manage it? Is it this braided rug or those Turkey red curtains?"

Miss Buffum looked up from the plum-colored skirt she was darning. "I guess it's Dicky-bird," she answered, with an affectionate glance toward a cage which held an aged canary.

"Letters, Lois? No, bad news?"

"The worst."

"Is it from those editors?" Miss Buffum's tone implied that those editors had reached the limit of her forbearance.

"Yes, just listen. This is from the Mirror: 'Sorry to return "Between the Rivers." Your description of river scenery is ripping, but the fiction market is governed by the same laws that govern the codfish market, the law of demand and supply. What our readers want is H. I. and it's up to us to see that they get it. Put more H. I. in your stories, and we'll be glad to print them.'

"Isn't that the limit? Codfish, indeed! This is from the North Star. 'We are returning "Isabella's Garden" with regret. It's total lack of H. I. renders it unavailable for our columns.'"

"But, Lois, if that 'H. I.' is what they want, why don't you put some of it in?"

"I haven't the remotest idea what it is. Do you know, Miss Buffum?"

"Dear, no! I haven't any education."

Miss Buffum seemed to enfold the girl in her womanly sympathy as she might have wrapped her in the old plaid shawl.

"You'll make good, Lois. I liked that garden story. I could smell the pinks. But why didn't Isabella come out herself?"

"She did, once."

"But she didn't stay long."

"She had lots to do. And so have I." Lois sprang up. "Goodbye, Miss Buffum."

* * * * * * *

"Why, Lois! You're bright as the morning. Has something important happened?" cried Miss Buffum, as the girl poised herself on the threshold with eyes alight.

"What do you think? There's a big box in the hall of 'H. I.'"

"Lois Parmenter! How do you know what it's full of? You haven't been boring into it?"

"Certainly not, I didn't have a gimlet. But it says 'H. I.' on it in brass tacks."

"Oh! that stands for 'Harvey Ide.'"

"But why all this packing?" said Lois.

"Loretta's children are down with measles. I'm going by the next train. Will it be asking too much of you to look after Dicky.?"

"Miss Buffum! not enough—if you must go."

Miss Buffum packed her shirt waists with a sigh for this negative sort of kindness.

When Lois came in a little late for dinner she noticed an unusual animation in the usual group. The new boarder, vigorous, buoyant, genial, was relating an adventure. The sour-faced Miss Bond was almost smiling, and the anaemic Mr. Hemenway looked actually interested.

"That's a great experience, Mr. Ide," he said.

"Life is full of great experiences," returned Mr. Ide.

Then somebody introduced Lois.

The next morning was Sunday, and Lois and Mr. Ide found themselves alone at breakfast.

"A great morning," he ventured.

"Very much like yesterday, I think."

The conversation languished.

"I write stories," she said abruptly.

"Do you? That must be great."

"Very little, at present. It just came to me that you might help me!"

"Oh! I'd be glad to and we'll take a long walk after church and a longer one after dinner. We'll go every Sunday. Then small boys like Kipling had better keep out of the way."

* * * * * * *

Miss Buffum did not return until spring.

"The blessed little boy!" she cried, as Lois tripped in with Dicky's cage. "Has Dicky been a good bird and not a mite of trouble?"

"He has been a very good bird."

"But you, Lois. You've improved wonderfully. You have a beautiful color."

"I've just come in for a walk with Harvey."

"That's good for you, but what makes you call him Harvey?"

"Because his name isn't Horatio. But sit down a moment, Miss Buffum. This letter won't keep."

Miss Buffum dropped into a chair with an armful of shirt waists, and Lois read.

"'My dear Miss Parmenter—"He That Goeth Forth to Battle" will appear in an early issue. We have accepted it on account of its strong human interest. We shall be glad to have you submit other stories.'"

"You dear child! But I'm not a bit surprised. I knew those editors would come to their senses by spring."

"And the best of it is, we know now what 'H. I.' stands for."

R. R. V. Livestock Ass'n. Will Put On Campaign

At a well attended meeting of the Red River Valley Lviestock association, it was decided to complete the payments on the livestock pavilion buildings at Crookston owned by the association members. The 11 northwestern Minnesota counties have been divided into 100 districts, each district being asked to sell $250 of shares in be building. Pennington County has five districts Paul Engelstad, Thief River Falls, was named chairman for the county. Associated with him for the campaign are the following well kown men: O. Ramstad, C. L. Hanson, W. B. Fuller, Fred Beerbauer, Hans Anton and J. J. McCann, Thief River Falls; K. O. Gigstad, Pat Hall and F. S. Erdman, St. Hilaire and Stuart McLeod, Goodridge.

September 18-30 are the dates set for this work.

All the counties are going ahead enthusiastically to complete the payments and save the winter shows for the Valley.

Mentor Bank Robbed

The bank at Mentor, a station on the Great Northern south of Red Lake Falls, was robbed Tuesday night. From information recieved here it is learned that the station agent, banker and either one or two other citizens were shot and wounded by the yeggs who had cut all the wire connections with the village before starting their operations which lasted nearly three hours. It is reported that the robbers secured something like $2000.00 all available cash at the bank.

"Does she contemplate a political career?"

"Yes, and that brought forth an ultimatum from Mr. Peckton. He told her he had been an obedient husband ever since the preacher spoke the fateful words that made them man and wife, but she needn't expect him to go around handing out her campaign cards. He'd die first."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Coal Shipment In

The first coal recieved here this fall was a carload of soft coal recieved Tuesday by A. Satterberg, who also has a carload of coke coming in soon. Two cars of deep mine lignite are on the way for local dealers so it is not anticipated there will be any fuel shortage here this fall. According to reports recieved soft coal can be had in sufficient quanity to supply all needs, but there will be no hard coal until late in the fall.

Passenger Service Again

Commencing Monday morning last, the Great Northern resumed passenger train service on this line where it was discontinued six weeks ago by reason of coal shortage. The traveling public has had scant consideration for the mixed train accomodations, and, its use has resulted in most of the passenger traffic going to the auto busses.

ORIGINAL OF "HUCK FINN"

Huckleberry Finn was drawn from real life. Barney Farthing, the original of Mark Twain's most famous character, died a pauper in 1917, having spent the last years of his life in a county almshouse not far from the little town where he and Mark Twain were school-fellows. So closely was Barney Farthing identified with the hero of the novel that for years he answered to the name of Huck. Barney made the coffin in which he was buried—made it in protest against the outrageous prices of the coffin trust.

Shopmen's Strike Is Broken By Separate Agreements With Many of the Roads.

MEN GO BACK AT OLD WAGES

Senators Lodge, Townsend and Poindexter Renominated—Republicans Win Maine Election by Fair Majority—Danger of New War in the Balkans.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SEPARATE agreements entered into by striking shopmen and railways representing about one-fifth of the country's mileage last week brought about a break in the strike that has lasted for some 75 days and threatened the nation's transportation facilities with demoralization. It is believed some other railways will soon make the same arrangement with the men, these including the Rock Island, the Burlington and the Northern Pacific.

Some of the big lines, notably the Pennsylvania, have not adopted the settlement plan. They assert they already have won the strike and will not make terms with the men who went out. Of the roads accepting the agreements the most important are:

New York Central lines and subsidiaries, including Michigan Central, Boston and Albany, and Big Four; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; Erie; Chicago and Northwestern and its subsidiary, the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha; Baltimore and Ohio; Seaboard Air line; Southern railway; New York, Chicago and St. Louis; The Monon; Wheeling and Lake Erie.

The agreements are, as they should be, a compromise. All the strikers except those proven guilty of acts of violence, are to be taken back within thirty days at the prevailing pay prescribed by the federal railway labor board, and in the shops where they were formerly employed, but not necessarily at the same jobs. There is no specific provision regarding the matter of seniority rights, but it is believed this issue can be worked out satisfactorily after the men are back at work. Any controversies arising from the strike that cannot be settled otherwise are to be referred to a commission to be established, consisting of six representatives of the labor organizations involved and six representatives of the railroads. This commission is to remain in existence only until May 31, 1923, and none of its decisions nor the agreement in general "shall be used or cited in any controversy between these parties or between the railroads signing the same or any other class or classes of their employees in any other controversy that may hereafter arise." There is to be no intimidation nor oppression of the employees who remained at work or those who took the places of strikers, and all law suits pending as a result of the strike are to be dismissed.

CREDIT for arranging this agreement is evidently due mainly to S. Davies Warfield, president of the Seaboard Air line and head of a securities concern which owns large amounts of railway bonds. President Willard of the Baltimore and Ohio also was prominent in the peace negotiations; and B. M. Jewell, head of the striking organizations, proved amenable to all suggestions looking toward a fair and reasonable settlement.

Mr. Warfield, in a statement concerning the agreement, made this pertinent suggestion:

"Regional railroad labor boards should be properly and promptly established; a board named by each group of railroads that operate in each of the four rate-making districts into which the commission has divided the country; the men of each group of railroads to also organize boards to confer with the regional railroad boards. Negotiations could be successfully carried on and disputed questions settled if approached in good faith."

HEARING on the motion to have the strike injunction obtained by Attorney General Daugherty changed into a preliminary restraining order until a trial began last week before Federal Judge Wilkerson in Chicago, and the attorney general announced that it would proceed despite the partial agreements reached. The temporary injunction was extended ten days, but the court warned the government forces it would not be further extended. The government presented many thousands of affidavits telling of acts of violence and threats and other circumstances, all tending to prove its theory that a conspiracy existed, which in effect obstructed interstate commerce.

Mr. Daugherty's determination to press the case to a decision is based on his belief that the principles at stake are more important than any immediate issue or effect. The injunction, he thinks, if granted beyond the ten days now fixed by the court, will not only protect the workers who have taken places of strikers on roads not in the settlement, but will reach the question of responsibility of union leaders for acts of violence.

PRESIDENT HARDING and Secretary of Labor Davis were greatly pleased by the news of the partial strike settlement. The secretary said:

"American industry has overcome the last obstacle in the way of the greatest economic revival the nation has ever known. With the settlement of the strike on many of the trunk line railways assured, the whole industrial machinery of the country is ready for a forward movement unprecedented in our economic history.

"The disturbances in the bituminous and anthracite coal mining industries are in the past, and the 600,000 coal miners of the country are back at work. Our representatives in New England have advised me that in the textile workers' strike settlements are rapidly enabling the mills to resume operations.

"These three great industrial disputes have been the only hindrances to the nation in its rapid recovery from the industrial depression which we faced a year ago. With them out of the way progress toward prosperity will be swift and sure."

IT IS true, as Mr. Davis says, that the disturbances in the coal mining industry are ended, but the disturbances in the minds of the consumers of coal are just beginning. The dealers, greedy, unscrupulous and conscienceless, are demanding exorbitant prices for coal and the people are wailing, with little prospect of relief except in some states where the authorities have both the power and the will to check the profiteering. Meanwhile the congressional conferees have been disputing over the Cummins-Winslow coal distribution and price control bill, disagreeing as to its application to intrastate as well as interstate shipments. Henry Ford is the most vociferous of the big coal consumers, and according to the latest reports he had not altered his intention to shut down the Ford plants. He charges that the interstate commerce commission, through its control over empty coal cars, "is playing into the hands of coal profiteers under guise of regulations for the public good," and adds: "The same interests which own the public utilities, railroads and mines are using the commission as part of their scheme to fleece the public, and the scheme is so simple that nobody sees it."

CONSIDERABLY battered by results in recent primaries, the "old guard" of the Republican party resumed its smiling appearance last week after the primary elections were held in Massachusetts, Michigan and Washington. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge won over Joseph Walker by a three to one vote, and will have to contest the election with William A. Gaston, who defeated Sherman L. Whipple for the Democratic nomination. Senator Townsend of Michigan, who was opposed by three candidates, won his renomination by a plurality of about 25,000—a notable victory since he was hampered by the issue of "Newberryism." Out in Washington Miles Poindexter had little difficulty in obtaining a renomination for the senate. The Democratic nominee is C. C. Dill.

Two Democratic gubernatorial primaries in the South were of general interest. In South Carolina T. G. McLeod defeated Governor Blease, and the state is to be congratulated. In Georgia Governor Hardwick was beaten by Clifford W. Walker. Hardwick has opposed the Ku Klux Klan, which probably accounts for his defeat.

Maine's election, which used to be considered a reliable indication of results in the nation generally in November, took place Monday, and the Republicans won by what the party leaders professed to regard as satisfactory majorities, though naturally they were far below those of 1920. Senator Frederick Hale's majority over Curtis, Democrat, was about 27,000, and Governor Baxter had a slightly larger margin over Pattangall. The four Republican congressional candidates were elected, but the Democrats increased their membership in the state assembly from 15 to 40 and in the state senate from none to three. Republican leaders in Washington called the Maine results an endorsement of the administration, while the Democratic chiefs found satisfaction in the reduced size of the Republican majorities.

THE Greek debacle in Asia Minor was complete. Constantine's troops—those that were not captured—were withdrawn from the mainland in a hurry and the Turkish Nationalists occupied Smyrna in orderly manner. Then looting broke out, and on Thursday someone started a conflagration that destroyed the western part of the city. The Kemalists also occupied Brusa, burned by the fleeing Greeks, and announced that their capital would be moved to Konia. Their rejoicings over the victory were participated in by their countrymen who adhere to the Constantinople government, and there was much talk among them of recovering that city from alien dominance and of again possessing Thrace and the Dardanelles. This brought a warning from all the allies that an attack against the neutral zones of Ismid and the Dardanelles would mean war with the allies, and British and Italian troops were concentrated in those regions.

Probably the allies can restrain the Turks, but the danger in the Near East does not stop there and many wise statesmen are shaking their heads over the prospects of a new war in the Balkans. Bulgaria is massing her forces on the Thracian frontier, while Jugo-Slavia and her ally Rumania are mobilizing to give the Bulgars battle. The Serbs, who themselves want possession of Salonica, are determined that Bulgaria shall not grab Thrace and thus re-establish contact with the Turks. The Bulgarian press is urging the government to abandon diplomacy and to fight. England, which has been the friend of Greece, will not permit Turkey or Bulgaria to get Thrace and has a powerful naval force guarding the waters between the continents. Italy is most desirous of peace and is urging England to consent to a new conference on the Near East. France rejoices over the victory of the Turks, but joins with England in the determination that Constantinople and the Dardanelles shall remain neutral and under international control. All in all, British diplomacy seems to have made a mess of it, but a layman at this distance has no right to pass judgment yet. Britain's course may have been influenced greatly by the ever existent and now increasing fear of a general Mohammedan uprising against Christian domination.

ALL the country shared with President Harding his anxiety over the serious illness of Mrs. Harding, and everyone rejoiced when the news came from the White House that the crisis was passed and the gracious lady's recovery was virtually assured.

THE house sent the tariff bill back to conference because it objected to the proposed duty on potash and the provision continuing for one year the dye embargo act. The changes demanded by the house were made, and the bill was then approved by the representatives after a very brief debate.

Unique History of the Christianizing of Montana Indians

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

FASCINATING are the "Decisive Battles of the World"—if not in themselves as battles, then in their effects upon history. But many an armed contest—rather a skirmish from a military viewpoint than a "decisive" engagement—has had far-reaching results which make a fascinating story. For example:

Champlain, in discovering the lake that bears his name, used his arquebuses on a band of Indians from the Iroquois Confederacy and set them running home to the Mohawk valley of New York. This was in 1600, two years after the founding of Jamestown, eleven years before the landing of the Pilgrims and eighty years before the beginning of the armed clash between the French and English for the possession of America.

It is a far cry from 1609 to 1922; from New York to Montana; from Iroquois to Flatheads. Just the same, it was Champlain who set the feet of Marcus Whitman and Father Pierre-Jean De Smet, S. J., on the Oregon Trail two centuries later. Marcus Whitman, Presbyterian missionary, patriot, statesman and martyr, saved Oregon and the Pacific Northwest for the United States. Father De Smet, greatest and most practical missionary who ever labored among the American Indians, dotted the far Northwest with religious and educational establishments, kept many a savage tribe from the warpath and served well the government of his adopted land. The history of the American Northwest cannot be told without Whitman and De Smet—both of whom Champlain started over the Oregon Trail to everlasting fame. And here is the story in brief, with its fascinating sequiturs—sequences of cause and effect:

The Iroquois Confederacy, because of Champlain's attack, swore undying enmity to the French. The Indians of this unique confederacy—Mohawks, Cayugas, Onondagas, Senecas, Oneidas and Tuscaroras—by the time the French and British came to grips in 1689, were dictatorial overlords of all the tribes from Hudson's bay to the Cherokee frontier of the Carolinas and from the Connecticut to the Mississippi. Their geographical location and influence gave them the balance of power between the French and the British. They were a big factor in the several wars which finally resulted in the expulsion of the French after the capture of Quebec by Wolfe in 1759.

In the Revolution all the Iroquois kept on siding with the British, except the Oneidas and part of the Tuscaroras. They laid waste the American frontier. Sullivan led an American punitive expedition and destroyed their homes, crops and orchards. The outcome of the Revolution drove the four hostile tribes to Canada.

In Canada many of the exiled Iroquois were Christianized by Jesuit missionaries, whose principal work in America had been in New France and the French possessions.

In 1816 a party of 24 Iroquois left the Roman Catholic mission of Caughnawaga, Canada, on the St. Lawrence and struck out across the Mississippi valley. They ended up among the Flatheads of the Bitter Root valley. These Iroquois were led by Ignatius La Mousse (Old Ignace), who achieved a dominating influence among the Flatheads, taught them the rites of the Roman Catholic religion and created a tribal desire for the presence of Blackrobes (Jesuit missionaries) which resulted in a decision in 1830 to send a delegation to the white man's country to ask for them.

Here it is profitable to glance at the chronology of this part of the West, which was just beginning to get acquainted with the white man. St. Louis was founded in 1768. The Lewis and Clark expedition (1804-6) had passed through their country. John Colter had discovered the Yellowstone in 1807, only to have it ridiculed as an impossibility and dubbed "Colter's Hell." Astoria had been established in 1812. Gen. William H. Ashley and his associates of the Rocky Mountain Fur company, with headquarters at St. Louis, had begun to use the Oregon Trail soon after 1822 on their trips to and from the annual rendezvous in the Green River valley, or in Pierre's Hole under the Tetons.

Four braves volunteered to carry the request for Blackrobes to St. Louis. There were Blackrobes at this outpost of civilization. Their presence there is a story in itself. The restoration of the Society of Jesus in 1814, after 41 years of suppression, found a few old Jesuit priests at Whitemarsh, Md., who had established there the first novitiate in the United States. In 1823 an offer of land at St. Louis was made to them. Twelve set out for St. Louis April 11, 1823. They walked all the way, carrying their goods in wagons. Among them was young De Smet, who had come from Belgium in 1821 at the age of twenty. In 1827 he was ordained priest. In 1831 the Missouri mission was made independent. In 1834 the petition of the Second Provincial council at Baltimore that the Indian Roman Catholic missions of the United States be confined to the Society of Jesus was granted at Rome. Thus the Jesuits entered upon a virgin field of labor of more than half the area of the United States.

The four Flatheads joined the 1831 return train of William L. Sublette, one of the famous Rocky Mountain Fur company's traders, and reached St. Louis October 1. They presented their petition to Bishop Rosati. Two of the Indians fell ill. They died and were buried in the Roman Catholic cemetery. The two survivors left St. Louis the following spring, but never reached home. They may be the two Indians George Catlin painted—Nos. 207 and 208 in his gallery of Indian paintings.

This unique request from the Flatheads gained nation-wide publicity. A sympathetic account was published in the Christian Advocate. In 1833 an editorial in the Christian Advocate pronounced it a call to the Christian conscience of the world and exhorted the Protestant churches to take it up in earnest. In those days, to the East, the name Flathead included all the tribes in the vast area from Montana to the mouth of the Columbia and northward into Canada.

The Methodists raised funds and in 1834 started a missionary expedition under the leadership of Jason Lee of Canada. The party kept on past the Bitter Root country and began operations near the mouth of the Columbia.

The Presbyterians in 1835 sent Marcus Whitman to Oregon. He returned, reported, and in 1836 went back with his wife and a party to begin his labors at Waiilatpu among the Cayuses.

Thus the net result of the first Flathead expedition to St. Louis for Blackrobes in Montana was Protestant missionaries in Oregon.

The Flatheads of Montana tried a second time to get a Blackrobe. In 1835 Old Ignace with his sons Charles and Francis went to St. Louis and returned the following spring with the promise that a Blackrobe would be sent in time.

In 1837 the Flatheads started their third deputation. In consisted of Old Ignace, three Flatheads and a Nez Perce. All were massacred by Sioux en route to St. Louis.

Not in the least disheartened by these three failures, the Flatheads sent to St. Louis a fourth time. The two petitioners, Young Ignace and Pierre Gaucher, traveled safely by canoe down the Yellowstone and Missouri and arrived October 21, 1839. Bishop Rosati promised them a Blackrobe the following spring. Gaucher immediately set out with the good news. He arrived in the Bitter Root valley early in the spring—a most remarkable journey.

Father De Smet volunteered for the arduous mission. At Westport (Kansas City) he joined the 1840 expedition of the American Fur company to the Green River rendezvous. There De Smet found Gaucher and ten Flatheads to meet him. They went to Pierre's Hole, where were encamped the main body of the Flatheads, who had come 800 miles to meet him, together with bands of Nez Perces, Pend d'Oreilles and Kadspels—about 1,600 in all. He baptized and instructed, postponed his visit to the Bitter Root and reached St. Louis by way of the Jefferson and Missouri rivers December 31, 1840.

He was then informed that there were no funds for the promised expedition. So he went out and raised funds. The spring of 1841 found him on the Oregon Trail, accompanied by two priests and three lay brothers. At Fort Hill on the Snake river in August he was met by an advance party of Flatheads. Passing through the site of Missoula, they went 30 miles into the Bitter Root valley, arriving September 24. There and then De Smet began work on St. Mary's mission.

De Smet, in the spring of 1842, made a journey of inspection as far as the mouth of the Columbia. That fall found him again in St. Louis. In 1843 he solicited for the mission south to New Orleans and east to Boston, and took three recruits and supplies to Westport and started them west.

Then he set sail for Europe. After visiting the principal cities of six countries he embarked at Antwerp December 12, 1843, with four fathers, a lay brother and six sisters and supplies. The voyage was around Cape Horn. They were nearly wrecked on the Columbia river bar, but landed safely July 31, 1844, and went at once to the Bitter Root mission.

These Bitter Root Flatheads, by the way, seem to have been too good to be true. All explorers, traders and travelers bear witness to their high moral character and attractive ways. De Smet says of them:

"I was not able to discover among these people the slightest blameworthy act, unless it was their gambling, in which they often venture everything they possess. These games were unanimously abolished, as soon as I had explained to them that they were contrary to the commandment of God. . . . I have often asked myself: Is it these people whom the civilized nations dare to call by the name of savages?"

De Smet then passed two strenuous years in exploring, visiting tribes and establishing missions. He arrived at St. Louis December 10, 1846.

What had he accomplished in the seven years since he first hit the Oregon Trail? For one thing, his labors, travels, hardships and perils belong in the first rank of similar exploits. He had traveled nearly 50,000 miles in every sort of conveyance and in every kind of climate. As he once wrote:

"I was two years in the mountains without tasting bread, salt, coffee, tea, sugar. I was for years without a roof, without a bed. I have been six months without a shirt on my back, and often I have passed whole days and nights without a morsel of anything to eat."

These arduous labors had at least this reward: He had become a great power among the Indian tribes. All knew him, either personally or by reputation. Also he was perhaps the one white man whom all trusted. So trusted was he that the United States government at least five times asked his services as a mediator with various tribes.

The ordinary, usual settlement of the Bitter Root country began in 1864 at Missoula—now a modern city of 15,000, which played host last summer to the National Editorial association. The Flatheads are its near neighbors on a reservation they have occupied since 1891.

The 1922 equivalent of De Smet's establishment in 1841 of St. Mary's mission in the Bitter Root valley is the Mission of St. Ignatius and the Sisters of Charity of Providence at St. Ignatius in the present Flathead reservation lying between Missoula and Flathead lake. The original St. Mary's in the Bitter Root valley is now Stevensville. There stands St. Mary's church, built by Father Anthony Ravalli in 1866. This "kind, good priest and friend of all mankind" arrived at the mission in 1845 and for forty years ministered to all alike, Indian and white man, Roman Catholic and Protestant. His tombstone stands in the cemetery back of St. Mary's and Ravalli, a town in the Jocko valley, bears his name.

CUTE KNITTED OUTERWEAR; FUR TRIMMED FALL COATS

NOW that the big stores and children's specialty outfitting shops carry a vast assortment of "comfy" knitted woolen togs for infants and wee tots, the problem of going "a-huntin' to get a rabbit skin to wrap the baby in" has been reduced to a minimum.

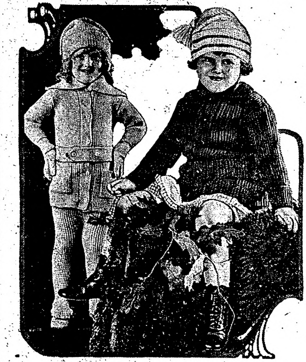
In this day and generation mother seeks the infant or junior department of her "nearest dealer," where is spread before her an array of knitted outergarments suited to every requirement of every child. Already the falling leaves hint of cool days to come and the subject of providing the children with protective outdoor garments is a timely one.

From the standpoint of appearance or of practicability there is nothing to compare with knitted goods for children. Consider, for instance, the little white wool infant set shown in the illustration. It is adjustable to every change of the thermometer. Consisting as it does of four pieces it may be worn in part or entirely. The snug-fitting leggings have a slip-cord at waist with tassels; the sweater coat is supplied with a protecting collar, four white buttons down the front, one at neck; pockets (the pride of childhood); cap with flap each side and white pearl button; pair of mittens.

For the child who spends most of its time outdoors the sweater is indispensable, and let it be of the sturdy sort, knit substantially, to withstand wear and tear. The happy looking little girl in the picture is wearing just such a one. It is a scarlet sweater coat with collar and belt fastened with one red button in front, six red buttons down the front and one under collar fastened with the loop. The becoming hood is knitted in fine stitch, with two colorful stripes and white tassel on short cord, matched to the stripes.

A very clever idea also is the plaited knit cape for little girls. Another article obtainable in the junior department is a knitted tam o' shanter with its top of white wool in finger stitch.

A very handsome four-piece set is knitted in a striped stitch effect and it has a brush lining. Silk braid binds the leggings. The brushed lining appears in the reverse of the cap, the collar and the top of the mittens.



"Comfy" Knitted Woolen Togs.

The question of the coat is uppermost in many a fair head, for the time has come to buy one. A feast is spread for the benefit of every woman who must make a choice this fall; but the melancholy days are come when many a coat aspires to associate with beautiful, sumptuous furs; they are higher priced and far more becoming than they would be otherwise. Women are finding them irresistible and there are several good reasons for buying as fine a garment as the purse allows.

The soft-faced cloths are rich and lustrous and they invite the use of furs in their trimmings. There seems to be an abundance of skins, but the handling of furs takes much time and this is what runs into money. Most furs are long-lived and serve their wearers for several years, so that they pay for themselves in the end.

Two handsome coats, as shown in the picture, are typical of the season's offerings. Both of them employ a soft, lustrous pile-fabric for the body of the garment, both of them are straight-hanging and each has a strap-girdle of self material. They have a look of warmth and luxurious softness, which appears to be the aim of every coat designer this year. The coat at the left is a lovely wood-brown color, with collar and cuffs of silky, dark brown fox fur. Long silk cords, ending in tassels, fall from ornaments of silk at the left side.

A rich and glossy black, in the coat at the right, measures up to the beauty of the black caracul fur that adorns it. It has wide cuffs and full collar of the fur and squares of it make a checkerboard design that almost covers the skirt portion of the garment. Crepe de chine is a favorite material for lining coats of this kind.

Usually linings are in plain colors, and there is a fad for using two or even three colors, set together with a soft, fancy braid. A light color at the top of the garment, will never "crack" or darken a light dress, and a dark color on the lower half of the coat does not show soil which is apt to gether there.

HARD OF HEARING

A farmer's wife had given a party. During the night two farmhands who lived in the house grew hungry for the good things in the pantry. Rising from bed, they crept downstairs, but unfortunately the mistress heard them. One heard her coming and escaped; the other was caught.

Afterward the more fortunate one remarked to the unlucky one: "Didn't you 'ear 'er comin', Bill?"

"'Oow could I?" he replied, "with me mouth full of meat!"—Judge.

CONFECTION LIKED IN CHINA

Made From Rice and Barley Sprouts, It Is a Candy of Remarkably Mild Sweetness.

The favorite candy of the Chinese adult is a white chewing candy called "ma t'ang," writes H. K. Richardson, in Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. This very popular confection is made from a rice sugar which, on account of the method of its manufacture, is sometimes called barley sugar.

The manufacture of this sugar is essentially a home and small-shop industry. It is prepared by steeping 130 catties of dry rice in hot water and mixing the mash with nine catties of barley sprouts, which are produced by the germination of dry barley for six to eight days in warm water. The mash is mixed in a covered tub with a sieve bottom, which is placed over a pot of boiling water and steamed for 18 hours. The extracted material trickles down into the pot and is concentrated as the water evaporates. At the end of 18 hours the concentrated sirup weighs 80 to 100 catties. This sirup is boiled down and pulled to form a white candy.

The process is usually carried on "from supper to breakfast," according to the Chinese. This is from 3 p. m. to 9 a. m. During the night only a little attention is needed to keep the fire going. The yield is usually three pounds of heavy sirup to four pounds of rice. The material is very similar to the Japanese "me zu amee" and is a delightful candy of much milder sweetness than cane sugar candy.

TO HELP OUT BACHELORS

Idea of Divorce-Court Judge Might Work, but Then, There Is Old Human Nature.

A divorce-court judge said the other day that he thought he'd write a guide for bachelors—a book of "Don'ts" for those who contemplated marriage. Then he rattled off:

"Don't marry a girl who dresses in a slovenly 'artistic' manner. As housekeepers such girls are awful. Their homes—hog-pens!

"Don't marry an intensely religious girl. Hers is a passionate, unbalanced nature. She may turn Holy Roller and run off with the high priest.

"Don't marry a heavily scented girl. She has queer ideas and may come to a bad end.

"Don't marry a girl who is overmodest, always protesting against one-piece bathing suits, bareback gowns and so forth. Such girls are not to be trusted."—Detroit Freee Press.

SPARK-MAKING ALLOY

It is said that when 70 per cent of cerium is alloyed with 30 per cent of iron the metal thus produced possesses the remarkable property of giving off a shower of sparks when struck lightly by a steel wheel.

This substance has been employed for making automatic igniters, for gas-burners or miners' acetylene lamps, and for other purposes. It has been proposed to utilize it for igniting motor headlights, and even as a substitute for electric ignition in the cylinders. When tried in this relation, however, it has been found that the efficacy of the alloy falls off with use. The cause of this loss of efficacy is suspected to be the presence of oil and dust.—Washington Star.

DEATH DEFEATS MINERS' RESCUE

Argonaut Mine Yields 47 Decomposed Corpses Despite Efforts of Rescuers.

MEN DID NOT SUFFER

Three Attempts at Bulkhead Building Futile in Face of Rapid Approach of Deadly Carbon Gasses Through Lower Levels.

Jackson, Cal.—All 47 of the miners entombed in the Argonaut mine August 27, are dead, it was announced officially, early this week. A note found on one of the bodies indicated that all men had died within five hours of the beginning of the fire, August 27, officials said.

All the miners were found behind the second of two bulkheads they had built in the crosscut 4,350 feet down in the Argonaut mine.

Federal Official Finds Bodies.

Byron M. Pickard, chief of the federal bureau of mines for this district, was the first man to go behind the bulkhead and discovered the bodies.

Pickard, on an earlier exploration behind this bulkhead, had counted 42 bodies and expressed the belief then that there were others there.

The note read as follows:

"3 A. M.—gas bad." The same note bore a scrawled figure "4" apparently indicating the same man had attempted to leave word for those who might come after of the condition of the mine at that hour.

Lives Taken in Few Hours.

Mine officials declared that the condition of the crosscut behind the bulkhead was such that life could not have been sustained there by the entombed men for more than five hours.

The bodies were found piled one on top of another and decomposition had progressed so far that identification would be impossible, Pickard reported.

The mine officials said that the actions of the men, as evidenced by the bulkheads they built and other matters, indicated they had died within five hours after being entombed.

Mute Evidence of Fight.

The officials declared the mute evidence of the men's struggles showed they were 47 of the most cool-headed men imaginable.

Sixteen of the entrapped miners removed their clothing to provide material for stuffing the cracks in the wooden barrier, hastily constructed, which was found early this evening.

Then another barrier was built of rock, earth and debris. However, the gas and fumes from the fire apparently seeped through the first bulkhead and the men fled from the site where they were building the second one, to start a third farther on.

Third Attempt Made.

This third attempt to wall off the death dealing gas was made at the end of the 435-foot crosscut in the Argonaut, but the fact that only a bare start was made at it, proved, the mine officials said, that the deadly carbon monoxide and the suffocating carbon dioxide had reached it and performed their fatal offices before the 47 unfortunates could raise even an excuse for a barrier.

Mine officials said that death had come to the entombed men painlessly. The gases, they said, would produce first a lethargy, then a coma, and finally, death.

Jackson as a whole took the tragic news calmly and courageously.

CANADA ANSWERS WAR CALL

Parliament to Act on British Call for Aid in Near East.

Vancouver, B. C.—British naval reservists, residents here, are being called up for service, it has been stated, orders having been received from London for them to report at once.

Military officers who have served in Mesopotamia and the Near East are reported to have received word to hold themselves in readiness to proceed overseas.

Ottawa—The reply of the Dominion government to the British government, following a cabinet meeting which lasted many hours, was to the effect that public opinion in Canada would demand authority from parliament as a necessary preliminary to the despatch of a contingent of troops to participate in eventualities in the Near East.

London—The British government, despite outcries in the French and Italian press, showed no signs of altering its avowed policy of defending the freedom of the Dardanelles against the Turkish nationalists.

Four Dead Under Backing Freight.

Moorhead, Minn.—Swerving his car as he started across the Great Northern tracks at a Moorhead crossing, A. O. Haroldson, 45, of Twin Valley, Minn., drove his Ford car, carrying himself, wife and three children under the wheels of a backing freight train, resulting in instant death to himself and two children, injuries to his wife which later proved fatal, and serious, if not fatal, injuries to his third child. It was an hour and a half before the mangled bodies were released from the wreckage.

STRIKE OFF ON 3 ROADS

Four Big Roads Refuse Settlement Except to Individuals.

Minneapolis—Resumption of normal activity on railroads of the northwest is practically at hand, with shipping moving in gretaer quantities than at a corresponding period in 1921, and every indication pointing to a quick return to generally prosperous conditions, officials of lines centered in the twin cities said, following announcement of the agreement in Chicago, by which three northwest lines take back shopmen.

Eight thousand striking shopmen on two railway divisions of the Omaha and the Northwestern, will be back at work and 7,000 shopmen of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul system will be re-employed, under the strike agreement.

Shops of the Omaha and Northwestern will be at capacity within a month and probably much sooner, A. V. Trenholm, vicepresident in charge of operation for the Omaha, said. Settlement of the strike and return of employees to the lines will in no way affect the status of the new men, who will be retained and given equal consideration with the old employees who

400 PER CENT RISE CHARGED

Organization Representing 44 Flour Mills Send Protest to Hoover.

Minneapolis—Attempts to enjoin the lake coal priority orders will be made in federal court, Gov. Preus is told. Donald D. Conn, Minnesota coal representative in Washington, telegraphed this information but did not specify by whom the injunction is being sought.

Protesting vigorously against present coal prices being charged by the operators and wholesale distributors of coal, particularly screenings, the Southern Minnesota Mills, an organization representing 44 flour mills in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and South Dakota, sent resolutions, adopted at the annual meeting in Minneapolis, to Secretary Herbert Hoover and officials appointed for representation on state and federal fuel committees.

The resolutions charge that "the price of coal, particularly screenings, is four times the value, f. o. b. mines, as compared with the price in effect at the time the strike was called."

UNIONS REPLY TO CHARGE

Partial Settlement Said to Open Way to New Line of Proof.

Chicago—Preparations of additional counter evidence against that being submitted by the Attorney General's office before Judge James H. Wilkerson to make permanent the temporary injunction against officials of the railway employes' department, American Federation of Labor, were again started by the defense.

Conclusion of peace negotiations between the striking shopmen and a number of roads permits the introduction of evidence to refute the charges of conspiracy and sabotage.

Donald R. Richberg, defense attorney, began the preparation of the evidence which he expects to submit before the expiration time of the 10-day extension.

This evidence, he said, will show the real cause of the strike and be "ample proof" against the government charges.

Bonus Bill Up to President.

Washington—Congress has passed the soldiers' bonus bill along to President Harding. Prompt action by the Executive was anticipated, but opinion at the capitol as to whether he would veto or approve the measure still was divided. This question entered largely into the debate which preceded Senate adoption of the conference report, 36 to 17.

St. Peter Asylum Riot Quelled.

St. Peter, Minn.—An attempted wholesale jail delivery in the criminal ward at the St. Peter state insane hospital was frustrated after two patients had slugged the cook, compelled five nurse attendants to saw the bars of the door and held a posse of 150 men at bay for nearly three hours. They finally surrendered after the bars of the door had been partly cut by the attendants. A company of National Guards forced the surrender after overawing the inmates by a display of force.

BRITISH EMPIRE CALLED TO ARMS

Holy War Threatened As Turks March on Constantinople, Dominions Asked for Help.

London—Threat of a holy war was met by the government with a call to all British colonies to join in keeping the armies of Mustapha Kemal beyond the frontiers of the neutral zone by sending contingents of their own troops.

The Straits of the Dardanelles are to be kept open and free at all cost.

France and Italy have agreed to join the defense and Britain is reported to have invited Rumania, Serbia and Greece to participate.

Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa will be asked to once more throw their suport into battle, if necessary, against a common foe. An army of 1,000,000 will be raised by these allies.

The French Mediterranean fleet has been instructed to hold itself in readiness for immediate sailing orders to the Dardanelles.

Against this Allied gathering force the Ottoman commander is lining up Moslems and negotiating with Soviet Russia and perhaps Bulgaria.

Word was received here that all the Arab speaking countries will take the first clash of Moslem arms with those of Britain as a signal to rise and strike for independence.

Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Mesopotamia and Arabia will revolt and proclaim complete independence and probably aid the Turks in their war with Britain, if one comes.

Great Britain has thrown all her cards on the table. More reinforcements were ordered to the neutral zone east of Constantinople.

The British action is more than a defense against Mustapha Kemal. It is her utmost effort to obtain effective and permanent freedom of the straits. Lloyd George has virtually called for another crusade against the Moslems.

LABOR HALTS WORK RETURN

Union Men, Strikebreakers Battle in C. M. & St. P. Roundhouse.

Chicago—Clashes between union and non-union workers, squabbles over the terms of the Baltimore peace plan, have halted the return of striking shopmen to work in the shops here of the Cihcago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the North Western railroads.

The demands of returning strikers for concessions which it was said were not provided for in the peace agreement were blamed for the disorders.

The most serious demonstration was staged by several hundred men at the Setonville round house of the St. Paul where the strikers, arriving with their lunch kits and overalls, were declared to have set upon non-union workers and refused to work with them. A free for all fight resulted in which several persons were injured.

While no violence was reported in any of the Chicago & North Western shops, only a handful of strikers were back at work. Some of these left after getting into altercations with the non-union workers.

U. S. HANDS OFF IN EAST

Washington Points to Absence of Alliances in War Zone.

Washington—The Near Eastern situation is being watched with closest interest by government officials, although it is emphasized that the United States is not involved beyond caring for its citizens and their interests.

Official circles say that, although the United States is interested in the freedom of the Straits, it has not taken any part in the territorial or boundary settlements in the Near East—has not been at war with Turkey and is not a party to the negotiations which resulted in the signature of the peace treaty at Sevres in August, 1920.

It is understood that the American government has assumed no commitments and entered into no understanding which will involve it in any way in territorial readjustments, if the Turks continue successful.

Meanwhile the sufferings of Americans in Smyrna or in the territory swept by the Turko-Greek hostilities is sufficiently alarming.

The department was able to account for 750 refugees who had received American aid, of whom at least the 150 previously reported to have arrived at Athens are Americans.

The great majority of the 750 refugees accounted for, officials believed, were naturalized Americans and doing business on a permanent basis in Smyrna and vicinity. They were understood to have lost every means of livelihood and to be suffering for want of food and clothing.

Teller Admits He Hid $6,300.

Minneapolis—Robert Mueller, teller at the First National, in jail charged with embezzlement of $2,100, in an alleged confession to John Faltico, is said to have admitted that he has $6,300 "planted" with a girl in Winona.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Thief River Falls—Samuel T. Johnson, 82 years old, veteran of the civil war, and pioneer in this section, is dead at the family home here.

Chisholm—Three banks of Chisholm served notice on the city council that they would immediately discontinue purchasing village warrants. Funds of the city are near the point of exhaustion.

Crookston—Moorhead was selected as the 1923 meeting place of the ninth district convention of the Degree of Honor lodge at the close of its annual meeting here. Two hundred delegates represented Crookston, Walker, Cass Lake, Moorhead, Breckenridge, Bemidji and Fergus Falls lodges were present.

Crookston—Chicken owners in the river section of Crookston are in quandary. Mink, they declare, are nightly raiding their chicken coops and they are helpless to stop them as the mink are protected by the state game laws.

Luverne—The engine on an ensilage cutter on the farm of Lee English, near here, exploded, hurling parts of the machine more than 200 feet, several of them going through the wall of a concrete silo.

Winona—Chester Pease, 38 years old, serving in the county jail for robbery, has been released and will become an evangelist, delivering his first sermon here next week. He was married in jail last May to Miss Harriet Stahman, Winona school teacher.

Duluth—A general questionaire addresed to Duluth wood yards shows them all oversold. The demand for stove wood, which in normal times, shows a falling off during end of the summer, now shows a heavy increase over all previous years.

Moorhead—Mrs. C. J. Nye and her daughter, Verna, were badly bruised when their car was struck by another on a country road. The driver of the other car is being sought. He refused Mrs. Nye's pleas for medical aid, and drove off.

Pipestone—Carl A. Amundson of Fergus Falls has purchased the Royal hotel here and has taken charge. Mr. Amundson obtained the property from W. A. Barkley of Fergus Falls.

Northfield—Registration figures, incomplete, show an enrollment of 712 students at Carleton college, there being 349 men and 363 women. Registration is continuing.

Fergus Falls—The St. Cloud Crushed Stone company filed a bankruptcy petition in the United States court here today, placing its assets at $80,015.64, of which $78,111.64 is in buildings and machinery, and its liabilities at $164,144.35. Its heaviest creditor is the First National bank of St. Cloud, to which it owes $13,228.

Fairmont—The Fairmont creamery claims the 1922 canning record for Minnesota. The creamery reports an output this year of 40,000 cases of peas and 75,000 cases of corn.

Red Wing—Charles J. Nelson, flagman for the Milwaukee railroad for the past 10 years, dropped dead in his shanty at a crossing here just after flagging a train.

St. Cloud—The city council has authorized the city attorney to prepare an amendment to the taxi ordinance dropping the property damage insurance, but retaining the personal liability feature. The ordinance, as now proposed, will require taxi operators to take out insurance costing $125 yearly, with limits of $5,000 and $10,000.

Owatonna—The Owatonna fuel commission has been formed here, as the result of appointments made by Mayor W. C. Zamboni with F. W. Sawyer as chairman and V. F. Leary as secretary. The commission is conducting a survey of fuel wood resources in Steele county.

St. Cloud—A delegation of 1,000 from the twin cities is expected to attend the state convention of the Federation of German Catholic societies of this city Sept. 24, 25, and 26. Seven societies from St. Paul are planning on coming in a body.

St. Paul—Immigrants to Minnesota and adjacent states shipped thirty-five carloads of livestock, poultry, machinery and household goods through the Minnesota transfer during the month of August, as reported by Oscar H. Smith, State Commissioner of Immigration. Thirteen of the thirty-five carloads were destined to northern Minnesota points, practically all being owned by settlers moving from Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska to new homes in this state. Due to the fact that farmers in the middle west and northwest states are busy completing grain threshing and commencing fall work, August is classed as one of the "low-ebb" months of the year in the matter of moving settlers to new locations, and Mr. Smith looks for an increase in the number coming to Minnesota during September and October.

Redwood Falls—As a feature attraction for the Ramsey state park here, the park board has secured the bulkhead of the battleship Minnesota, and it will be received here soon and mounted on a concrete base inside the main entrance of the park.

Grand Rapids—At a meeting of the county commissioners a resolution was introduced to call for bids on the sale of $110,000 in reimbursement bonds. These bonds are to be sold by Itasca county on Oct. 3, and the funds turned over to the county for use in permanently improving the Babcock highways in this county.

Windom—Dr. A. M. Wright has been bound over to the district court in $5,000 bonds on the charge of having caused the death of Mrs. G. S. Redding by hitting her with his automobile.

Worthington—Fire starting from sparks from a threshing machine engine destroyed six grain stacks on the farm of Rev. J. A. Eddy.

Maynard—Water for drinking and cooking purposes is getting more scarce every day in this locality as the wells are giving out one after another, on account of the long continued drouth.

Crookston—Will Ripelle, aged 30, a farmer residing near here, was killed when he fell under the wheels of a Great Northern freight train while attempting to catch a ride. Ripelle's body was cut in two.

Thief River Falls—Orton Olson of this city, last year's winner of first and sweepstakes prizes on wheat at the Crookston farm crop show, has been awarded the blue ribbon prize on wheat at the Central Fair and Exposition, at Aurora, Ill.

Calumet—William Buchanan, of Calumet, committed suicide by shooting after coming home from a dance at 3 a. m. Despondency, brought on by the death of his wife and infant child several months ago is said to have been the cause.

Minneapolis — Shooing his pet chickens away from danger, Lyman Spoffard, aged 72, stepped in front of a streetcar and was fatally injured in sight of his invalid wife.

Canby—The Yellow Medicine county fair association has invited every person who lived within 10 miles of Canby through the famous deep snow winter of 1880-1881, to attend the fair on Sept. 16 as guests of the fair management.

St. Cloud—Eighty delegates representing 11 counties, organized the Sixth District Liberty league at a meeting here. The object is to secure legislation for the legal manufacture of light wines and beer.

Crookston—Members of the fourth district Minnesota Creamery Operators, will meet in this city Thursday, Sept. 21. The district embraces a number of the counties of this section of the state.

Winona—One man was shot, another was injured with a club, and three men, said to be strikers, were arrested here for an alleged attempt to interfere with the federal injunction by rioting.

Marshall—Lockjaw resulting from a slight injury on one of his heels, caused the death of Eugene Case, aged 17, of this city.

Milaca—The J. A. McDonald Construction company of Minneapolis was awarded the contract for the erection of the new Mille Lacs county courthouse here. The cost will be approximately $150,000.

Minneapolis—Alonzo P. Grace, instructor in anthropology and Americanization worker at the University of Minnesota, has resigned to take a position as head of the social science department of Forestry state normal of North Dakota, he said.

Duluth—Wallace Kurki, aged 4, was run down and killed by an automobile driven by T. M. Perry. Perry was arrested, but later released.

Waterville—The Le Sueur County Baseball league has completed its schedule with the American Legion team of Waterville, winning the pennant.

Ihlen—In order to obtain the services of a resident physician, 200 people signed an agreement to pay a physician $12 a year each. Dr. Lee of Egan, S. D., will undertake the work.

St. Cloud—Mayor W. W. Matson, acting for the conservation of coal, has launched a campaign of publicity through the various local civic organizations. All residents of the city are urged to use as little coal as possible.

St. Cloud—The 21 year search of a mother for the baby snatched from her by her husband has been ended. Through the Red Cross of Pawnee, Okla., Mrs. Harry Inglearengel has found her son, now owner of oil lands in Oklahoma and wealthy.

Pipestone—Five farm homes in one neighborhood, northwest of Pipestone, were ransacked by thieves while members of the family were in this city shopping. In each instance the robbers took only the best wearing apparel.

Winona—Recently when Miss Polzin began to play the piano at her home, a reptile known as a "pilot" rattlesnake crawled out from behind the instrument. Miss Polzin escaped without being bitten.

Stillwater—Residents of South Stillwater are conducting a mail ballot to decide whether to change the name of the village, the desire being to get away from the name "Stillwater." The name Andersenville is popular.

Mountain Lake—This town has no jail but a large refrigerator in a meat market has been made to serve the purpose. Its latest occupant was a Mankato salesman who was placed in the refrigerator to sober up and kept there until his friends produced $40 to settle for damages.

Winona—A reduction in Winona's gas rates from $1.79 to $1.71 per thousand cubic feet has been announced, effective for the next four months.

Duluth—Eight coal-carrying vessels arrived at Duluth and Superior docks between 7 p. m. Saturday and 8 p. m. Sunday, and reports have been received that 50 boats have been chartered to bring coal from Lake Erie ports to the head of the lakes, 26 of which are said to be on the way with cargoes.

Barnum—J. P. Thompson, for 12 years owner and editor of the Barnum Herald, has sold the plant to George E. Sloan, of the Enterprise, at Wahkon, Minn. The latter will move here to take charge of the Herald and Mr. Thompson will go into the chicken raising business.

MARKET TREND FIRMER

Wheat Grows Stronger With War Talk.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended September 15, 1922.

GRAIN: Grain prices were firm the first half of week but declined later and closed at net losses. Principal market factors were: Slow cash and export demand, lack of support, increase in visible supply, and hedging pressure. Chicago December wheat down 3c, Chicago December corn down 2c. Wheat and corn lower on the 14th on partial settlement of rail strike, decline in Liverpool, and bearish news from Canadian Northwest. Fair export demand. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.03; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.01; No. 2 mixed corn 63c; No. 2 yellow corn 63c; No. 3 white oats 36c. Average farm prices: No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa 50c; No. 2 hard winter wheat in central Kansas 85c. Closing future prices: Chicago December wheat 99⅜c; Chicago December corn 56⅛c; Minneapolis December wheat $1.00⅞; Kansas City December wheat 93⅛c; Winnipeg December wheat 91⅜c.

DAIRY PRODUCTS: Butter market steady to firm for the week. Hot weather has continued to cut down production and has reduced percentage of fancy grades in current arrivals. Storage goods beginning to move in a small way. Closing prices 92 score butter: New York 39½c; Chicago 38½c; Cheese markets steady with only fair volume of trading. Buyers continue to hold off more or less at present prices. Cheese prices at Wisconsin primary markets Sept. 13th: Twins 19½c; Daisies 20¼c; Double Daisies 20c; Young Americas 20c; Leghorns 20c; Square Prints 22c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: Chicago hog prices continued their upward movement, advances ranging from 25 to 40c being scored. Cattle prices also showed some improvement over those of a week ago. Beef steers advanced 20 to 60c and butcher cows and heifers 10 to 20c. Feeder steers steady to 25c up while veal calves were 25c lower to 75c up. Sheep and lamb prices improved materially, fat lambs ranging from $1 to $1.10. Feeding lambs 25 to 50c; yearlings 75 to 90c and fat ewes 25 to 75c higher per 100 lbs. On Sept. 14th hogs on the Chicago market were steady to 10c higher. Beef steers and butcher cows and heifers 10 to 15c higher with spots up more, bulls and veal calves largely 25c higher and stockers and feeders firm. Fat lambs 25 to 50c higher and fat sheep strong to 25c higher. Sept. 14th Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $9.90; bulk of sales $7.50 to $9.80. Medium and good beef steers $7.75 to $10.70. Butcher cows and heifers $3.85-9.50; feeder steers $5.50-8.25; light and medium weight veal calves $11.50-13.50; fat lambs $12.75-14; feeding lambs $11.75-13.25; yearlings $9-11.75; fat ewes $3.75-7. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Sept. 8th were: Cattle and calves 115,547; hogs 6,086; sheep 64,229. Market declines in the price of medium grade lamb was the outstanding feature of the week's trading in eastern wholesale fresh meat markets. Beef was 50c lower to $1 higher. Veal firm to $1 higher; good grade lamb steady to $1 higher while mutton ranged from $1 higher on good grade to $2 lower on medium grade. Pork loins firm to $2 higher. On Sept. 14th beef ranged from 50c lower at some markets to 50c higher at others; veal and pork generally steady to $1 lower; better grades lambs around $1 lower; other grades steady. Mutton generally steady. Sept. 14th prices good grade meats: Beef $15.50-18; veal $16-20; lamb $24-27; mutton $13-15.50.

Minneapolis Closing Cash Prices.

Spring wheat—No. 1 dark northern, 1.08@1.14; No. 1 northern, 1.05@1.13; No. 1 dark hard, 1.10@1.14; No. 1 hard, 1.00@1.07. No. 1 am. dur. 89c@94c; No. 1 durum, 81c@88c. Corn No. 2 yellow, 58c@59c. Oats No. 2 white, 32@34c. Barley, choice to fancy, 51@54c. Rye No. 2, 67c. Flaxseed No. 1 2.29@2.30.

South St. Paul Live Stock.

So. St. Paul—Steers, $5.25@11.00; veal calves, $3.25@10.00; cows and heifers, $5.75@6.75; hogs, $7.00@7.75; sheep and lambs, $7.00@11.50.

EGGS—Country receipts, rots out, per case, 8.10; No. 1 candled, good extras, free from rots, small dirties and checks out, per dozen, 30c; small, dirty and held stock, rots and leakers out, dozen 16c; checks, rots and leakers out, 15c; quotations on eggs include cases.

BUTTER—Extras, 37c; firsts, 33c; packing stock, fresh, sweet, 28c; stale goods, 5c; grease, 1c.

Firearms Banned at Ortonville.

Ortonville—Because much complaint has been made by citizens of the use of firearms in the city, an ordinance has been adopted by the city council stipulating a fine of not over $100 for persons found guilty of discharging firearms in the city limits.

Man Branded for Alleged Mistreatment

Chambersburg, Pa.—William Hollinsworth, a laborer of Waynesboro, who was taken out Wednesday night and mistreated by masked men robed in white like the Ku Klux Klan, and the letter "K" branded on each cheek and his forehead, is recovering from the attack.

According to Hollinsworth, he was branded because he is alleged to have cruelly treated his mother, who is in a poorhouse. When he denied being cruel to his mother he was beaten with sticks

Pertinent Pointers for Practical Farmers

DEMONSTRATION AGENTS FOR RURAL COMMUNITIES

Northern Counties Compose First Group to Organize.

County farm bureaus and the home demonstration section of the agricultural extension division of the state university recently set in operation a system whereby rural communities in a group of co-operating counties may have the service of a home demonstration agent who will give instruction in clothing, nutrition and home management projects. Beltrami, Hubbard, Itasca and Koochching counties compose the first group to be organized with Miss Clover Sabin, a graduate of the University of Minnesota, as home demonstration agent. The second group of counties, Blue Earth, Faribault, Steele and Watonwan, has been organized for this work with Miss Susan Hough as the joint home demonstration agent. A third group organization will soon be launched.

Five meetings will be given in each project by the home demonstration agent who will spend one week a month in each county. Enrollment will be limited to 12 in the clothing groups to allow time for personal attention, but any number of women may join a nutrition or home management class.

MISS CLOVER SABIN
Joint home demonstration agent in Beltrami, Hubbard, Itasca and Koochching counties.

"This type of service will fill an urgent need," said Miss Julia O. Newton, the Minnesota state leader of home demonstration agents. "Specialists from the state home demonstration office can serve only a limited number of counties each year, and there are always many more counties wanting a five months' project than can be taken care of by each semi-annual schedule. When a home project has been completed, there is always strong demand for a second series. The limited number of the state staff does not permit many counties to have a second worker. On the other hand, many of the counties most interested in developing the home side of the farm bureau are not financially able to employ a second full-time county extension worker—a home demonstration agent—but can with three other counties co-operate with the agricultural extension service in maintaining a part time worker."

"Rust Farm" Free of Barberry.

A 30-foot hedge of barberry bushes on a farm in Spink county, South Dakota, assisted in the development of so much black stem rust year by year that the farmstead became known locally as the "rust farm." Neighbors had often said they would not rent the farm because of its great susceptibility to rust. It was felt that the place would be hard to sell on this account.

But in 1912 the owners of the farm learned for the first time of the connection existing between the common barberry and black stem rust. The barberry hedge, which had been growing for 30 years, was dug and exterminated, and the rust has been noticeably lighter in later years.

To this information, which was brought to University Farm by the publicity service of State College at Brookings, South Dakota, is added the further fact that stem rust is now no worse on this farm than on farms adjacent and that with the digging of the barberry the nickname "rust farm" has disappeared.

BLIGHT INFECTION IS CHECKED BY BORDEAUX

Poison Mixture Combined With Bordeaux Has Been Efficient.

Bordeaux mixture and poison combined have this year demonstrated their efficacy in preventing or checking blight infection on potatoes, and in serving as a repellant to a certain extent for such insects as leaf hoppers and flea beetles.

R. C. Rose of University Farm, a plant pest specialist with the agricultural extension division of the university, gives the results of a demonstration of the use of paris green only and the combined use of bordeaux mixture and the poison. A field of potatoes belonging to Cyrus Engberg, a young farmer living near North Branch in Chisago county, had been planted with early Iowa seed treated with corrosive sublimate. The planting was done at the same stated time and all conditions were similar when spraying was started. The first eight rows were sprayed with paris green applied with a low pressure sprayer; the remainder of the field was sprayed with bordeaux and poison applied with a high pressure sprayer. Both sides of the field were sprayed the same number of times and as near the same time as possible.

A photograph taken of the field on Aug. 13, just after the fourth spray had been applied, shows the vines in the first eight rows to be dead, while the rest of the field is green and growing. All appearances indicated a good strong difference in yield in favor of the bordeaux plot.

"The point to note," says Mr. Rose, "is that the potatoes in the first eight rows were made and beyond all further development, while in the remainder of the field the potatoes were still growing."

Mr. Rose says that to get the best results from bordeaux mixture it should be applied as a very fine mist and must reach the under side of the leaves. To do this a three nozzle to the row high pressure machine must be used. Machines of this type cost around $200. If the farmer does not care to invest this amount of money in a machine for his own individual use, he can often band with other neighborhood potato growers and purchase a sprayer co-operatively for mutual use.

Store Vegetables for Winter Use.

Winter storing of late vegetables is an economy and is not difficult, especially for those who grow vegetables in sufficient quantities for the need of the family. Beets, late cabbage, carrots, celery, onions, parsnips, potatoes, salsify and turnips may be stored in their natural condition. Beans of various kinds, including limas, may be stored dry. The cellar, attic, large closets, or other parts of the dwelling can be used to good advantage in storing vegetables.

If permanent facilities are not available indoors, late root crops can be kept in outdoor pits or banks, the construction of which requires no cash outlay except for labor. A type of storage cellar much used in northern sections is built partly underground.

The conical pit is used commonly for such vegetables as potatoes, carrots, beets, turnips, salsify, parsnips and cabbage. Potatoes may be kept in the storage room in the basement or in the outdoor storage cellar for immediate use. Detailed information concerning the home storage of vegetables is given in Farmers Bulletin 879, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. Copies can be obtained on application to the Office of Publications, University Farm.

Alfalfa Area Increased.

The alfalfa growing area in Pipestone county has been increased the present season by about 150 acres, says A. E. Enerson, county agent. The bulk of the seed used was Grimm. Alfalfa received a decided boost in Pipestone county during the hot dry season after it stood up in wonderful shape and furnished three cuttings of hay and an excellent hog pasture when used for that purpose. It is becoming the practice to give the hogs a larger alfalfa pasture than they need and to cut it for hay once or twice to keep it down. In this way the alfalfa is not pastured too closely and a fresh crop starts up immediately after each cutting.

A double boiler or an omelet pan saves heating the oven for warming rolls, biscuits or muffins and for crisping ready cooked cereals and potato chips.

American Farm Bureau

One of the most valuable services which the Michigan State Farm Bureau federation gives its members is through its seed department. The sorting, standardizing, grading and selection of the best seeds is handled in a separate department. Farmers are assured that the best seeds for their purpose are available. This picture shows the standard sacks of timothy, alfalfa and oats ready for distribution.

WORK FOR IMPROVED VARIETIES OF WHEAT

Farm Bureaus in Ohio Join With Seed Association and Millers for Higher Qualities.

Farm bureaus in a number of counties in Ohio have been working with the Ohio Seed Improvement association for some time in the improvement of their varieties of wheat. Now they are joining with millers in promoting these same wheats and also to improve flour milled from Ohio wheats.

Those in this work have been endeavoring to get the farmers to grow Trumbull, Portage, Gladden and other improved wheats from the standpoint of increased yield per acre. Experiments recently completed have proven that these wheats are superior in milling qualities to the common wheats grown in Ohio. Millers in a number of sections are willing to try out these wheats and are paying a premium for improved wheats because of the better milling qualities. Farmers' elevators are keeping these wheats separated from common wheats so that they can sell in carload lots. A large quantity of improved variety wheat that failed to pass certification standards for seed purposes are available for this purpose this year.

Bread Made From Two Kinds of Ohio Wheat Showing the Difference in Quality—Loaves on Left Made From Trumbull Wheat.

On a number of the "wheatfield tours" boosting improved seed wheat, samples of bread from flour made from different kinds of wheats were passed around among those present. In all cases they agreed that the flour from the improved wheats made the best bread. In one cooperative experiment, women who were leaders in projects in their respective townships were called in for a demonstration. Eight different women made bread from two kinds of flour—that made from Trumbull and that made from Red Wave wheat. In each case the bread made from Trumbull wheat flour was superior.

SAME ORGANIZATION FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Directors of Indiana Federation Believe Working Together Is Necessary.

The directors of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations realize that the organization can never fulfill the possibilities that lie before it without the support and cooperation of the farm women. The close partnership existing between the farm home and the farming business makes a working together absolutely necessary if the full value of the organization is to be realized. As set forth in the constitution of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' associations, it is the purpose of the association to protect the economic, business, educational, legislative and social interests of the farmers of the state, and when these phases of the work are being considered, it necessarily involves the activities of the farm women. The Indiana directors believe that it is not necessary to have a separate organization, duplication of officers, or anything of that kind, but merely the united effort of farm men and women in the same organization.

In Indiana it has been arranged so that a farmer's wife or daughter, where there is already one fully paid up member in the family, may become a member of the local township, county, state and national organization with the payment of $2.50 annually. This fee is divided up with $1 for the county or township, $1 for the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations and 50 cents for the American Farm bureau. This plan of organization was worked out at a state meeting of farm women held in Indianapolis, with the recommendations that a committee of farm women, one representing each of the ten federation districts, be selected to suggest such additions to the progress of work of the state organization as would take in the interests of the farmer from all angles, as outlined above, in a way that would enlist the interest and co-operation of the entire community. This committee of ten in their recommendations provided for the increased interest in social activities of the community with a special educational and health program.

Although the total enrollment of farm women members in the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations has not reached large numbers, as yet, still the interest is growing rapidly and where aroused to the needs and conditions, they are willing to give their time and talents along with the men, to establishing an organization whose object is to insure a more permanent, stabilized and profitable agriculture for the generations to come, which means the essentials for the establishment of home and community life of the highest type.

FIGHT TAX-FREE SECURITIES

Nothing but Havens for Wealthy Who Wish to Escape Paying Their Proportion.

"Tax-free securities are nothing more or less than havens for the rich who wish to invest their money and escape paying their proportion of the expenses of the government," said H. C. McKenzie, tax expert of the American Farm Bureau federation, recently commenting upon the house resolution introduced by Representative Green of Iowa which would do away with all tax-free federal bonds. "People with large incomes who formerly lent large sums on farm mortgages have entirely retired from this field of investment owing to the fact that a 5 per cent tax-free bond will give them as much income as the income from a 10 per cent taxable mortgage.

"The annual loss in taxes to the federal government is at least $600,000,000 per year, according to Professor Seligman of Columbia university. In addition states having income tax laws lose a very large amount. The net result is to increase the taxes on all other property. The last report of the New York state tax commission shows that while 25 per cent of the incomes of the people of the state comes from real property, 70 per cent of the taxes are paid from this source."

POULTRY

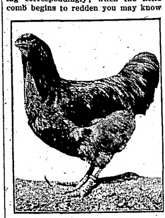
CORRECT TIME TO CAPONIZE

Impossible to Determine by Age as All Breeds Do Not Develop Alike—Watch Comb.

This is a question asked more frequently than any other by novices. It is a very important question, and the answer should be so simple that anyone could understand.

It is impossible to tell the best time for caponizing by the age, because all breeds do not develop alike; neither do birds of the same breed and hatch; some will be small of body with large comb and wattle developments, while others will show very little comb and be large and vigorous.

With any breed when the comb and wattles begin to grow you may know that the reproductive organs are growing correspondingly; when the little comb begins to redden you may know that the organs are receiving more blood for their very rapid growth; as they receive more blood the danger of an operation is greater, for the artery carrying the blood to the testicle is larger and in more danger of being ruptured.



A Well-Developed Capon.

Therefore, if you wish to operate at the perfect time watch the growth of the comb and wattles; when they are just "showing red" is the best and proper time; then there will be little danger to the life of the bird, less pain and no "setback" to speak of; while if you wait until the comb is bright red and the wattles hang considerably there will be more danger of death and more "slips."

EARLY HATCHED FOWLS BEST

Pullets Mature So That They Begin to Lay in Fall When Fresh Egg Supply Is Low.

Every fall hens take a vacation. In doing so they have very important business on hand. Typically feminine by nature, they insist upon having a new dress each fall. During their vacation they are engaged in shedding their old plumage and in growing new, and their energy is so occupied in this way that they lay few or no eggs. The process of molt or changing their plumage takes at least three months on the average, and it is due to this three months' vacation that the supply of fresh eggs is so scarce during the fall and winter. Early hatched pullets mature so that they begin to lay in the fall and early winter, and it is upon these early hatched pullets that the poultry keeper must depend for his supply of eggs during the time the old hens are molting and resting from their labors as egg producers. So if you want eggs when the old hens have quit laying, be sure that you hatch early and have a nice bunch of early hatched pullets coming along to supply the eggs at that time.

MALES FAVOR SCRATCH FEED

Better Plan to Have Medium Sized Fowls Than Too Large, Especially for Breeding.

Cockerels usually eat more scratch feed and less mash than the pullets do. Feeds which develop a medium sized bird are better than to have the cockerels develop into too large roosters, especially those to be saved for breeding purposes.

POULTRY NOTES

As the chicks grow they need more room. It does not pay to let them crowd.

Two-year-old hens had better be sent to the market. They seldom pay for their feed if kept over the third season.

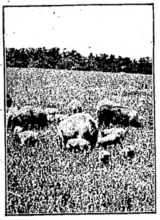
PLOW UP BARN LOTS YEARLY

Turning Over Soil Helps to Get Rid of Pests and Forage Makes It Profitable Job.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hog raisers may accomplish two desirable results by plowing up the barn lots at least once a year, says the United States Department of Agriculture. In the first place, hogs need good succulent pasture as much of the time as possible, and in the second place they need protection against internal parasites, such as roundworms, the eggs of which remain in the soil. Turning over the soil in the lots helps to get rid of the pests and the crop of forage makes it a profitable operation. In addition to providing cheap protein feed, pasture crops aid as a laxative and require the hogs to take a certain amount of exercise, which is necessary to breeding animals and growing pigs.

Rye is probably the best crop to use for fall, winter and spring pasture for hogs. Throughout the corn belt it may be sown from August 20 to about October 1, depending on the latitude. In warmer climates the crop may be put in at various times up to as late as December. By putting in successive plantings from two to four weeks apart it is possible to have fresh pasture all the time. Seeding for pasture should be much heavier than for a grain crop, from three to four bushels per acre on a good soil. Pasturing can probably begin six weeks after seeding, and may continue, if the rye is not covered with snow, until the following April.



Hogs Need Good Succulent Pasture.

WORMS CAUSE SERIOUS LOSS

Farmers Should Exercise Special Care Against Stomach Infection for Rest of Summer.

"All farmers who have sheep should exercise special care regarding stomach worm infection for the remainder of the summer," says A. E. Darlow, assistant professor of animal husbandry at Oklahoma A. and M. college.

"All spring lambs grown for the market should be rushed and put on the market at the first possible date. Stomach worms in connection with short pastures cause serious financial losses, especially with lambs.

"Wherever possible the sheep should have a change of pasture and where flockmasters are prepared to furnish a change of good pasture danger from stomach worms is small."

Aside from changing pasture and rushing lambs the best method of overcoming the stomach worm is drenching, Darlow says. Oklahoma station bulletin 137 by J. B. Guberlet gives directions for preparing and administering this drench.

VITAMINES IN YELLOW CORN

Experiments Conducted at Wisconsin University Show White Variety Is Inferior.

Feeding experiments at the University of Wisconsin indicate that white corn and skim milk when fed to pigs in drylot, is decidedly inferior to yellow corn and skim milk. Two pens fed on these two rations were cared for in other respects alike. None of the lot fed white corn did well; those fed yellow corn produced fairly good returns. Over half the pigs given the white corn were seriously affected and two or three died before the test was completed.

This experiment is in further proof of previous tests both at Wisconsin and elsewhere, indicating that in yellow corn there is a much larger percentage of vitamines. If these can be supplied through green crops, white corn, according to the experiments is satisfactory.

LEFT AT THE POST

A little girl was regarding with critical eye her newly arrived baby brother. The proud father, who was decidedly bald and hated any reference to the fact, was also gazing on his son and heir.

"What a pity my tiny brother hasn't got any hair," said the little girl.

"It'll grow beautifully later on," replied the nurse.

"But hasn't daddy's been a dreadfully long time starting!" exclaimed the little maid.

Never!

AND THE CROWD SCATTERED

Admiration of Lifelike Pose of Figures in Store Window Came to Sudden End.

The Woman was strolling leisurely along the street the other evening when she noticed a group of people standing outside the window of an antique furniture shop.

Joining them she saw seated on an old-fashioned grandmother's kind of sofa two wax figures—a woman and a man. Such lifelike figures! Chins tilted, ankles crossed, arms on the arms of the sofa, they sat, staring streetward.

"Fine work," sighed one young thing to her escort. "The woman's not so remarkable, but the man's just perfect, so true to life in every detail. If I could do one figure like that I'd—" but her voice was drowned by that of another young woman who, with a friend, had joined the crowd.

"If that isn't real looking! I suppose they did sit as far apart when that sofa was in style. Those figures look almost alive, don't they? You know that fellow looks like one that I saw in the automat at lunch hour this very day."

And then, all of a sudden, the wax man rose, stretched, smiled and waved his hand toward the admiring people.—Exchange.

THIS author is noted for his smashing effects and his vigorous, stand-up-and-fight characters. A hero who cannot battle and who, on the other hand, is not tender and lovable in his peaceful moments, has no place in a Randall Parrish story.

He is one of the most popular writers of stirring fiction in the country and one of the most industrious. For about a quarter of a century he has been turning out books with great regularity and the public is always ready to receive them. His best-liked tales are those of the West and those which center about mysteries and amateur detectives. A LEMON PIE

By LOUISE M. ADDELSON

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The catastrophe took place two years after the wedding, previous to which the little bark of domestic happiness, guided by the tiny god of love, had sailed smoothly and tranquilly over the sea of matrimony with never a glimpse of trouble.

The blow came suddenly. To have struck a real rock would have been misfortune enough, but to have one's life's happiness buried in an oozy, sticky mess of lemon meringue was galling. It lacked dignity.

The skipper, Lionel Strange, knew it. So did his little mate, Grace. They knew, too, after a while, that their predicament was the result of taking on a well-meaning but boat-rocking passenger where passengers have been, are, and always will be, taboo.

The passenger was Uncle Ed. Would it be possible for his dear nephew and niece to put him up for a while?

Captain and mate were agreeable to such a proposition. And though Grace had never met Uncle Ed, she already had cause to be grateful to him, since the house they lived in was his wedding gift, without which their marriage would have been indefinitely delayed. The response was so cordial that Uncle Ed arrived on the first steamer he could get.

He was a jovial old uncle, and they enjoyed him immensely—for a while.

He was finicky in the matter of food, and after a few sessions with Dora in the kitchen, Grace was ready to announce to the world that a rich bachelor uncle was not such a desirable acquisition as one might childishly imagine. Dora's culinary efforts, which had hitherto been more than passable, failed to please.

After a couple of weeks Grace began hoisting distress signals.

The climax came when Grace, finding that Uncle Ed was particularly fond of lemon pie, innocently volunteered to make one, thereby bringing on the great disaster. Grace studied lemon pie for a week before, with fear and trembling, she undertook the creation of one.

Lemon pies danced before her sleepless eyes at night, or filled her dreams when her overwrought nerves succumbed to slumber. She spent an entire morning mastering its intricacies. Nevertheless, the result, she felt, justified her efforts. It was a wonderful pie, all golden-brown and snowy white. Exhausted but triumphant, she bore it to the table, cut it, and served it.

Uncle Ed tasted his portion. The taste seemed a spark to his fiery tongue. He made a few pithy remarks on cooks in general and one cook in particular.

"Whoever made that pie," he finished, "should have been sent to jail for it."

Grace rose, her eyes glittering. "You—you—nasty—old—glutton!" she said, distinctly, and left the room.

Lionel followed, after a suitable interval. He found her packing her trunk.

"What's that for, Grace?" he asked, with husbandly authority.

"I'm leaving you, so you can enjoy Uncle Ed's society," she retorted. "It's too choice to divide with anybody."

"Grace, that's ridiculous," said Lionel, sternly. "I'm surprised at you! To make such a fuss over a criticism on your cooking!"

"It's ridiculous to make a fuss over such a disgusting uncle! A perfect pig of an uncle, whose chief worry is what to put in his stomach!"

"He's been awfully good to us. He's given us the house we live in."

"With him inside of it, I'm afraid I can't summon up any feeling of gratitude," she flung back.

"Well, you'll have to apologize to him."

"Lionel Strange," said Grace, her eyes flashing, "don't you talk to me like that! He'll apologize to me, and you, too, or else you'll stay here together, precious pair of relations that you are, and keep house by yourselves. I'll go to some place where the world doesn't center about a lemon pie!"

Slowly but surely the ship began to rattle into its sticky culinary mess. The captain tore his hair. It was very well to assert husbandly authority, but if Grace paid no attention to him—One couldn't see one's life wrecked in this foolish manner. Abstractedly he heard a train whistle in the distance. Grace threw a few more things into her trunk. Lionel caught her hands and drew her to him.

"Grace, darling, I'll see what can be done about Uncle Ed. I'll speak to him today. I'll—"

Grace, with outward reluctance and inward delight, forgave her husband, and the two went downstairs to seek Uncle Ed.

But Uncle Ed was nowhere to be found. Instead, a note was discovered on the library table, which told them that the departing train had carried Uncle Ed along with it, on his way to Africa. He apologized for being ill-tempered and ill-mannered, saying that life in the wilds made one unfit for civilized society. Would they please forgive a grumpy old bachelor who wished them nothing but happiness?

Lionel looked at Grace, and Grace looked at Lionel, who kissed her rapturously.

"Poor Uncle Ed!" said Grace. "I'm sorry!"

And the little ship, now clear of trouble, sailed on, with fair weather and a smooth sea.

SPUD CROP HAS STARTED MOVING

Market Conditions Not Of The Best. Weather Ideal For Digging

There is much activity in this locality at present in getting the potato crop dug and shipped. The yield is very good in most instances, tho' the crop is not going to turn out as was expected last spring.

Inactivity in many lines back east has lessened the demand for potatoes to such an extent that they are not commanding much of a price.

Those spuds that are carefully graded and sacked, are bringing a fair price, but semigraded stock is a drug on the market. Standard varieties such as Red River Ohios are now quoted at $1.20 per hundred weight at Chicago.

Deducting the cost of production, spraying, sacking and other labor incident to getting the spuds on board cars, leaves but a slim margin for the grower.

The growers farther south, who have made fortunes out of raising spuds, are those who have planted consistently year by year regardless of the market conditions.

There will, doubtedly, come an upward trend to the potato market but it may be to late for the growers to realize anything out of this years crop. The only system is to stay by the potato raising as it is bound to pay at least every other crop.

In a deal made this week, P. E Bergh purhased the interest held by A. J. Thowick in the hardware and furniture business established by them last spring, and known as the Bergh-Thorwick Hardware Co. Mr. Bergh intends to run the business alone until next spring when he will add more stock, and, if conditions warrant, will put on additional sales help Mr. Thorwick has no definate plan in view, but is making an auto trip to Hibbing and other Range towns to look over that section for a possible opening.

Save Seed Corn

The farmer who saves more than enough seed corn for his own planting next year should be able to despose of the surplus at good profit. Word received at University farm is that the corn has suffered in some localities from drouth, and home grown seed corn will be short in such districts.

A good market usually prevails for seed corn that has been properly gathered and which receives the right kind of care during the winter.

Seed corn selected this fall should be placed under shelter where there is free circulation of air about each ear. The air movement reduces the moisture content rapidly and lessens the danger of damage by rot, molds and freezing. After the seed ears have been well cured they may be stored with safety in much less space, provided the moisture content is not allowed to increase to any extent.

No Trace Found

No trace or clue has been found that might lead to capture of the bandits who wrecked the bank, shot three citizens and beat up another and got away with about $2000·00 in cash at Mentor last week. The robbers made a clean job of it and got a way without leaving any trace.

AMENDMENT NO I BUT INITIAL STEP

After Its Adoption Legislature Must Work Out Details Of Plan

Adoption of Amendment No. 1—Rural Credits—is but an initial step in the establishment of a state rural credit system for Minnesota.

The amendment itself, paves the way for legislative action later, as it will lift the constitutional limitation that now prevents the establishment of a farm loan system such as farmers have needed for years. If the amendment fails to receive the solid support of the rural districts, the legislature will remain powerless to take any steps whatsoever, for without that support adoption seems improbable.

While farm leaders obviously can not at this time state positively the intimate details the legislature may authorize after the amendment is adopted, they are agreed that the principle of amorization in the payment of loans must be recognized.

That is, loans must be made for 30 to 35 years with regular annual or semiannual installments, each installment to cover interest charges and a small payment on principal so as to retire the loan at the end of the period.

It is also agreed that tax payers shall not bear the cost of the system, necessary overhead being met by making the interest rate on loans enough higher than that paid on bonds to cover the expense.

Bumper Flax Crop

The largest yield of flax per acre reported thus far this year is from the Geo. Biskey farm east of town. The flax ran 22 bushels to the acre, and was exceptionally good quality. At present price, the gross return to Mr. Biskey is about $45.00 an acre.

NEAR EAST WAR ENDED IS REPORT

British Capitol Optimistic Over Outlook for Peaceful Settlement of Question.

ARMIES STILL ON MOVE

Prolonged Negotiations Expected Because of "Trading Propensities" of Ottoman Diplomats—Lord Curzon Smiles.

Constantinople—Maj. Gen. Frederick B. Maurice, who for a long period during the war was chief director of military operations at the war office in London and now is the military expert of a London newspaper, has said:

"The war is over. Kemal will accept the allied proposals with reservations. He is just as anxious for peace as the allies, but one must not take him too lightly.

"Kemal has an army of 180,000 that may be regarded as fighting troops. It would take a good deal to defeat the Kemalists, but I am so confident of peace that I am leaving for England in a few days."

London—Smiles, which wreathed Lord Curzon's face as he departed from the prime minister's offical residence in Downing street, after making a detailed report to the cabinet of his Paris mission, typified the general easing up of the tenseness in the Near East situation as viewed from the British capital.

Expect Prolonged Parley.

Everywhere in official circles here are expressions of relief that the war crises of last week have been replaced by old school diplomacy with such an old hand as Curzon directing British policy, and although there is no word that the allied note has yet been delivered to Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the nationalist leader, it is intimated that his refusal to come to terms is extremely unlikely.

The view is held in authoritative allied circles that immediate acceptance would be against Turkish "trading propensities." It is said said that the Turk in bargaining diplomatically or otherwise always wants a first offer made to him. Then he holds the other to it and angles for further concessions. The allies have made Kemal Pasha a definite offer of Constantinople, Thrace to the Maritza river and membership in the League of Nations, but it is believed that Kemal will probably reply with a demand for all of eastern Thrace and complete retirement of the British from the neutral zones before the Turks enter into a peace conference.

It is taken for granted, however, both in Paris and London that no reply will be forthcoming from the nationalist leader until he sees M. Franklin Boullon, the French envoy, who is expected to reach Smyrna this week.

Armies Still Moving.

That all danger is not past is evident from dispatches reporting a new Kemalist incursion in the Chanak zone, necessitating a further warning from the British commander there.

WHISKY HELD NEAR BORDER

Booze Shipped from Kentucky to Drug Firm in Vancouver Held by Agents.

Portal, N. D.—Six carloads of bonded whisky, each car containing 1,000 cases, in custody of the Soo line agent here, has been seized by federal prohibiton officers. The liquor is estimated to be worth more than a quarter million dollars. They are awaiting orders from the prohibition department at Washington, D. C., as to disposition of the liquor. One of the officers said there were three alternatives:

One, destruction of the liquor.

Two, return of the shipment to the Hill & Hill distilleries at Owensboro, Ky., the shippers.

Three, release of the liquor for undelayed shipment to its orignal destination, the National Bell Drug company at Vancouver, B. C.

Reinforcements for the two federal agents here have arrived. The men stationed here are F. C. Upton of Minot and R. R. Cruden of Fargo.

There is talk here that the shipments offer a regular "bonanza" for high jackers as the guard at the railroad yards would be entirely inadequate to deal with a band of booze runners who have an "ear to the ground" when liquor is being shipped.

Three carloads of the liquor arrived here early this week. The other three cars have been held for about a week. No formal action regarding the shipment has been taken by customs officials here, it was reported.

Lake Sailors Quit Jobs.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Nearly a score of sailors on ships sailing from Buffalo have quit, according to William Stark, business agent of the sailors' union of the Great Lakes. The men walked out, he said, in anticipation of a strike call which fixed October 1 as the date for a general walkout of sailors. Shipping men said that no boats had been crippled seriously. Mr. Stark predicted in the strike on Sunday. This will tie up the big fleet of the Lake Carriers' association.

U. S. FUEL HEAD NAMED

Conrad E. Spens, Vice-Pres, of B. & Q. Railway, Appointed

Washington—The fuel anti-profiteering bill and the Borah bill providing for a complete investigation of the coal industry, have been signed by President Harding.

The Cummins-Winslow antiprofiteering measure gives the interstate commerce commission sweeping powers to halt high prices by governing the allotment of coal cars.

The Borah act authorizes appointment of a fact finding commission which will investigate both the anthracite and bituminous industries and make recommendations to congress.

The bills were suggested to congress by President Harding in his industrial message in the height of the rail and coal strikes.

President Harding has appointed Conrad E. Spens, vicepresident in charge of traffic of the Burlington railroad, as federal fuel distributor under the antifuel profiteering act bill.

Spens has been granted a furlough from the railroad to undertake his new work. He was chief of the transportation division of the food administration in the war.

FORDNEY TARIFF BILL LAW

Greatest Contribution Toward Tariff Making in Century, Says President.

Washington—The Fordney-McCumber tariff bill has been signed by President Harding.

In the president's executive office the last legal step was taken to make the law effective at midnight Thursday.

This ends the long bitter fight which has been waged over the measure since congress first began work on it 18 months ago.

President Harding used two pens in affixing his signature. One was presented to Senator P. J. McCumber, North Dakota, chairman of the senate committee, and the other was given Representative J. W. Fordney, Michigan, who led the fight in the bill's behalf in the lower house.

FRENCH WOULD AVERT WAR

Turco-British Hostilities Have Become Alarming to France.

Paris—The French cabinet decided that in view of the refusal of the British to withdraw their forces from Chanak on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles, the efforts of the French government should be directed toward preventing war between Turkey and Great Britain. To this end it was agreed immediately to send Franklin Boullon to Smyrna.

There is considerable anxiety in the cabinet over the possibility of fighting between the British and the Turks, and in pursuance of his desire to play the role of mediator in the near east, Premier Poincare will exert all possible pressure to keep the Turks on the Asiatic side of the straits until peace terms are fixed.

FORD REEMPLOY 220,000 MEN

Official Telegram Calls All Employees Back to Work In Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—The plants of the Ford Motor company in the Detroit district, closed recently because of the coal situation, throwing 200,000 Ford workers out of work in different parts of the country, have reopened.

Orders for the reopening of the plants were telegraphed here by Edsel B. Ford, president of the motor company who is in Cincinnati. Mr. Ford said cancellation of the interstate commerce commission's service order No. 23 had made it possible again to obtain coal.

General C. C. Andrews is Dead.

St. Paul—Major General Christopher C. Andrews, Minnesota's only living general of volunteer troops in the Civil war, is dead. He was 93 years old. His health had been failing since the first of the year.

60,000 Tons Soft Coal Unloaded.

Duluth—From 60,000 to 70,000 tons of bituminous coal were unloaded at Duluth with 20 cargoes of soft coal, 150,000 tons, en route to the Head of the Lakes, according to reports to C. P. White, N. W. fuel distributor.

BRITAIN ACCEPTS TURKEYS' TERMS

Britain, France, Italy Concede East Thrace to Kemalists—Peace Made Conditional.

Paris—The Turkish claims to Eastern Thrace to the Maritza river, including Adrianople, were approved as peace terms that can be supported by France, Great Britain and Italy in a joint invitation sent to Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the Nationalist leader, to a peace conference to be held at Venice at the earliest possible date.

The Kemalists must agree in return not to enter the present neutral zone along the straits or make any crossing elsewhere, and must accept complete freedom of the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus, preferably under the League of Nations.

The British officials report that a Turkish force of 1,100 cavalry which crossed the border of the neutral zone at Chanak have retired following a meeting between the commanders of the Turkish and British forces. The Turks retired under the white flag.

The Turks stopped their advance when the British notified the Turkish commander that a further movement forward would cause the British to open fire.

The British forces are working day and night digging trenches at Chanak Beikos and other vital points in the Asiatic area.

Additional British troops have arriver in the Bosporus.

The reports from Smyrna say the quay, at Smyrna which has been thronged with thousands of refugees since the Turkish entry has finally been cleared. All refugees have been removed to concentration camps. The deportations to the interior are continuing.

SIX ARMY FLIERS KILLED

Bomber Plunges to Earth as 25,000 Witness Maneuvers in Midair.

Mineola, L. I.—Six army flyers were killed here when a giant Martin airplane fell from a nose dive to earth during a flying circus that ended war games at Mitchell flying field.

First Lieutenant Raymond Davis, regular army aviator, who piloted the machine, was among those killed. His body, like those of his companions was broken and charred when the plane hit the ground with both engines roaring and burst into flames.

Davis and two other men were instantly killed.

Major Weaver, commandant at the flying field announced officially that all six occupants of the plane were dead soon after removal.

Those dead besides Davis were Sergeant Thomas Sengfeld of the Sixth air park, Mineola, and Corporals Stivens, Nichols, Winters and Kane, all stationed at Mitchell field.

CELEBRATE DIVERSE FARMING

Whole State to Join in Reviewing Qaurter Century of Achieveemnt.

St. Paul—Minnesota is celebrating a quarter century of achievement in agriculture that has made it an inspiration to other states, so declared Gov. J. A. O. Preus when he proclaimed "Diversified Farming week," to focus the attention of the entire state upon its remarkable progress in diversified agriculture and to herald even more remarkable accomplishments.

"Diversified Farming week," Sept. 25 to Oct. 1, is now being observed in cities, towns, villages and the remotest farming community of the state.

Many counties have arranged street fairs, meetings and demonstrations as a tribute to men and women who began even in the last century to make Minnesota a diversified farming state, with its prosperity dependent not upon one major crop, but upon varied crops, dairying, and the raising of beef cattle, poultry and swine.

FOREST REGIONS AGAIN AFIRE

New Forest Fire Perils Sections of Notrhern Minnesota.

Duluth—Northern Minnesota again is in the path of a forest fire which threatens to assume serious proportions, according to H. G. Weber, state forest supervisor in charge of a detachment of military men patroling the forest area.

The airplane patrol has discovered a serious blaze in the White Face river area six miles east of Cotton. Hundreds of acres of standing timber are located in this region, and effort is being extended to gain control of the Gnesen road.

A large crew of forest fire fighters under charge of Robert Crust, assistant forest ranger is fighting a timber fire at Loerch, a small station eight miles east of Brainerd.

The ranger reports there is no immediate danger of its getting beyond control.

Blaze Perils Atlanta City.

Atlanta—Fire threatened the business section of Atlanta. Starting in S. H. Kress Co. Whitehall street store defied the efforts of Atlanta's entire fire fighters and spread rapidly to adjoining buildings.

C-2 Ends Cross Country Flight.

Los Angeles—Completing its transcontinental flight, the dirigible C-2 arrived at Ross field, Arcadia, at 7:01 Saturday night. The C-2 is the first dirigible to make the ocean to ocean flight.

U. S. IS UPHELD IN INJUNCTION

Court Holds Shopmen Accountable for Violence Though They Didn't Commit Acts.

Chicago—The strike of railroad shopmen is a "conspiracy in restraint of trade," Judge James H. Wilkerson ruled in sustaining the government's plea for a temporary injunction.

Judge Wilkerson's decision, which granted every request made by Attorney General H. M. Daugherty, gave life to one of the most sweeping injunctions ever issued by a federal court.

The injunction order which replaces the preliminary restraining writ issued by Judge Wilkerson several weeks ago, restricts the activities of 270 officers and 400,000 members of the six federal shop crafts.

Counsel for the shopcrafts have until Oct. 1 to answer the bill for injunction. If this is done rehearsing will result either in making the injunction permanent or striking it out entirely.

Attorney General Daugherty and Assistant General A. A. McLaughlin who waged the government's legal battle, hailed the ruling as one of the most significant for law and order ever read into records of the judiciary.

Judge Wilkerson's drastic decision nullified every contention of the defense, and held that the strikers were accountable for acts of violence, whether these acts were committed by the strikers or not.

The Judge further declared that "It is the conspiracy which is inflecting the public injury for which redress is sought."

"Where minds meet together for a purpose a conspiracy exists without even a word being spoken."

"Not one scintilla of evidence had been presented by the defendants," the court held, "to refute or deny the abundance of proof produced by the government of a nationwide sabotage plot to destroy commerce."

BONUS VETO IS SUSTAINED

House Previously Had Overridden Harding Decision, 258 to 54.

Washington—The soldiers' bonus bill failed of enactment, the Senate sustaining President Harding's veto. Previously the House had overridden the veto by a large margin.

Senate roll call showed 44 years to 28 nays, or four less than the two-thirds majority necessary.

President Harding in vetoing the soldiers' bonus bill, in a written message to Congress said, while he was in accord with "the avowed purpose" of the measure, he could not subscribe to its provisions.

Mr. Harding set forth a number of reasons. These included:

That to add one-sixth of the total sum of the public debt for distribution among less than 5,000,000 of 110,000,000 people would undermine confidence on which the nation's credit was builded.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS SINE DIE

Final Gavels Release Members to Gc Home for Election Campaigns.

Washington—The second session of the 67th congress adjourned sine die Friday, Sept. 22.

With the final disposal of minor legislative matters the last gravels released members for attention to election and home affairs until the prospective session to be called by President Harding about Nov. 15.

Speeches on political and other subjects occupied the closing hours of the session, while both houses awaited the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill passed by the senate late as the last important bill on the republican program for passage before adjournment. Opposition to the Liberian loan and the Dyer antilynching bill, republican leaders said, would prevent a vote being reached.

GRAIN SALES AGENCY READY

New Organization to Serve Northwest U. S. Grain Grower

St. Paul—Incorporation of the U. S Grain Growers Sales Company of Minneapolis, designed to handle 15,000,000 bushels of grain grown annually by the 8,500 Northwest members of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., was announced in St. Paul Thursday, the 21st inst. The company is to have hedaquarters in Minneapolis and is to begin selling operations at once.

Incorporators are J. F. Reed, president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation and one of a committee of three that has been in charge of U. S. Grain Grower affairs since the recent re-organization; Thomas Cashman of Owatonna, a director of the Minnesota federation and E. H. Cunningham, new president of the U. S. Grain Growers.

The company has an initial capital stock of $25,000, fully paid. This will be increased rapidly.

H. T. Hagen, Lakeville, Minn., who has had 25 years experience in the grain business, will be manager.

The new company has the backing of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation and the Minnesota Farmers' Grain Dealers' association.

125 Agents Killed by Bootleggers.

Washington—Bootleggers have killed 125 prohibition enforcement agents since the war on rum runners began. Commissioner Roy Haynes states 24 were federal agents and the remainder state, county and municipal.

BIG CROPS SOBER PRICE

War Scare Passing; Wheat and Substitutes Decline.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended September 22, 1922.

GRAIN—Grain prices trended upward during the week and closed sharply higher. The foreign war news was the main bullish factor. Only weakness was on the 19th due to liquidition. Chicago December wheat up 6 cents, Chicago December corn up 2¼c. Wheat strong on the 22nd and advanced to best figure since August. Prices fell off later on slightly over bought condition. Cash market relatively firm. Corn strong early but reacted from high points on profit taking and local selling. Closing prices in Chicago cash market; No. 2 red winter wheat $1.16; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.11; No. 2 mixed corn 65c; No. 2 yellow corn 66c; No. 3 white oats 40c. Average farm prices; No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa 53c; No. 2 hard winter wheat in central Kansas 86c. Closing future prices; Chicago December wheat $1.08; Chicago December corn 59¼c; Minneapolis December wheat $1.08⅜c; Kansas City December wheat $1.01⅛c; Winnipeg December wheat $1.00¼.

DAIRY PRODUCTS—Butter markets firm during the week. Fancy goods have been scarce, and the shortage has held up prices. Poor quality of fresh butter has turned some interest to storage goods which are beginning to move. Closing prices, 92 score butter, New York 43c, Chicago 41c. Cheese markets firm during the week. Current receipts running somewhat irregular in quality due to hot weather but supplies are lighter and prices showing upward tendency. Trading fairly active. Cheese prices on Wisconsin primary markets Sept. 21, Twins 20¼c, Daisies 21c; Double daisies 20⅜c, Young Americas 19¾c, Longhorns 21¼c, Square print 23c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS—Chicago hog prices ranged from 30 to 65c net higher for the week, heavy hogs advancing most. Beef steers were generally 15c lower with butcher cows and heifers 10 to 15c higher. Feeder steers were firm to 15c higher and veal calves 25c to $1 higher per 100 lbs. Fat lambs 50 to 75c higher, feeding lambs 75c higher and yearlings 25 to 50c higher. Fat ewes were firm to 10c higher. On Sept. 22nd hogs were 15 to 25c higher than Thursday's average. Better grades of beef steers and stockers and feeders steady with butcher cows and heifers and lower grade steers weak to 15c lower. Fat lambs strong to 25c higher; feeding lambs and sheep firm. Sept. 22nd Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $10.40; bulk of sales $8 to $10.30; medium and good beef steers $7.60 to $10.85; butcher cows and heifers $4 to $9.50; feeder steers $5.65 to $8.25; light and medium weight veal calves $10.50 to $13.25; fat lambs $13.50 to $14.75; feeding lambs $12.50 to $14.35; yearlings $9.25 to $12.25; fat ewes $3.75 to $7.10. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Sept. 15 were: Cattle and calves 127,363; hogs 7,865; sheep 92,104. The trend of eastern wholesale fresh meat prices was upward for the week. Net advances amounting to 50c to $1.50 on better grades of beef; $1 to $1.50 on mutton; $1 to $2 on veal and fresh pork loins and $2 to $3 on lamb. On Sept. 22nd better grades of beef were steady to firm with lower grades weak to $1 lower. Veal and mutton price practically steady, lamb steady to firm and fresh pork loins generally weak compared with Thursday's average. Sept. 22nd prices good grade meats: beef $17-$18.50; veal $18-$20; lamb $24-$29; mutton $13-$17; light pork loins $27-30; heavy loins 15-$22.

CASSOWARY BIRD WAYS

"Yes," said the Cassowary, "it is true that I am a curious looking bird. In fact you might not even call me a bird when you first looked at me for I'm walking about the ground and I'm not flying above the ground.

"But I am a bird just as the Ostrich family and others are birds, though they are to be seen on the ground, and not flying about in the air.

"I have been here in the zoo quite a while and I get along very well.

"I ate some sand just now, which surprised one of the visitors. But I often eat sand. In fact, I enjoy a certain amount of sand in my food. Just as I have heard some people say that they like to have their food seasoned with salt so does the cassowary like to eat a certain amount of sand.

"Just what that amount is I couldn't tell you. I never measured the amount of sand I ate. But, then, I don't suppose people measure the amount of salt they eat, so that is fair enough.

"My home used to be in an island known as the Cassowary island. An excellent name it was for the island, too.

"That island is one of the islands of New Britain, east of New Guinea.

"I couldn't point that out to you on the map, but that is where they say I came from, so I suppose they know.

"Anyway, there were lots of cassowaries in the home island, and there is only one other here. That is a young cassowary.

"You'll see him down yonder. He is only eighteen months old. He wasn't born here, but was brought here as a young cassowary child.

"Cassowaries aren't born in the zoo. It is enough of an honor to a zoo that they will be brought here and will lend interest to the zoo by their presence.

"A bit conceited, eh? Well, now and again I feel a little superior and a little like showing that I'm not going to be taken advantage of—I'm not.

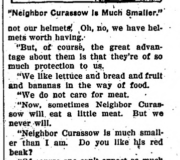
"My home was in a great, thick jungle. Doesn't that sound interesting? There we lived in the wonderful underbrush.

"You will notice that I have a horny, hard kind of a helmet upon my head?

"It protects our heads from injury or harm, as we go through the underbrush.

"Our helmets never grow out of fashion. We're not like people in that way who're always changing hats with the styles.

"And people's hats look shabby after a bit or faded by the sun. But not our helmets. Oh, no, we have helmets worth having.



"Neighbor Curassow Is Much Smaller."

"But, of course, the great advantage about them is that they're of so much protection to us.

"We like lettuce and bread and fruit and bananas in the way of food.

"We do not care for meat.

"Now, sometimes Neighbor Curassow will eat a little meat. But we never will.

"Neighbor Curassow is much smaller than I am. Do you like his red beak?

"Of course one can't expect so much of a smaller creature, and so, you see, he hasn't the sense to keep to a little fruit and vegetable diet as I do.

"But, then, people eat meat, don't they. Well, I must be careful what I say, then, about meat eating.

"The young curassow, over there, a real little zoo curassow, is wilder than those who were brought here from their own curassow home.

"The ones who were brought here are really quite tame.

"Still, the little wild one is whistling now. Do you hear him? A nice whistle he has, hasn't he?

"But I mustn't tell you any more about myself and neighbors, for you might forget if I told you too much.

"Come again and call for me, and my keeper will translate my story into your language with an account of what I do and what I eat and how my disposition has been of late, and all of such interesting matters.

"Good-by." The cassowary politely says good-by and is sorry you won't join him in a little afternoon meal of sand!"

The Farmer's Own Page

Timely Comments on Agricultural Topics for Our Readers

American Farm Bureau

J. F. Reed of Minnesota. R. A. Cowles of Illinois.
E. H. Cunningham of Iowa, President.

The U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., the largest co-operative marketing attempt by farmers, has been completely reorganized with the Mid-west farm bureaus in control.

An election of a new board of directors was the first formal step in reorganization. The new board elected the following officers:

President, E. H. Cunningham; vice-president, H. L. Keefe; secretary, J. M. Mehl; treasurer, Chas. E. Gunnels.

Secretary Mehl has been assistant to the president of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., since its incorporation. Mr. Gunnels is treasurer of the American Farm Bureau federation and is permitted by that organization to serve the grain growers without pay.

From the board of directors an executive committee of three was elected—E. H. Cunningham, R. A. Cowles and J. F. Reed—and vested in it broad powers for carrying on the affairs of the organization. The subsidiary U. S. Grain Growers' Sales company is controlled by this executive committee.

An advisory executive committee of three was appointed to advise on questions of finance and marketing. The members of this committee are: Bernard M. Baruch, financier, New York; Alexander Legge, president of International Harvester company, Chicago; Frank O. Wetmore, president of First National bank, Chicago. All three have accepted appointment on this committee.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace and Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover were invited to serve as ex-officio members of the new board of directors, representing the public.

Reorganization Effected.

The reorganization of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., was effected through the recommendations of the Mid-west farm bureau creditors' committee. This committee consists of E. H. Cunningham, secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau federation; W. S. Hill, president of the South Dakota Farm Bureau federation, and J. W. Coverdale, secretary of the American Farm Bureau federation. It was authorized on May 13 in a conference of the Mid-west farm bureau presidents and secretaries and has been at work ever since untangling the affairs of the farmers' co-operative grain marketing organization as disclosed in the first annual meeting in Chicago on March 31. The creditors' committee holds powers of attorney for most of the creditors who have claims against the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. The plan for reorganization was worked out by the creditors' committee and submitted to a meeting of the Mid-west farm bureau presidents and secretaries in the office of the American Farm Bureau federation August 3. The recommendations of the committee were unanimously adopted.

E. H. Cunningham, president of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., issues the following statement regarding the affairs of the co-operative grain marketing association:

"The U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., involves the supreme effort of the American farmer to follow his own product closer to the ultimate consumer. The movement was born of the highest-minded sincerity on the part of the grain farmer, necessity forcing him to seek improved methods of marketing the product of his toil. As the new management comes into control of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., we have no Utopian schemes to propose, no visionary plans to work out. We recognize certain economic laws which cannot be flouted, and certain business principles which cannot be ignored without inviting disaster. We have no fight against existing agencies and methods. But we do believe most sincerely that the men who grow grain have the right to sell what they produce.

Selling Agency Planned.

"And we plan to create a producers' selling agency, which shall function in strict accordance with sound business methods of procedure. We do not expect to establish any great and spectacular reforms while the farmer waits. We hold out no flattering promises to producers that we will be able to reach out into space and get 25, 40 or 50 cents a bushel more for their grain than the market justifies. Our grower members must recognize that fact in the beginning, and they will be called upon to exercise patience, as well as co-operation.

"We will do our best to rehabilitate the organization upon sound business principles. We are not fooling ourselves, and we are not going to attempt to fool anybody else. At the proper time, after we have gathered up the loose ends, we shall make a full and frank statement to the public. We propose to start upon a modest scale that will insure financial solvency, and to grow and expand as experience leads and business conditions justify."

HALL IS ELECTED SECRETARY

Texas Farm Bureau Cotton Association Selects Well-Known Farmer and Business Man.

The Texas Farm Bureau Cotton association has elected J. W. L. Hall, a well-known Texas farmer, banker and business man, secretary for the ensuing year. During the business year just closed this co-operative sold $8,777,799.12 worth of cotton. At a convention of delegates, from all cotton counties held July 17, unanimous endorsement was given to the officers and workers and policies of the association. Enthusiastic approval was given plans for a state-wide campaign to double the membership. The Texas Farm Bureau Cotton association is a member of the American Cotton Growers' exchange, whose member states control approximately 2,500,000 bales of cotton.

Co-operatives in Alaska.

An Alaskan co-operative marketing association, known as the Tanana Valley Agricultural association, has recently been formed to aid in the development of agriculture in the region near Fairbanks. This district is about 500 miles from the coast, and is the northern terminus of the government railroad. One of the five Alaskan experiment stations of the United States Department of Agriculture is located at Fairbanks.

H. S. Bridges of Ellsworth, Maine, has been selected state secretary of the New Hampshire Farm Bureau Federation with headquarters at Concord.

POULTRY

TURKEY FATTENED ON RANGE

Flesh Gains in Flavor and Tenderness in Way It Cannot if Fowl is Confined.

It is just as important to have turkeys in good plump condition before marketing as it is chickens. However, a good many farmers regard this as a hard job simply because there is considerable misunderstanding as to the correct way to go about the matter.

Turkeys, if taken aright, are easily fattened; in fact, easier than most other fowls. But if turkeys have had free range all summer, you cannot fatten them with any satisfaction in an enclosure. The change will cause them to fret and refuse to eat and thus they will lose instead of gain in weight. On the other hand, if they range too much while being fattened, they will "run off" the beneficial effects of your extra feeding. The right plan is therefore a compromise between these two extremes. Teach the turkeys to come up every evening at least, and then stuff them with all they will possibly eat. You will soon find them ranging at short distances only and coming up even between feeding times, where they should always be able to find some sort of attractive food.

Don't try to fatten the turkeys on corn alone. A close diet of new corn often results in bowel troubles for the turkeys just as it does for hogs, and a sick turkey is usually a dead turkey. Mix the fattening ration; variety is desirable for several reasons. Equal parts of wheat, oats and corn, make a good ration. Give also an occasional mash feed of equal parts of cornmeal and wheat middlings which makes a very rich feed, especially if a quantity of ground beefscrap or green cut bone is added.

Turkeys Fret and Refuse to Eat if in an Enclosure.

As the turkey takes on fat, the flesh turns to a rich golden color. If allowed reasonably free range while the fattening process is going on, the flesh gains in flavor and tenderness in a way it cannot if the bird were fattened in close quarters.

PROPER FEEDING BIG FACTOR

No Matter How Good the Breeding May Be, Good Care Must Be Given for Best Results.

Breeding plays an important part in successful poultry operation, but the factor of good feeding and the proper management of the flock plays a far more important part than many poultry keepers have been led to believe. Breeding, no matter how good, can accomplish but little in producing results unless backed by proper feeding and care. The best of breeding will give but poor results if the proper care and feed are not complied with.

POULTRY TERMS

A poult is a turkey in its first year.

By a trio is meant a male and two females.

What is known as a yearling hen is one having laid 12 months.

A breeding pen is usually made up of from six to fourteen females and a male.

A setting of eggs is usually counted at 12, although many poultrymen give 15 eggs.

When a chicken weighs between two and three pounds it is called a spring chicken.

A pullet is a female less than a year old, and when over that age it is a hen.

A stewing chicken weighs about three pounds and a rooster four or more pounds.

A capon is a male bird deprived of its generative organs for the purpose of improving the weight and delicacy of its carcass.

CONFERENCE WORKS OUT PLANS ON THE MARKETING OF LAMBS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Plans for the more orderly marketing of native lambs at Jersey City and New York city, and the elimination of violent fluctuations in prices of live and dressed lambs at these markets, are to be worked out by a committee representing live stock commission men, slaughterers, retailers, railroads, stock yard companies at Jersey City and New York, eastern lamb producers and the United States Department of Agriculture.

This committee was appointed as a result of the conference called recently by the United States Department of Agriculture, at Jersey City. At this conference members of the trade representing the various interests engaged in the handling, marketing, slaughtering and retailing of lambs at Jersey City and New York met representatives of sheep and lamb producers and the department. Practically all the factors responsible for the wide fluctuation in lamb prices at Jersey City during certain periods were brought out by full discussion.

The conference developed the fact that the lamb problem at Jersey City is a production and marketing problem combined, and that its solution lies largely in the hands of the producers and slaughterers of native lambs, although live stock commission men and retail meat dealers can assist in remedying the situation.

Occupies Key Position.

Jersey City occupies a key position in the channel of distribution between the lamb producers and the largest center of consumption, inasmuch as it is the final public concentration point for live lambs destined for New York city, the greatest consuming center for dressed lamb in the United States and a market that requires a high-grade product.

It was shown that ordinarily Jersey City has a reputation of being the highest lamb market in the country, but that during June, July and August it suffers violent price fluctuations because of the big increase in receipts of native lambs from Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Michigan and New York, without any material decrease in the supply of live and dressed lambs received there and at New York city from Western points. The situation is complicated by the marked irregularity in the volume of the daily receipts during those months and by the inferior quality of the offerings, most of which arrive unsorted and ungraded.

It was brought out that the poor quality of these lambs is due largely to the failure of producers to use better breeding stock and proper feeding methods and to dock and castrate their lambs at the proper time. The fact that native lambs in so many instances become infected in the summer months with diseases of parasitic origin, particularly stomach worms, makes it very important that they be marketed before the milk fat disappears.

These lambs usually are dropped at a period which requires that they be marketed during the months of June, July and August, hence they are a perishable produce from a marketing standpoint. When they reach Jersey City in larger numbers than the demand can absorb, and come in competition with the high-grade live and dressed Western lambs, prices break sharply and affect the lamb market generally at all points. Declines in the dressed market often are more drastic than those in the live market.

Better Breeding Stock Urged.

It was agreed at the conference that producers of native lambs should use better breeding stock; supply ample feed both to the ewes and lambs for maximum gains in order to market the lambs before they become infested with parasites, and practice docking and castration.

It was agreed, also, that producers in the different areas should reach an understanding which will lead to the lengthening of the breeding and marketing period, and that they should co-operate in their marketing in such a way as will insure grading and sorting in the country and more orderly movement of lambs to market. In this connection it was suggested that the practice which appears to be generally followed in certain states of contracting lambs to country buyers for delivery during stated periods is largely responsible for the irregularity in the daily receipts at Jersey City. If shippers would consign some of their lambs, particularly the lower grades, to other markets, where there is a better outlet, it would do much towards remedying the undesirable conditions at Jersey City and New York. Feeding stations established in the East as reservoirs from which to feed the market as supplies are needed also were mentioned as a means for remedying conditions.

Producers and commission men recommend that local and Western slaughterers co-operate by endeavoring to reduce the volume of their direct shipments and their shipments of Western dressed lambs to Jersey City and New York from Middle Western markets at periods when gluts are known to occur, in order to insure a supply no greater than the demand. It was also suggested that live stock commission men advise their patrons as to when gluts usually occur and when there are good reasons to believe one will occur, explaining fully what happens when undesirable and unfinished lambs are sent to the Jersey City market.

It was recommended that retailers feature lamb in their advertising and selling efforts during the period of excessive receipts and give consumers advantage or recessions in wholesale prices. Any steps taken along this line would encourage consumption and tend to check price fluctuations.

Personnel of Committee.

Although the movement of native lambs to market will soon be completed for the current year, the conference was unanimous in its desire to work out plans immediately which will insure more orderly marketing and less price fluctuation. The following committee was appointed to work to this end with representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture:

H. K. Nickell, United Dressed Beef company, New York; L. S. Joseph, vice president New York Butchers' Dressed Meat company, New York; George Kramer, United Master Butchers of America, New York; H. D. Wimer, Pennsylvania Railroad company, Philadelphia; George A. Shannon, vice president New York, and New Jersey Live Stock association, Jersey City; J. H. Meek, chief, bureau of markets, Richmond, Va., and R. C. Bonham, president and general manager Jersey

Alfalfa for Lowest Feed Costs.

The man who has alfalfa on his place has one of the cheapest sources of protein available. Sometimes the value of alfalfa for protein is lost sight of, because high protein feeds have so often been cheaper to feed even than low protein materials. However, with silage and alfalfa one of the most economical rations possible is had by the fortunate feeder who has both of these excellent feeds. The combination is excellent for the roughage supply for all kinds of live stock, and especially for dairy cattle. The amount of expensive concentrates necessary is markedly reduced without a reduction in the production.

Pick Out Poor Layers.

If you know how, you can look over the flock and pick out the poor layers. Somebody in your neighborhood knows how to cull, and can tell you how.

FORECASTS INCREASE IN PROFITS

Growers in West Receive Predictions Through Agents.

Seed Is Largely Grown From Second Crop and if Season Is Late Frost and Harvest Periods Come Close Together.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Forecasts of weather conditions for alfalfa harvest are widely distributed in the West, particularly in Oklahoma, where 2,000 or more growers receive the forecasts through the local agents of the extension service of the United States Department of Agriculture. In Utah a rather limited but important frost-warning service for alfalfa-seed growers is in operation.

Seed is largely grown from the second crop, and if the season is late the harvest and fall frost periods come close together. As the seed crop increases in value at the rate of about $5 a day for each acre of seed when nearing maturity, the growers let the seed stand as long as possible. When temperatures low enough to cause damage are predicted by the weather bureau it is not unusual for the seed growers to run their cutting machines most of the night.

In one section of Utah during a recent harvest season fully 500 acres of seed were cut after receipt of the warnings, at an average saving of $20 to $30 an acre. Two of these growers reported that they saved at least $2,000 as a result of the weather information furnished by Uncle Sam concerning frost conditions.

Protection for Sheep.

Sheep do not require expensive buildings, as do some other animals. Freedom from moisture and winds is about all the protection they need.

A very satisfactory way of eliminating lice from poultry is to treat each fowl separately with sodium fluorid.

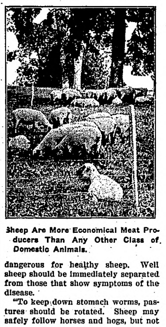
FARM STOCK

STOMACH WORMS DISASTROUS

One Per Cent of Copper Sulphate Recommended as Remedy—Rotate Pastures.

"Of all the internal parasites affecting animals, there is probably none more disastrous than the stomach worms," says Geo. H. Glover of the Colorado Agricultural college. "This is especially true of sheep. The first symptoms are dullness and lack of thrift. These bloodsucking parasites soon cause anemia which is manifested by paleness of the mucous membranes, such as the mouth. Sheep that are affected may have a swelling under the jaw, which is commonly known as "bottle-jaw."

"A satisfactory remedy, endorsed by the United States Department of Agriculture, is a 1 per cent solution of copper sulphate. It is made by dissolving one-fourth pound of copper sulphate in a pint of boiling water and adding enough cold water to make three gallons. This will make enough to treat 100 adult sheep. The dose is three ounces for adult sheep and half that amount for lambs. Pastures which have been used by infested sheep are dangerous for healthy sheep. Well sheep should be immediately separated from those that show symptoms of the disease.



Sheep Are More Economical Meat Producers Than Any Other Class of Domestic Animals.

"To keep down stomach worms, pastures should be rotated. Sheep may safely follow horses and hogs, but not cattle and goats, since the latter will transmit stomach worms to sheep."

DON'T NEGLECT VACCINATION

On Account of Virulence of Cholera Attack Last Year It Is Best to Use Preventive.

In many states hog cholera was the most active last year that it has been for some time. The demand for veterinarians' time in vaccination and for serum from the serum plants became so great that many were unable to get attention to their herds in time.

On account of the extent and virulence of the attack last year it is recommended that no chances be taken by neglecting to vaccinate this year's pig crop. Serum is a preventive agent, not a cure, so it is poor policy to put off vaccinating until the disease appears.

BREED ADAPTED FOR MUTTON

Southdown Excels for Quality of Meat, Maturity and for High Standard of Wool.

No breed excels the little Southdown for quality of mutton, early maturity, folding qualities (for it dresses the land evenly and well), or for the high standard of its wool, which is nearest the merino of any of our breeds. It is a hardy, healthy constitutioned little sheep, able to withstand heat or cold, and, wherever it has gone—and it is to be found in most of the sheep-breeding countries of the world—the Southdown has gained golden opinions.

FLUSHING WILL HELP LAMBS

Generous Feeding of Ewes During Breeding Season Will Increase Number of Young.

Flushing, in the language of sheep raisers, means the generous feeding of the ewes during the breeding season, to reduce the number of lambless ewes and to increase the number of twins. In a government experiment, covering 802 lambings of 143 different ewes, the flushing system increased the number of lambs dropped by 18.1 per cent.

The Fourth Estate.

The expression "the fourth estate," referring to newspaper workers, is credited to Edmund Burke, who is quoted in Thomas Carlyle's fifth lecture on "Heroes and Hero Worship" as saying. "There are three estates in parliament, but in the reporters' gallery yonder there sits a fourth estate, more important far than they all." This was in 1839. In this country where class distinctions are not made politically little ever is heard of the three estates—the nobility, the clergy and the people—but the term "fourth estate" is comparatively common.

President Washington's Deafness.

"Nor did his hearing remain entirely good. Maclay noted, at one of the President's dinners in 1789 that 'he seemed in more good humor than I ever saw him, though he was so deaf that I believe he heard little of the conversation,' and three years later the President is reported as saying to Jefferson that he was sensible, too, of a decay in his hearing."—From "The True George Washington," by Paul Leicester Ford.

Air-Carrying Spider.

The water spider (Argyroneta aquatica), though an air-breathing creature, spends nearly its whole existence in the water. It is enabled to breathe beneath the surface by means of a bubble of air, retained in the long hairs that cover the spider's abdomen. It also weaves a dome-shaped nest under water, attached to some plant, and fills it with air, which the spider carries down from the surface, a bubble at a time.

The Clouds Are Flying.

The clouds are flying fast overhead; and sharp and isolated come drops of rain, so that one thinks it must be spray. But no, it is a handful of rain. The ship swishes and sinks forward, gives a hollow thudding and rears slowly backward, along the pinkish lofty coast of Sicily that is just retreating into a bay. From the open sea comes the rain, come the long waves.—D. H. Lawrence.

Lessons From Enemies.

Have you learned lessons only of those who admired you, and were tender with you, and stood aside for you? Have you not learned great lessons from those who reject you, and brace themselves against you? Or who treat you with contempt, or dispute the passage with you?—Walt Whitman.

ANGELS NOT IN HIS MIND

Hungry Man Just at That Moment Cared Nothing at All About the Seraphim.

The Woman was keeping house for her younger brother. Brother was accustomed to eating before bedtime. One evening he was late getting home and when he arrived the Woman was upstairs ready to retire. He puttered around the kitchen for a while, but being unable to find what he wanted he called upstairs to the Woman:

"Say," he called, "what is a seraphim?" The Woman answered immediately, "An angel." Then she wondered why in the world he was asking about angels at midnight. His voice rang through the halls again:

"Say, will you come down here for a minute?" She went down and he immediately asked:

"What in the name of goodness do you think I said?"

"Why, you said: 'What is a seraphim?'" Brother just hooted. As he gained his breath he said: "I don't think of angels when I'm hungry. I merely asked, 'What is the sirup in.'"—Chicago Journal.

HAD USE FOR THUNDER

Thunderstorms have been rather frequent here this summer.

During one particularly severe storm, while the thunder was rolling storm, while the thunder was rolling, Jimmy, eight years old, became rather annoying to his four-year-old brother.

An unusually loud clap finally drove Jimmy away from teasing Bill.

"What is the thunder for?" asked the four-year-old.

The father, thinking to drive home a lesson in conduct, said: "It is to make bad boys be good."

Jimmy looked properly squelched.

Then the storm cleared up. Small Bill, formerly much subdued, got his courage back, and began to tease the penitent James.

At last the older boy could stand the annoyance no longer. He walked over to the window.

"Lord, send some more thunder," he said, earnestly.—Washington Star.

The Case and The Girl

By Randall Parrish

ADVENTURE CALLS

"So glad to learn you could be out, Judge," she said, the least perceptible hesitancy in her voice. "Permit me to present Judge Cable of the Supreme Court; Captain West, my fiance!"

Surprising to Captain West? Well, rather, inasmuch as it was the first he had heard of it. A young engineer, he had returned from the war with his thirst for adventure still strong. Answering an advertisement for a young man willing to engage in a service of danger he is employed by a handsome young woman, Natalie Coolidge, who takes him to a dinner party and announces her engagement. And thereafter thrills follow fast. It appears that Natalie fears an uncle is plotting to secure her property. Anyway, this uncle is murdered in a day or two—which adds to the mysteries which quickly accumulate. And not the least mysterious is the behavior of the heroine, who seems to have a dual personality.

It's not necessary to go farther with the plot. For this is one of Randall Parrish's action stories—action, action, action! That's all that need be said. His first novel was published in 1904 and he's been writing two a year ever since. And they sell as fast as he can write them. The author was born in 1858 in Illinois, and practiced law in Wichita, Kan., 1879-83. Then he prospected for two years in Arizona and New Mexico. Later he got into the newspaper business in Denver, Omaha, Chicago and other cities. Then he found himself as a writer of stirring tales.

CHAPTER I

—1—

The Lady in the Limousine.

West, still attired in khaki uniform, but wearing the red chevron of honorable discharge on his left sleeve, sat in the club writing room, his feet comfortably elevated, endeavoring to extract some entertainment from the evening paper. The news was not particularly interesting, however, and finally, obsessed with the feeling that it would soon be time for him to seriously contemplate the procuring of suitable employment, the young man turned the sheet about rather idly, and ran his eyes down the columns devoted to classified advertising.

Half way down the first column, under the head of "miscellaneous," he paused and read a paragraph with some interest; then read it over again, emitting a soft whistle between his teeth.

"Well, by Jove!" he said to himself slowly. "That doesn't sound so bad, either; out of the ordinary, at least. Say, Thompson," and he turned to a tall young fellow busily writing at the adjoining desk, and shoved the paper under his eyes, pointing at the paragraph which had attracted attention, with one finger, "What do you make out of that, old man?"

The other, rather sober-faced, and slow of speech, read the advertisement word by word, with no change of expression.

"Rot," he said solemnly. "Either a joke, or some scheme on. Why? Interested in it?"

"In a measure, yes. I've a good mind to answer, and take a chance."

"You're a fool if you do, Matt," decisively, and turning back to his writing. "That is some game being pulled off. Likely as not it means blackmail. Besides there is no address."

"That's one thing I like about it," retorted the other; "They are in earnest, and taking no chances of having their purpose guessed at. By Jove, I don't see how any one can get in bad, merely by finding out what it all means."

"Well, do as you please; you would anyhow. Only you have my advice."

West read the item again. He had been eighteen months in France, and his discharge from the army had left him bored and dissatisfied with the dull routine of civil life. He dreaded to get back into the harness of a prosaic existence; even his profession as a civil engineer had someway lost its charm. He had tasted the joy of adventure, the thrill of danger, and it was still alluring. This advertisement promised a mystery which strangely attracted his imagination.

> "Wanted: Young man of education and daring for service involving some personal peril. Good pay, and unusual reward if successful. May have to leave city. Purpose disclosed only in personal interview."

As Thompson had pointed out, this was not signed, nor any address given. West crossed over to an unoccupied desk, and wrote a reply, changing the wording several times, and finally making a clean copy. The answer read:

> To Advertiser: Am 26; late captain of Engineers; university graduate, adventurous disposition. Would be glad to consider your proposition. Address, Box 57, University club."

He placed this in an envelope, called a club messenger, and, handing the boy a sum of money, sent him over to the newspaper office.

Two days elapsed before an answer appeared in his box; a small envelope, addressed in a lady's handwriting apparently, and mailed from one of the sub-postoffices. The brief note read:

"Box 57, University club.

"Your answer to advertisement makes a good impression, and I am willing to put you to the further test of a personal meeting. If you are in earnest in this matter, and quite prepared to assume the necessary risk, you will be at the northwest corner of Spaulding park at 5:30 tomorrow afternoon. Do not come in uniform, but it will be well to bring evening clothes in a bag. Be sure of yourself, and be prompt.

"Very truly yours,
"The Advertiser."

West read this over, again and again, smoking furiously, and endeavoring to weigh each word. The letter sounded honest and sincere; the writer evidently had a purpose in view, and was selecting an agent with great care and secrecy. No hint as to what that object was would be revealed blindly—he must be tried in every way first; thoroughly tested as to both character and courage. Undoubtedly steps had already been taken to do this. The delay in reply would have afforded opportunity for some investigation, as his address would give the necessary clue to his identity. The request for evening clothes, however, rather reassured him; evidently his first plunge into this mystery was not to occur in any stratum of low society; no vast amount of personal danger could be involved in such preliminaries. The advertiser was a woman! This fact also stimulated his imagination, and rendered him the more eager. By Jove! he would see the thing through!

His decision was reached. He would go, but would make every effort to protect himself against any possible treachery. He had a room at the club, and wrote a letter or two before proceeding to dress, arranging for their personal delivery in case he failed to return at a designated time; carefully examined his service revolver, and deposited it in the pocket of the business suit he decided to wear. Satisfied with these arrangements, he dressed rapidly, and then packed his bag, bearing it in his hand as he departed in ample time for the point of rendezvous. A cab took him to the place designated, and he found himself alone in a rather desolate spot, with which he was in no way familiar. He had no knowledge of how he was to be approached, or identified, but his being requested to bring a bag containing evening clothes, somehow suggested riding, rather than walking, and consequently his eyes followed more or less intently the constant stream of automobiles.

He grew restless and doubtful as the moments slipped past. Then suddenly, without the slightest warning, a black limousine whirled in alongside the curb, and came to a stop immediately in front of where he waited. The chauffeur, dressed in plain dark livery, stepped out, and threw open the rear door, without asking so much as a question. Except that the fellow stood there, looking directly toward him, his fingers on the latch, expectantly, West would not have known that he was wanted. Yet it was all so obvious he could not question. Silently he picked up his bag, and stepped forward. He saw no one within, but firm in the belief that the chauffeur must have his orders, he entered blindly, the door closing instantly behind him. The curtains were drawn, the interior gloomy and indistinct, and the driver had resumed his seat, and started the motor, before West realized that he was not alone. In one corner of the wide back seat, drawn back from any possible observation from without, sat a woman.

At first glance he could only barely distinguish the outlines of her figure, dimly discernible against the dark background of the upholstery, but, as his eyes accustomed themselves to the faint light, her features also became dimly visible—enough so, at least, to convince him that she was young. Neither spoke for some moments, while the automobile gathered speed, and West had an uncomfortable feeling that the lady was watching him with great intentness. He could only quietly await her explanation of this strange situation. The delay was not a long one. She laughed, nervously perhaps, yet with a sense of humor at the awkward position.

"Quite melodramatic, is it not, Captain West?" she asked, in a decidedly pleasant voice. "I trust it appeals thoroughly to that disposition for adventure of which you wrote."

"Nothing more could be desired, I am sure," he confessed, surprised at her tone, and glancing toward her. "I certainly am left completely in the dark, unable even to clearly distinguish my mysterious companion in adventure."

"And there really is no longer any occasion for such concealment." She lifted the heavy curtain beside her, permitting the grey light to rest upon her face. "I preferred not to be seen at the park for obvious reasons; but here, alone with you, such precaution is quite unnecessary. We are to be either friends or enemies, so frankness is the best course."

He saw the face of a young woman of twenty-four, or five, with dark eyes and hair, her cheeks flushed with health and excitement, her lips smiling. It was a face of unusual attractiveness, not regular, perhaps, in any of its features, yet filled with character, and glowing with life. He liked the girl, and believed in her.

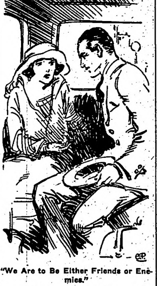
"I can only thank you," he said, rather lamely. "Although I do not understand now how we could ever become enemies. Surely, that is not a threat?"

"Oh, no, it is far too true. You have yet to learn what I require. Yet that was very nicely said. I take it to mean your first impression of me is not unfavorable?"

"Very far from it. I am already deeply interested in my task. If I lacked an incentive before, you have furnished it."

She laughed again softly, her eyes still on his face.

"Really, I had not anticipated such a sincere compliment. No doubt you learned these delightful speeches in France," she answered, a very faint tinge of sarcasm in the words. "However, this is a very serious matter, Captain West, and really has nothing to do with my personal appearance. I am seeking neither flirtation nor compliment; merely a trustworthy agent. First of all, it is necessary that you comprehend this."



"We Are to Be Either Friends or Enemies."

He bowed, impressed by her manner, and somewhat ashamed of his impetuosity.

"I accept the reproof," he said quietly, "and will endeavor henceforth not to offend in any way. I am entirely at your service."

"There is no offense; I merely thought it best there should be no misunderstanding. Now, I am sure, we can proceed intelligently. Indeed, I am going to frankly confess, I also like your appearance. This mutual liking ought to be half the battle. We have quite a ride before us yet; you may question me if you wish."

"You mean I am to question you freely."

"Assuredly; while I am to remain quite as free in my answers. That is perfectly fair, is it not?"

"At least, it sounds so. Where am I being transported, then? And why the dress suit?"

His questions evidently amused, for her eyes sparkled.

"Naturally that query comes first; and especially the dress suit. You have the prejudices of your sex, I see, and without regret. I shall endeavor to reply categorically, yet with reservations. We are going to a country home, where we dine, in company with a few guests."

"I see; I am first of all to be projected into society. Are any of these guests known to me?"

"God forbid; and I may even venture to predict that you will never care to know any of them again. You are to be present as my guest, and will so be welcomed."

"I feel the honor; but would it not be well under these circumstances for me to know more clearly whose guest I am? Suppose, for instance, I had to refer to our long friendship, it would be extremely awkward not to even be able to mention your name."

"My name! Why, of course, you do not know what it is. Well, really I am not altogether certain that I do, either. We will therefore compromise on the one I am known by, which will be safer. Allow me, Captain West, to present to you Miss Natalie Coolidge."

She held out frankly a neatly gloved hand, which he as instantly took, and retained in his own, the girl making no immediate effort to withdraw it.

"This is very kind of you, Miss Coolidge," he acknowledged, adapting himself to her present mood, "But it seems there is no necessity for me to present myself. Apparently my identity is already known."

"Otherwise you would not be among those present," she admitted frankly.

"Then, I judge you have not accepted me blindly?"

"No, I have not," earnestly, and now releasing her hand, "I do not think we ever really know any one except through personal intercourse; but I do know who you are, and something of what your life thus far has been."

"But how could you? I signed no name."

She smiled, again quite at her ease.

"The box number at the club was amply sufficient. I have friends there; once possessed of your name and army rank, the department records at Washington furnished all further information. So you perceive, Captain, I am not altogether reckless. Are you interested in learning what I know?"

"I am; will you tell me?"

"Willingly," and she checked the points off on her gloved fingers. "You are Matthew West, the only son of Judge Robert Peel West, of Atlanta, Georgia. Your mother, who was of the well-known Bullock family, died when you were about fifteen, and her widowed sister has since been the housekeeper. You are a graduate of the University of Virginia, being fourth in your class in scholarship. Your engineering course was completed in Massachusetts, and you later became connected with the Wyant Contracting company, of Chicago. You were here, however, only a very brief time, making but few acquaintances, when the war broke out. You immediately entered the first officers' training school at Fort Sheridan, graduating with the rank of first lieutenant, and were assigned to a regiment of engineers, among the earliest to sail for France. While there you were wounded twice, and cited once for special gallantry in the rescue of a seriously injured private. Your last wound caused your return to the United States on a special mission, and also won you the rank of captain. Since then you have been honorably discharged, but have made no effort to resume professional work. You are twenty-six, and unmarried. Is there anything else you care to know?"

"I think not; really your agency has been most efficient. And so this review satisfied you that I was really the man you sought?"

"No, it did not wholly satisfy, but it looked promising. You were evidently courageous, and a gentleman. These qualities were essential; whether in other respects you measured up to my purpose, could only be ascertained through a personal interview. There was no other way."

"And now?" he persisted.

"Still encouraging, I must admit, although the test is not yet complete. However, we are now approaching the end of our journey. Before we turn in I am going to ask a favor of you—call me Natalie."

"Natalie; that will be easy."

"And also forgive me if I fail in always addressing you formally as Captain West. I presume your friends say Matt, do they not?"

"Some have that habit."

"Then I claim also the privilege."

She bewildered him, left him in wonderment as to what she would do next, but there was scarcely time in which to answer before the speeding limousine turned abruptly into a private driveway, curving gracefully to the front of a rather imposing stone mansion, set well back from the road. Soon they were at the side entrance, and a servant, in the same unobtrusive livery as the chauffeur, was quietly opening the door. He turned and helped his companion to emerge.

"It was a woman; she seemed to vanish into thin air—the hall was empty."

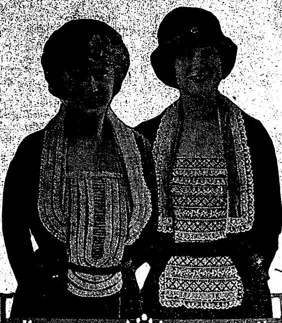
Pretty Things that are made at Home



IT IS getting to the place where every ambitious young woman aspires to an assortment of sweaters, and often she knits them for herself. This ability to make them puts the expensive, handmade garment within the reach of even a very limited dress allowance, besides making the exercise of individual taste possible, in colors and other things. The sweater gets smarter all the time—the element of style grows more and more important in it.

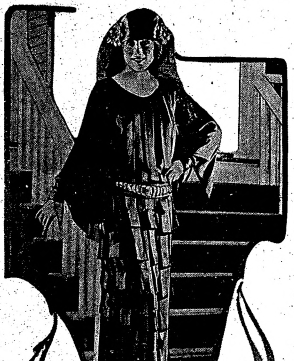
Vestees and collars, to be worn with sweaters or coats, are among the dainty accessories that women make for themselves, elaborating them with handwork. They add just the right note to the sweater and skirt costume and make a separate waist unnecessary. Two collar and vestee sets, as pictured, worn with sweaters and skirts contribute so much of attractiveness that they are real necessities—the good points of the sweater are emphasized by them.

A straight band of net is the foundation of both the collars, but in the set at the left it is rounded at the ends. Three frills of fluted val lace form its decoration. A panel of tucked net down the center of the vestee is bordered by frills of val lace and a very full frill edges the top.

Straight lines and square corners make the set at the right a simple matter to handle. Net, lace and embroidered swiss insertion are set together in strips for the vestee, the net strips covered with frills of val edging. There is a plain fold of net at the top and the collar is plain net, edged with frills of val.

That early rumor, that the silhouette would expand and the waistline move upward this fall, is less than a whisper now, for the displays do not bear it out. All the lovely frocks for afternoon and evening show that women are still devoted to long lines and slimness and that they insist on wearing soft fabrics that fall into graceful draperies. What they are looking for is apparel that glorifies the human form divine by clothing it with supple draperies that fall and float and betray its grace and beauty. Their mood will have to change before the fashions will. Long and trailing sashes and panels—sleeves that are merely floating drapery, veils and long earrings are the mode because they suit the mood of their wearers.

There is every reason to be satisfied with things as they are in the world of fashion, for women have every opportunity to be beautifully as well as fashionably dressed this season. The styles are lovely and are also refined—a consummation devoutly to be wished. After so much "jazzing" in the near past it is refreshing to study the new things. Among them appears the delightful afternoon costume, shown herewith—made of heavy brown crepe. It is a simple affair with bodice bloused at the low waistline and wide-draped sleeves ending in points and confined at the wrist. The popular trimming of loose straps has been ingeniously managed on it, falling free from neck to girdle and caught up in tiers about the skirt. The skirt is ankle length but the straps in the lowest tier fall to the instep.



Delightful Afternoon Costume.

The girdle of self-material is embroidered with graduated, overlapping disks, made of little knots, set close together, in colors. The small hat is a Napoleon shape of hatters' plush with rosettes of metallic leaves at the sides. It is trimmed with a long, fine lace veil which falls over it to the tip of the nose at the front and to the shoulder-blades at the back.

Recording the Blackfeet Culture on the Film

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

It will be only a short time until the old chiefs of the Blackfeet Indian tribes will have disappeared from the earth. In view of this fact the government has decided to make a permanent record of what remains of their peculiar type of civilization. For the past two months a camera crew has been working in Glacier National park, filming the Indians in their home life, their dances, their tribal gatherings, their sacred medicine ceremonies and other forms of their work and play. The film will be preserved for educational and historical purposes.

Map of the Near East, showing the neutral zone, embracing Constantinople and the straits, which Great Britain says must not be invaded by the Turks.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mustapha Kemal Pasha Holds the Key to the Situation in the Near East.

ALLIES PLAN A CONFERENCE

Will Not Permit Russia to Be Represented—British Public Protest Against War—Bonus Bill Killed by President's Veto—Tariff Measure Now Law.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHETHER or not there shall be another great war in the Near East depends on Mustapha Kemal Pasha. The masterful leader of the Turkish nationalists, having expelled the Greeks from Asia Minor, demands that Constantinople be restored to Turkey, that he be allowed to send troops across the straits to recover eastern Thrace from Greece, and a conference to arrange for guarantees for the neutrality of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus be held with every country bordering on the Black sea, especially Russia, represented.

To this England has formally replied that Constantinople will not be given up and that she will fight, alone if necessary, to keep the Turk from invading the neutralized zone that includes that city and the straits.

Kemal's forces in Anatolia are at the very edge of the zone, massed at Ismid and Chanak, and already encounters between his patrols and British outposts are reported. England is hurrying reinforcements for her land forces, and the entire British Atlantic fleet has been ordered to the Dardanelles. The dominions have been asked to be ready to send troops, and New Zealand and Australia have promised to do so if they are needed.

It appears that in this conflict, if it comes, Great Britain must stand practically alone against the Turks so far as military operations are concerned. France and Italy have declared they will have no part in it, and the former has withdrawn to the European side her troops in the neutral zone. Greece is quite demoralized and cannot be counted on to help much. The little entente, which is determined that neither Turkey nor Bulgaria shall get eastern Thrace, would be greatly hampered in war by mutual jealousies and threats of revolt in various regions.

Kemal's demand concerning representation in the peace conference met with a brusque reply when Marquis Curzon, British foreign minister, and Count Sforza, Italian ambassador to France, met Premier Poincare to arrange for the parley. They announce that France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Greece, Turkey, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania would participate in the conference to be held in Venice or Rome, and Kemal's demand that Russia be included was no less insistent than that of the soviet government, but General Daniloff, chief of the Russian general staff, denied the current report that Russia would give Kemal armed assistance, saying the big soviet army in the Caucasus was there to defend the frontiers and the Baku oil fields. "Russia has no intention of sending troops to Asia Minor," General Daniloff said, "nor is there any truth in the rumor of Russian reinforcements on the Esthonian, Latvian or Polish frontiers. Russia does not want fighting on any front, and, besides, any military man knews it would be foolish to begin anything in September with winter imminent."

LLOYD GEORGE'S policy, stern and uncompromising, though supported so far by most of his cabinet, may have to be modified. There is increasing protest by the press and people of England against Great Britain's undertaking any new war, and the opposition of the trades unions and in the great manufacturing centers is especially violent. There is a widespread feeling that the Turks really are entitled to repossess Constantinople so long as they leave the straits free and unfortified. The dominions, though patriotic always, are rather cool toward fresh military operations; as has been said, little or no help can be expected from other allied nations, and Japan, according to a foreign office official in Tokyo, will stand absolutely aloof.

The British government believes its forces could successfully defend Constantinople and the straits without help, and perhaps they could. But it may be the Turkish offensive will not be confined to that region. There are reports which are more than rumors that the Nationalists are moving on Irak, part of the British mandate in Mesopotamia, which is ruled nominally by Emir Feisal. Uprisings in that region are said to be becoming general, and the word came from an Anatolian news agency that the British garrisons had been worsted in several encounters with tribesmen and that Mosul was about to be evacuated. It is not unlikely that these reports are exaggerated, but the danger there is real, and is but a part of the threat of a holy war against Christendom. The trend toward this is especially strong in India, where immense throngs of Moslems gathered to rejoice over the victory of Kemal Pasha. In Calcutta speakers bitterly denounced the British policy in the Near East and asserted that seven million Moslems in India are being angered to the point of rising en masse to fight against the British for their legitimate aspirations. The central Khalifat committee of India sent a cablegram to London saying:

"By their support of the Greek military adventure the British government has broken faith with India and the Moslem world. If England goes to war with Turkey now she will never be able to regain her prestige in India."

THROUGHOUT the struggle in Asia Minor the representatives of America, lead by Rear Admiral Bristol, commissioner at Constantinople, and George Horton, consul general at Smyrna, have been chiefly concerned in the rescue of their nationals and the relief of the refugees. In this task they have been notably successful, and Mr. Horton bears witness to the bravery and unselfish devotion of the members of the American colony in Smyrna. Even the American women teachers in the Y. W. C. A. girls' school refused to leave their posts until driven away by the flames.

NO BONUS for the American soldiers and sailors of the World war—at least, none unless congress at the session beginning in December passes a satisfactory bill. The measure which went through the house last March and through the senate on August 31 was vetoed last Tuesday by President Harding. Next day the house overrode the veto by a vote of 258 to 54, but a few hours later the senate upheld the action of the President, the proponents of the bill being able to muster only 44 votes, four short of the required two-thirds majority. Twenty-eight senators voted against the measure this time, seven of them being Democrats. One of these was Senator Williams of Mississippi, and he could not resist the opportunity to exercise his caustic wit. "I'm just a plain damn fool Mississippi Democrat" said he, "but I'm going to support a Republican President, in this veto because he is right. The only wonder is that a Republican President could get so right."

President Harding in his veto message said that, while he was "in accord with the avowed purpose of the bill to give expression of a nation's gratitude to those who served in its defense in the World war," he was constrained to return it without his approval for two reasons:

First, because it failed to provide the revenue to defray its expense.

Second, because, he said, "it establishes the very dangerous precedent of creating a treasury covenant to pay which puts a burden variously estimated between $4,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000, upon the American people, not to discharge an obligation, which the government always must pay, but to bestow a bonus which the soldiers themselves, while serving in the World war, did not expect."

Of such a way of rewarding patriotic service he said further: "A peace bestowal on the ex-service men, as though the supreme offering could be paid for with cash, is a perversion of public funds, a reversal of the policy which exalted patriotic service in the past, and suggests that future defense is to be inspired by compensation rather than consciousness of duty to flag and country."

Whether he was right or wrong in his course, the President certainly was courageous, for the pressure brought to bear on him in favor of the bonus bill was tremendous, and the fall elections are not far away. But congress had refused to devise and enact a measure which he could approve as sincere and based on correct financial principles, so that the law makers rather than the chief executive should bear the onus of adverse criticism. The American Legion and other advocates of compensation for the ex-service men will continue the agitation for a bonus.

IN THE presence of Representative Fordney and Senator McCumber, the President on Thursday signed the tariff bill which bears their names, and it became effective at midnight. Vast quantities of imported merchandise were withdrawn from government warehouses just before the new rates went into effect, and vessels hurried into port to discharge their cargoes. Chairman Marvin of the tariff commission informed the President that his forces would have to be tripled in size because of the duties devolving on the commission through the operation of the so-called flexible and scientific provisions of the new law.

Mr. Harding also signed the Capper-Tincher act providing for regulation of trading in futures on grain exchanges.

HAVING accomplished what the Republican leaders called great achievements in legislation and economy and what their Democratic rivals described as nothing, or worse than nothing, congress wound up its long session on Friday and adjourned. The spokesmen for the majority especially stressed the fact that the national expenditure is being reduced at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year. They added that in three years the public debt has been reduced as much as it was reduced in fifty years following the Civil war. Senator Harrison, Democrat, said the record of congress was "a terrible thing to take back to the people."

CONGRESSMAN OSCAR KELLER of Minnesota sustained a severe jolt last week. He was the author of the resolution for the impeachment of Attorney General Daugherty, based on his obtaining the famous injunction against the striking railway shopmen, and also on his alleged failure to enforce the anti-trust laws. Mr. Keller had prepared his case and had induced Samuel Untermyer to present it before the house judiciary committee. Then that committee calmly and cold-bloodedly postponed the hearing until next December. Mr. Keller and Mr. Untermyer were furious, and Sam Gompers denounced the committee's action as brazen effrontery. The executive council of the American Federation of Labor has set aside October 1 as "Impeachment day" for demonstrations against Mr. Daugherty and Judge Wilkerson, who granted the injunction.

AFTER 22 days of furious labor, the rescue crews at Jackson, Cal., reached the level of the gold mine in which 47 miners had been entombed by a fire, only to find that every one of them was dead. It was evident that they had succumbed to poisonous gases within a few hours.

THE League of Nations in session at Geneva devoted a lot of time to discussing naval disarmament without getting anywhere. The league assembly unanimously voted Hungary a member and it was believed Germany would be admitted soon. General approval was given to the manner in which the mandates for the former German colonies have been exercised, including the phosphate monopoly on the island of Naru, which was questioned by the United States. The Bolivian delegate informed the assembly that "grave difficulties" menaced the relations between Bolivia and Chile unless the mediation of a friendly power or the arbitration of the league can be obtained.

POLAND TO EXPORT EGGS

Poland will have available for export from 700 to 1,000 carloads of eggs annually, according to recent calculations based on the potential egg production of the nation, says the Poland Magazine. It is estimated that the annual production is approximately 2,000,000,000 eggs, or 15,000 carloads.

At a recent conference in Cracow the continued control of the egg export trade was favored, since otherwise the low rate of Polish exchange would tend toward the exporting of too great a proportion of the nation's egg supply. At the present rate of exchange it is about 1 cent an egg.

SCENTED CHEESE

A short time before the war the Germans on the occasion of the Oberammergan festivals placed on the market a perfumed cheese, to which they gave an immense amount of publicity. This cheese was easily manufactured; fresh little curds were mingled with dried flowers and finely chopped aromatic herbs. The name with which the cheese was labeled constituted its sole originality, "Oberammerganer passions festspielalpenkrauter klosterdelicatesfruhstuckskaese." A DOCTOR'S SON

By MARY LOUISE CORMIER

The old Garrick house sits firmly and impressively on the very summit of Fox Hill. When it was first built, this square, red brick domicile with the quaint colonial portico was the show place of Merrimac Mills. Beneath its hospitable roof Doctor Garrick, then a man of twenty-eight, and a distinguished graduate of a leading medical school, introduced his bride to the townspeople. There, a few years later, was born his only son, Dan Garrick.

The doctor, true father that he was, idolized that boy. In due course, Dan graduated with honors from the medical school—the same school that had given his father a degree. Bursting with pride and plans for the future, the doctor brought out his new roadster and drove to the station to meet his son.

"I'm the proudest man in Merrimac Mills, my boy," he confided, happily, as they headed for the red house on Fox Hill. "Ever since you were a little shaver no bigger than Aunt Chloe's Sam I've dreamed of the day when you could step into my shoes and carry on the good work."

"Dad," Dan explained, "I don't want to become a doctor. It doesn't appeal to me. I think I'll try journalism."

"Journalism," echoed the doctor between his clenched teeth. "Hang journalism!"

If Dan did not inherit his father's taste for medicine he was heir to something just as characteristic—a stubborn will. In vain did the doctor plead, cajole, rage and threaten. Dan was firm. He applied for a reporter's job on the Merrimac News and got it. But he left the Garrick house, and when he and father met on the street they did not speak.

These meetings pained Dan almost as much as they must have pained his father. He had to struggle with all his force of mind to keep from surrendering to the doctor's wishes, when he saw the lines of sorrow and disappointment in his father's face. They recalled to him the doctor's parting words, uttered as the two of them faced each other in the study on the night of their altercation.

"You were born to be a doctor," he had declared hotly. "Some day heaven is going to call upon you to do your duty. Maybe you'll believe that!"

The words burned themselves into Dan's brain. Often they came between him and his work. He was thinking of them on a certain stormy night in December as he waited for an assignment in the "local" room. Suddenly Carson's thin metallic summons brought him to his feet and sent him scurrying into the editor's office.

"You're a doctor, aren't you, Garrick?" questioned Carson, anxiously.

"I—yes, in a way," admitted Dan, reluctantly. "I've got a degree, but not much parctice to speak of—"

"Your father is out on a case in Hadley. Nick's wife needs a doctor right away. Think you could—"

"I'm very sorry," Dan began firmly, "I can't—"

"You can and will!" snapped Carson. "This is an assignment I'm giving you to help the wife of one of the finest men that ever set a line of type. Now get out and don't come back here until you've 'covered.'"

Dan went. He dragged Lem Parks out of bed and they drove in Lem's rusty little car to Merrimac Bridge.

"Jingo!" ejaculated Lem, as he pulled down the snow-clotted windshield. "The bridge is gone!"

"I've got to get across that river, Lem," Dan muttered, grimly. "Nick's wife is in agony over there and I've got to help her—"

"You'll have to swim, then," retorted Lem, dryly. "A boat couldn't get you across in water like that."

"All right. I'll swim," said Dan. "Strap the kit on my back, Lem."

"Strap the kit," repeated Dan. Lem obeyed him without further protest, fastening the little black valise to the doctor's back.

Dan slipped into the icy waters and the battle was on. He made straight for Vicker's Mill, but the force of the current and the blinding snow and sleet carried him a good mile beyond his destination. He crawled up the opposite bank and made his way through the storm. Nick met him at the door and ushered him into a room where his wife lay on a cot, moaning.

A dozen eternities might have passed before Dan placed a tiny, red, squalling atom of life at the unconscious woman's side and went out to find the troubled father.

"Fine boy," he announced, smilingly. "You're in luck, Nick."

"Thank heaven," mumbled Nick. "You're a true son of your dad, Dan."

"You were born to be a doctor," his father's words ran through his brain again. "Some day heaven is going to call upon you—"

"Going to succeed your dad, aren't you?" Nick persisted.

"Yes," said Dan. And he said it with a thrill of pride that sounded strange in his ears. "I guess dad was right, after all—" His voice trailed into a choking gasp. He fainted.

HONOR PAID TO BRAZILIAN

General Rondon, Famous Explorer, Elected to Membership in the National Geographic Society.

The National Geographic society has elected to honorary membership Gen. Candido Mariano da Silva Rondon, famous explorer, often called the William Penn of Brazil.

General Rondon won this popular characterization for his peaceful penetration of the practically unknown Matto Grosso wilderness, for its rubber, where he so successfully won the confidence of the natives by his fair treatment and human assistance that they even helped him string telegraph wires through the jungle of their hitherto forbidden land.

General Rondon is the ninth man elected to honorary membership in the National Geographic society, one of the other eight being the late Theodore Roosevelt, who, upon his return from his Brazilian explorations, made known Rondon's work in this country by his high praise of the Brazilian's achievements.

COURT DECISION ENDS ROAD WORK

Right-of-Way Ruling Forces Highway Department Into Court Case

A ruling by the Olmstead county district court which held in effect that the state highway commissioner has less authority over state trunk roads that township supervisors have over township roads, has forced the department to stop right-of-way condemnation proceedings until a supreme court decision can be obtained. The highway commissioner undertook to build a mile of road over a new route, considered best from an engineering standpoint, near Byron. In condemnation proceeding to obtain necessary land, the court held in favor of objecting property owners, substituting its judgement and opinion for that of the highway commissioner If upheld by supreme court, the decision will practially hobble the department in a good share of its operations.

Commends Hanson

The Sixty-fifth Legislative district has the unusual opportunity of improving the quality of the Minnesota senate by electing as senator, C. L Hanson of Thief River Falls, a man who has made a success of his own affairs and who can be depended upon to use practical ideas in the carrying on of the state's business. Mr. Hansen thru long experience has had intimate knowledge of the needs and problems of the farmer and if elected he will be ever active in the interests of the farmers of the district.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

At the Northern Minnesota conference of the M. E. church held at Chisholm last week, appointment of pastors for various churches of this district was made. Rev. Halter was re-appointed to the local church, and Rev. J. B. Smith was returned to Thief River Falls.

Speeders Come To Grief

A party of five young men, sons of prominent and respected people of Thief River Falls, had a narrow escape from serious injury and possibly worse last Sunday evening at this place. They came thru town traveling at close to fifty miles an hour narrowly escaped hitting a couple pedestrians and continued thru town on wrong side of the road until they lost control and went into the ditch south of Henry Olsen's place. Two wheels were smashed, fenders crushed, and the car body dented, but the young men were uninjured with exception of a few scratches.

Out of deference to parents of the boys no prosecution will be made for this escapade, but village authorities have taken steps to curb any other occurance of the kind.

FOREST FIRES BREAK OUT ANEW

Much Standing Timber Burned

Many Settlers Forced To Leave Homesteads

Northern Minnesota is again experiencing the menace of forest fires which broke out in the country in vicinity of Buhl and nearby towns last week. Fires have been burning in that locality all summer, but absence of rain the past two weeks have caused them to spread to such an extent to be almost beyond control. To complicate matters peat and timber fires are breaking out in the territory around Warroad. A heavy pall of smoke hanging over northwestern Minnesota and Dakota whenever the wind is from the east, is mute evidence of the intensity of the flames While no loss of life is reported, many settlers in the timber districts have been forced to leave their homes Exceptionally heavy rains or snow in the near future is the only hope of quenching the flames which are rapidly cleaning up all standing timber in northern part of the state.

Moonshiner Arrested

A raid was made Monday evening at the Ole Linsted farm west of Thief River where federal agents suspected a moonshine still was in operation. According to reports, some over twenty gallons of whiskey, and a still outfit capable of making many time, that amount per week, were taken. Mr. Linstad, who has run afoul of the law on the same charge before, was arrested, and will probably have to face a prison term for this offence.

Mrs. Edward Carlson and baby son arrived Thursday last from their home at Morganville, Kan, for a visit at home of Mr. and Mrs. J. V Patton and with other relatives in this community.

A grading outfit consisting of two caterpiller tractors, one elevator grader, two smoothing graders and a cook house belonging to the Minnesota Highway Department passed thru here Saturday enroute to a job west of Thief River Falls.

Basket Social

A basket social will be given in school District No. 166, and known as the C. T. Swanson school, Friday evening this week. A cordial invitation is extended to everybody, and all are welcome.

Allies Ready to Permit Turkey to Regain Her Former Territory in Europe.

KING CONSTANTINE OUSTED

Greek Army Compels Him to Abdicate and Declares for War to Keep Thrace—Federal Fuel Distributor Spens Gets Busy—Death of Senator Watson.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

OWING to the military and diplomatic skill of Mustapha Kemal Pasha and his colleagues in the Turkish Nationalist government, and to the strong determination of the people of the allied nations not to embark in another war, it is practically certain that Turkey will regain the territory in Europe which she lost in the World war and probably a considerable part of Mesopotamia, now under British mandate. Do you and your friends think the Turks are entitled to this restoration and are really no worse than most of their neighbors? Or do you believe it is worth another great war to keep them out of Europe?

CONCILIATION and concession were the order of the day in the Near East. The allies, in formally inviting the Turks to a peace conference, assured them that they "will take advantage of this opportunity to declare that they look with favor upon the desire of Turkey to recover Thrace up to the Maritza river, and Adrianople." It was even intimated that Russia would be admitted to the conference, and M. Franklin-Bouillon, who last year negotiated an agreement between the Nationalists and the French, was sent to Smyrna with a mandate to deal with Kemal. The stipulation of the allies was that the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora and the Bosporus must remain free and open to all nations. The British also insisted that the neutral zone, which embraces the straits and Constantinople, must not be invaded by the Nationalists during the peace negotiations.

Early in the week Kemal gave a long interview to a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, in which he said that he had no desire to provoke hostilities with Great Britain, but that he insisted on complete independence of the Turkish empire and complete freedom of the straits to all nations. He said Turkey had no wish to fortify the Dardanelles, but that she must control the Sea of Marmora and the Bosporus to secure the safety of her capital—Constantinople. On Wednesday the Kemalists announced they would respect the neutrality of the straits pending an armistice conference with the British generals. They then formulated their reply to the allied peace proposals. Not given to the public at this writing, this answer is understood to provide, among other things, that the Nationalists shall occupy all strategic positions prior to the opening of the conference; that all British forces en route be recalled and the British shall not fortify the neutral zone; that the Nationalists shall occupy Thrace before the conference, at which Russia, Ukrainia and all countries bordering on the Black sea shall be represented; that if these conditions are accepted, the Nationalists agree to an armistice conference at Mudania, which is to be followed in three days by the opening of the peace conference in Smyrna.

Meanwhile Kemal, who has freely expressed his distrust of the British and especially of Lloyd George, sent various units into the Asiatic part of the neutral zone and occupied strategic positions from which he virtually controlled the Dardanelles. The British commanders made several demands for the withdrawal of the Turks, but Kemal responded that he knew of no neutral zone. To the French he explained that he had occupied these places because the British had disregarded the neutrality of the straits by permitting the Greeks to have free passage through them.

REVOLT by the Greek army against the government, which was expected, came on schedule time. The troops that had returned from the scene of disaster in Anatolia and were concentrated in the archipelago islands rebelled and, using battleships and destroyers as transports, sailed to the mainland and moved on Athens under the leadership of regular officers of the army and navy. Military airplanes dropped in Athens proclamations demanding the abdication of King Constantine, the formation of a ministry friendly to the allies and the sending of reinforcements to Thrace. On Wednesday the cabinet resigned and Constantine formally abdicated the throne in favor of Crown Prince George, who was sworn in. For the present a revolutionary committee is in charge of the government. The object of the coup d'etat as announced in Athens was to oust Constantine in order to unite the country in firm opposition to the Paris conference's peace terms to Mustapha Kemal Pasha and to wage an immediate and aggressive war to retain Thrace. Army and navy leaders fully support the Thracian war, and they say they can take Constantinople.

THOUGH it had been reported that Bulgaria was ready to seize the part of Thrace which she claims, Dimitri Stancioff, Bulgarian minister to England, denies this. "Bulgaria is firmly resolved to avoid participation in any military action," said he, "not only because the country is practically disarmed, but also because the new Bulgaria is an agricultural country and does not wish to risk a repetition of her previous misfortunes."

SOVIET Russia formally declared herself the champion of Islam last week. She sent a note to the entente, the Balkan nations and Egypt demanding the restoration of Turkey in Europe and warning the world that she would not recognize "any decision concerning the Turkish straits taken without her participation or arrived at against her interests."

ACCORDING to an agreement about completed between the United States and Japan, the international technical control of the Chinese Eastern railway by the Stevens commission will soon be terminated. It is provided that the commission shall cease to function upon completion of the evacuation of Japanese troops from Siberia. The Chinese government is to be made responsible for the continued operation and protection of the railway, and if it fails in this, there will be a resumption of international control. The other allied powers are in accord with this plan. That is the news that comes from Washington. From Peking come reports that put another face on the matter. The president of China has suspended the Russian Boxer indemnity of about $5,000,000 annually and the soviet government, in its reply of protest, intimates that it will seize the Chinese Eastern railway. John F. Stevens, the head of the commission, according to a correspondent, is convinced the line is lost to China.

GREAT BRITAIN has offered to pay $50,000,000 of interest due the United States, and the World war debt funding commission has been considering the proposition. At the rate of 5 per cent, the interest due in the next two installments, October 15 and November 15, amounts to $95,000,000, but the funding law authorizes a rate of 4¼ per cent, so it is suggested that the $50,000,000 be paid October 15 and adjustments be worked out with Sir Robert Horne, who is coming over soon. Congressman Burton of Ohio, who is a member of the funding commission, is in London, and at a luncheon attended by prominent financiers he said plainly that the United States expected Great Britain to pay in full. He pointed out that the loans made by America were not given out of an overflowing treasury but were raised, sometimes with difficulty, by loans from the American people, who had no reason to expect that they would not be repaid. He also drew attention to the American suspicion that if the loans were forgiven the money thus released might be used in new wars.

CONRAD E. SPENS, railway official of Chicago, who was appointed federal fuel distributor under the act passed by congress, started in by warning the various states that his powers do not extend to coal mined and sold within a given state and their officials must look after that end of the proposition. He then asked eight leading railway executives to serve as an advisory committee in the fuel transportation emergency and named 13 prominent business men as members of an advisory committee for industry, to keep in touch with the distribution of fuel supplies for industries in their respective districts. Large industrial consumers are asked to confine their purchases of coal under present conditions as closely to current needs as safety permits; to suspend accumulation of advance stocks of coal until the present emergency pressure on production is relieved; to unload coal cars immediately and return them to service and to promptly furnish material required for new railroad equipment or repairs.

THE grand jury in Marion, Ill., which investigated the Herrin coal mine massacre, indicted 76 men for participation in the outrage, 44 of them for murder. All of the latter group have been put under arrest, and of the total 20 are still at large. Eight of those accused of murder are held without bail. The others were released on bonds, which were furnished by the leading citizens of Marion. The defense of the men, as already outlined by their lawyers, will be, in brief, that this is a "private persecution by a political boss and a labor-hating organization," the allusion being to Attorney General Brundage and the Illinois Chamber of Commerce.

FEDERAL JUDGE WILKERSON in Chicago formally entered the temporary injunction obtained by Attorney General Daugherty against the railway shopmen, having sustained it on all points. The proceedings were perfunctory and the attorneys for the union did not concern themselves with the form of the order. They said they hoped to be permitted to take the case direct to the Supreme court of the United States on appeal.

SOME twenty thousand veterans of the Civil war assembled in Des Moines, Ia., for the fifty-sixth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. On Wednesday three-fourths of these grizzled warriors, escorted by two regiments of the regular army, marched in the yearly parade—an event that grows more and more pathetic as the years pass. They were reviewed by their commander-in-chief, Lewis S. Pilcher, and by Hanford MacNider, national commander of the American Legion. One tragedy marked the occasion. M. J. Mackenhausen of White Bear Lake, Minn., dropped dead after two hours of marching. Judge J. W. Willett of Tama, Ia., was elected commander-in-chief for the coming year.

THOMAS E. WATSON, United States senator from Georgia, one of the most fiery political figures of the time, died suddenly of asthma Tuesday in Washington. For 40 years he was active in state and national politics, and he was the Populist nominee for vice president in 1896 and for President in 1904. The Populists elected him to the house of representatives in 1891, and in 1920 he was elected senator. He was opposed to Woodrow Wilson and his policies and was especially against the League of Nations.

WHEAT PRICES ERATIC

Word of British Ultimatum To Turks Unsettles Futures.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended Sept. 29, 1922.

GRAIN—Grain prices unsettled during the week and closed lower. Foreign war news was the dominating market factor. Chicago December wheat down 4 cents, Chicago December corn down 1 cent. Whea prices erratic on the 29th following development of political conditions abroad. Export demand only fair. Cash market strong. Corn higher early but prices declined later on liquidation and weakness in wheat. Closing prices in Cihcago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.11; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.09; No. 2 mixed corn 64c; No. 2 yellow corn 64c; No. 3 white oats 40c. Average farm prices No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa about 52c. Closing future prices: Chicago December wheat $1.04; Chicago December corn 58½c; Minneapolis December wheat $1.04⅝; Kansas City December wheat 97⅜c; Winnipeg December wheat 94⅝c.

DAIRY PRODUCTS—Butter markets firm during the week. Receipts lighter following seasonal decrease in production. Storage butter moving in fairly large quantities in a wholesale way. Prices of fresh butter are now the highest they have been this year. Closing prices, 92 score butter: New York 44c; Chicago 42c; cheese markets firm during the week. Demand has continued good in spite of advances early in the week averaging to $2c. Held cheese beginning to move. Prices at Wisconsin primary cheese markets Sept. 28: Twins 23c; Daisies 23c; Double Daisies 22¾c; Longhorns 23½c; Square prints 24½c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS—Chicago hog prices for the week advanced 15c to 30c per 100 lbs. The price trend of cattle was generally downward. Beef cattle ranged from 15c lower to 25c up; butcher cows and heifers generally 25c lower and veal calves 50c net lower. Feeder steers were steady to 10c higher. Sheep and lamb values showed mixed movements; fat lambs were 15 to 50c lower; fat sheep 10 to 25c lower while yearlings were steady to 25c higher and feeding lambs 30 to 75c higher for the week. On Sept. 29, the Chicago hog market opened steady to 10c higher, closed unevenly weak and about 10c lower than early or about steady with Thursday's average. Cattle market generally steady on all classes; best native lambs steady to a shade lower in between grades dull and fully 25c lower; sheep about steady. Sept. 29th Chicago prices: Hogs, top $10.65, bulk of sales $8 to $10.60; medium and good beef steers $7.50-$11.10; butcher cows and heifers $3.75 to $9.25; feeder steers $5.75-$8.25; veal calves $10-$12.75; fat lambs $13-$14.60; feeding lambs $13.25-$14.65; yearlings $9.25-$12.50; fat ewes $3.50-7. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Sept. 22nd were: Cattle and calves 143,265; hogs 8,354; sheep 107,275. There was little change in eastern wholesale fresh meat prices compared with a week ago. Beef and veal practically steady, lamb weak to $1 lower; mutton $1 lower at some markets and $1 higher at others while fresh pork loins advanced generally about $1 higher per 100 lbs. On Sept. 29th beef was firm to 50c higher; veal steady, lamb weak to $1 lower; mutton steady at some markets and $1 higher at others and pork loins firm at some markets and $1 higher elsewhere. Sept. 29th prices good grade meats: Beef $17-$18; veal $18-$20; lamb $24-$28; mutton $12-$18; light pork loins $28-$31; heavy loins $16-$23.

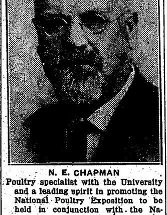
CONTEST BETWEEN COW AND HEN FOR SUPREMACY

N. E. Chapman Shows That Hen Is a Good Second.

That the poultry growing industry is entitled to a nation-wide exposition as well as the dairy industry, seems to be shown conclusively in a study of the 1920 census returns. N. E. Chapman, poultryman with the agricultural extension service of the university, has been studying the figures and finds that both the cow and hen are in the billion dollar class, with the hen not so far behind the cow as might be expected. It is fitting, therefore, that the little brown hen—or is it the little white hen—should have her national revue as well as the dairy cow. Mr. Chapman is in charge of the educational department of the National Poultry Exposition association which is to hold its first show at the Minnesota state fair grounds, Oct. 7 to 14, in connection with the National Dairy Exposition. Here are his findings from a study of the census returns:



N. E. CHAPMAN

Poultry specialist with the University and a leading spirit in promoting the National Poultry Exposition to be held in conjunction with the National Dairy Show at Minnesota Fair Grounds, Oct. 7 to 14.

"Are you aware of the mighty contest that is on between the cow and the hen for supremacy in the U. S. A? This friendly contest is to show which one can put the most cash in the jeans of six million farmers.

"The census of 1920 puts them both in the billion dollar class with the cow leading by a few million. Dairy products are put at one billion four hundred million and 'eggs and chickens' at one billion and forty million. The towering mass of figures given us by the U. S. census may be used as vantage ground to view the friendly contest in the various geographic divisions.

"In the New England states the dairy cow is leading by 98 million to 32 million. The cow still leads in the Middle Atlantic states with 298 million put in the jeans of the farmers of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, while the hen added 108 million more to pay their store bills.

"In the East North Central division the contest becomes interesting. In Ohio, the cow leads; in Indiana, the hen, but in Illinois, Michigan, and the great dairy state of Wisconsin, the cow again leads and has a plurality for the section of 448 million to 249 million for the hen.

"As we turn our eyes to the West North Central division we see the cow leading in befriending the farmers of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, but as we turn southward to Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas, the hen gains enough millions to put her in the lead for the section with 270 million to her credit and 263 for the cow.

"In the next three divisions, South Atlantic, East South Central and West South Central, an area comprising more than one-half of the U. S. A., the hen wins with a majority of 62 million or 292 to 230.

"In the eight states of the Mountain division, the dairy cow again leads the hen 41 million to 30 million.

"On the Pacific coast there is battle royal. The cow was in the lead in 1919 with 100 million to 63, but ardent friends of the biddy are telling that she will rank first by the close of 1929.

"Let the contest go on! It is vastly more important to this country of ours than the contest of political parties, of labor and capital. Without the daily products of the cow and the hen our children would not be properly nourished. Without the daily cash return from cream and eggs, the farmers of the United States would be in financial straits."

Here's to the two best friends of men, The Dairy Cow and the Laying Hen.

Railroad Worm Again at Work.

The apple maggot or railroad worm has been playing havoc with the apple crop on many farms in Minnesota, according to A. G. Ruggles, of University Farm, state entomologist. In some cases apples which appeared to be perfect when harvested from trees that had been sprayed soon developed a form of rot in the barrel or box. Much of this loss, says the entomologist, can be traced directly to the door of the maggot. In cases where the spraying lacked thoroughness the insect has become a serious menace.

Professor Ruggles explains that the mature form of this pest is a little fly about the size and shape of the house fly. It may be seen during July, August and early September. The female flies make an opening in the skin of the apple and lay their eggs. The maggots soon emerge from the eggs and by tunneling through the pulp cause the breaking down of the fruit.

"Their nefarious work is done, therefore, after July when the ordinary spraying operations of the season are supposed to be over," says Professor Ruggles. "Unless the fruit grower has sprayed with great care early in the season, leaving much of the poison on the fruit and leaves, the insects will take a good share of the crop. The spray poison cannot reach the eggs or maggots within the fruit, but it will get the flies if applied early in July or just before they lay their eggs.

"When the pest is well established three late sprayings are necessary—the first early in July, the second about July 20 and the third about August 10. When the spraying just after blossoming time and later has been thoroughly done, one spraying in July is sufficient. A combination of arsenate of lead and lime sulphur should be used in spraying. The first will kill the fly, and the latter will wipe out fungous diseases."

Preparation of Vinegar "Bee."

Vinegar bee and the honey bee are not related. Let this fact sink in widely and deeply, otherwise the mail of Professor Francis Jager, chief of the division of bee culture at University Farm, may become overburdened with requests for full information of the vinegar bee, also with orders for its early shipment if the man wise in bee lore can recommend it.

There are honey bees—millions of 'em—at University Farm, while if there is a single solitary vinegar bee on the state's 420-acre farmstead it is privately held and is not on the market. Persons who just must have a vinegar bee and cannot be happy without one must look elsewhere.

Most persons, even those who have never been stung, know the honey bee. The other bee, on the other hand, seems to be a stranger to many people—even to scholars and statesmen. It is true both bees have stingers, though of different degrees, but the vinegar bee looks like a small section of a head of cauliflower and is used by the progressive housewife in making vinegar. It may be dried and kept for an indefinite time.

Circular No. 6, from the division of home economics, University Farm, says that the making of vinegar consists of the addition of vinegar yeasts and vinegar bacteria to a sugary liquid. "Although little that is definite is known about the vinegar bee," says the circular, "a study of it seems to indicate that it is a mixed culture of vinegar yeasts and bacteria." To make it absolutely clear and beyond all controversy the circular might have added that the vinegar bee was never, no never, to be confused with the honey bee.

The preparation of vinegar from the vinegar bee, or "mother," as it is sometimes called, is described in the circular as follows: One cup vinegar bee; one cup sorghum or molasses, best quality; two quarts warm water. Add vinegar and a good quality of sorghum to the water. Let stand five days. The bee, alive to the situation, will double its bulk. At this time remove the bulk of the bee for future use and let the vinegar stand for three to five weeks so that the remnant of the busy bee may act upon the syrup, in other words, produce vinegar. From the time the bee is added, the mixture should be kept in a fairly warm place.

The prompt application of cold water hardens hot grease spilled on the floor and keeps it from going into the wood. Then it's easy to scrape it off and remove the stain with a wet cloth sprinkled with washing soda.

Boys and girls are more likely to stay on the farm if given a chance to accept responsibility and to feel the joy of ownership in some animal or flock of chickens, or proceeds from some particular piece of land. Club work is having a tremendous influence in bringing these things about.

"After the breeding season is over and there are no eggs or larvae in the hive, bees should be winter fed," says Francis Jager, chief of the division of bee culture at University Farm. "Every colony should receive ten pounds of pure sugar sirup, no matter how much honey they have. Those that are light should be fed more. Bees do best on sirup in winter, because the best of honey contains pollen grains which fill the intestines of the bees in winter causing dysentery if they eat too much or if the winter is too long."

The Case and The Girl

By Randall Parrish

"MY FIANCE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her. Matt knows he's going it blind, but the girl is so charming that he just can't say no. Beside, the war has merely intensified his thirst for adventure.

"Take the gentleman's bag to the blue room, Sexton," she said calmly, "and then lay out his evening clothes."

"Yes, miss."

"I will be in the hall when you come down, Captain, but there is no hurry."

West followed the servant up the softly carpeted stairs, finding the apartment assigned him not only extremely comfortable, but even elegant in its furnishing. Evidently he was in a home of wealth and refinement. Who could this strange girl be? this Natalie Coolidge? And what could she possibly desire of him? He stood immersed in these thoughts, when Sexton spoke.

"Shall I assist you, sir?"

"No; it will not be necessary. What is the hour for dinner?"

"Seven o'clock, sir."

"I have ample time, then. That will be all."

The man retired noiselessly, closing the door after him, and West began slowly to dress, rather amused at the care he took, that all details should be as correct as possible. Unquestionably the girl interested him oddly. He endeavored to analyze what constituted her peculiar attractiveness, but without arriving at any definite conclusion. She was young, of course, and undeniably pretty, with eyes really remarkable, and a smile not to be easily forgotten. Then she was so self-poised, so confident of herself, so naturally informed. All these things had their charm, and, coupled with her undoubted beauty, left his brain in a whirl.

He was satisfactorily dressed at last, and descended the broad stairs, conscious of a thrill of expectancy; nor was he doomed to disappointment.

Miss Coolidge met him in the dimly lighted vacancy of the hall with smiling eyes of welcome. She was in evening dress, a creamy satin, revealing white shoulders, and rounded, beautifully molded arms, visible beneath folds of filmy lace. If he had dreamed the girl attractive before in the plainness of street costume, he now beheld in her a new vision of loveliness. His heart throbbed at the sight, every nerve tingling to the intimate tones of her voice. She was apparently in the highest spirits, eager to overstep all conventionality.

"Again you please me," she said, surveying him critically. "Really this is too much, the wonderful way in which you meet every test."

"You mean in clothes?"

"In everything, so far. Clothes—yes; do they not reveal the very soul of a man? I hardly think I could ever have forgiven if you had come down not looking the part you are to play."

"Nor could I have forgiven myself, if I am to enjoy the pleasure of taking you in to dinner."

"That privilege is yours even without the asking. But," quizzically, and glancing up frankly into his eyes, "You may not care when the time comes. For the great test arrives first. So, buck up, Captain, for you are going to have the shock of your life. Whatever you do, even if you feel that you are about to faint, don't, for my sake, let your face show it."

"But," he protested, "give me some warning, some opportunity to prepare for such an emergency."

"No," she laughed gaily, "there is no time; it is ordained to fall upon you like a thunderbolt. They are all in there waiting for us now. You will offer me your arm."

He accompanied her, amused, yet bewildered, through the wide archway into the more brilliantly lighted drawing room. It was a magnificent apartment, containing a half dozen people. The one nearest the entrance was a man of middle age, exceedingly pompous and dignified, who immediately arose to his feet, expectantly. Miss Coolidge cordially extended her hand in greeting.

"So glad to learn you could be out, Judge," she said, the least perceptible hesitancy in her voice. "Permit me to present Judge Cable, of the Supreme court; Captain West, my fiance."

CHAPTER II

Miss Coolidge Explains.

For an instant West was absolutely helpless to assert himself. The calm assurance of the girl's voice in this unexpected introduction left his brain paralyzed with bewilderment. Yet his features did not betray his condition, nor did he entirely lose control over himself. Fortunately he was not compelled to speak, as Cable voiced his own surprise fluently.

"Well, well," he exclaimed. "This is certainly startling, Natalie. I am, indeed, bereft of words, yet I congratulate [illegible] Captain—Captain West, I think was the name? You are then in the service, sir?"

"Discharged from the Engineers."

"Ah, exactly. I can hardly adjust myself. Friends, come forward. I have to make an announcement extraordinary. It seems this sly minx has arranged a surprise for all of us. Perchance this was the purpose of our little dinner party?"

"Oh, no, Judge," protested Miss Coolidge, her cheeks flushed, yet otherwise perfectly cool and self-possessed. "Really, this was unexpected, even to myself. I was not so much as aware that Captain West was in the city until a very short time ago. I am sure he will bear me out in this statement."

"I could not do otherwise, and be truthful," West felt compelled to admit.

"But what is this all about?" asked a female voice eagerly. "Remember we have not heard, Judge Cable."

"It is my pleasure then," he said gallantly, bowing, and at once instituting himself as master of ceremonies, "to introduce to you, Miss Natalie's fiance, Captain West—Mrs. Lonsdale, Professor Scott, Miss Margaret Willis, Colonel LeFranc, Mrs. Wilber Somers. Possibly there may be no necessity of my presenting the next gentleman—Mr. Percival Coolidge."

"Oh, but there is," the last mentioned interposed, a tall, rather portly man, with grey hair and mustache, "I must confess this is as much a surprise to me as to any one present. However," he grasped West's hand with apparent cordiality, "I hasten to add my congratulations, and to wish Natalie all the happiness possible."

The group slowly broke up, the members still discussing the undoubted surprise of this announcement. West found himself confronting Colonel LeFrance and Percival Coollidge, the latter instantly engaging him in conversation, evidently seeking more definite information.

"This engagement with my niece," he said uneasily, "must have been rather sudden? Even your name is quite unfamiliar to me."

"It was, indeed," admitted West, who had now completely recovered his nerve, and even begun to enjoy the situation. "Since my return from abroad."

"You were with the army in France?"

"In an engineer regiment. I have been in America only two weeks."

"Ah, indeed. And this is your home?"

Realizing that the elder Coolidge was diligently searching for information, West decided the best method would be a full confession.

"Oh, no," he said candidly, "I am from the South—Atlanta, Georgia. My father is a district judge, Robert Peel West, quite widely known, and my mother belonged to the Bullock family. I am a graduate of the University of Virginia, and also of the Massachusetts Polytechnic. Before the war I was connected for a short time with a well-known firm of engineers in this city, but, since my return, I have not resumed professional work. Having been wounded in France, I have felt entitled to a little rest after my return."

"Quite interesting, I am sure." Coolidge turned to the colonel. "You are southern also, I believe?"

"Very much so," was the quick response. "And I chance to know the name of Judge West rather well. I congratulate your niece on her choice of a life companion. There is no better blood in Georgia."

"This Is Certainly Startling, Natalie."

West passed the ensuing evening rather pleasantly, although obliged to be always on his guard against any incautious remark. Mr. Percival Coolidge was outwardly cordial enough, yet his manner continued distinctly reserved, and somewhat cold. West, however, attributed this largely to the nature of the man, and finally dismissed the thought from his mind altogether. The person who continued to puzzle him most was Natalie Coolidge, nor was he able to approach her in any way so as to obtain a whispered private word of guidance. He ventured upon thin ice once or twice most carefully, but the information obtained was infinitesimal, although it bore to some extent on the problem confronting him. The colonel innocently lifted the veil slightly, permitting him to learn that this was a week-end party, and that Miss Coolidge was the mistress of the place, her parents having been dead for two years. Percival Coolidge, her father's brother, and a manufacturer in the city, was her guardian, and the affairs of the estate were not yet entirely liquidated. Beyond this he apparently knew nothing of the family history, which he felt at liberty to communicate.

West was assigned to escort Miss Willis, a tall willowy blonde, and quite talkative, into dinner, but her conversation ran largely to the theatrical offerings in town, and he found it impossible to change her trend of thought into other channels. Once the smiling Natalie appealed to him, familiarly calling him "Matt" across the table, and he responded with equal intimacy, yet her eyes avoided his, and it was plainly evident to his self-consciousness, that her remark was merely part of the play. More and more her actions mystified and perplexed; he could not discover the key to her hidden motive, or guess at her purpose in this masquerade. Nothing remained but for him to go quietly forward, playing the part assigned. She coolly and deliberately defeated every effort he made to get her alone, and yet this was accomplished in a manner so as not to attract the attention of others. Even Percival Coolidge, who, West felt, was watching them both shrewdly, never suspected the quiet game of hide and seek being played under his very eyes. As the evening progressed West became almost convinced that Natalie's principal object was to deceive this gentleman; that she really cared nothing for what the others might think, or say. It was all a masterpiece of acting, so exceedingly well done, as to finally convince the young man that she was greatly in earnest as to its success. She desired Percival Coolidge to have no lingering doubt of her engagement. And, finding all opportunity of explanation denied him, West yielded to the inevitable, and, for the evening at least, silently accepted his fate.

Nor, did circumstances favor him when the company finally broke up, and retired for the night. He had thought this moment might be propitious, but she calmly outgeneraled him again, suddenly bidding the men remain and smoke as long as they pleased, and disappearing herself up the stairway with Miss Willis. West, convinced that her retirement was final, soon sought his own room. It was eleven o'clock of a bright, moonlight night, and, feeling in no degree sleepy, he seated himself at the window to finish his cigar. Again and again his mind reviewed the strange events of the evening, unable to arrive at any definite conclusion. The harder he sought to delve into the mystery, the more obscure it became.

He had, indeed, reached some conclusions already. These might not be correct, yet they were already implanted in his mind. The guests of the night were mere puppets, having no real connection with the game being played, utterly ignorant of what was going on behind the scenes. The only one present having any real part was Percival Coolidge, and West had taken an instinctive dislike to this man. Only one explanation flashed into his mind to account for Miss Coolidge's unexpected announcement of an engagement between them—this would excuse any future intimacy; would enable them to meet alone freely without arousing comment. This appealed to him as the most reasonable explanation of the situation. But beyond this vague guess, it was impossible to delve.

Tired by the uselessness of such thinking West finally sought the bed, and must have slept, although scarcely aware that he had closed his eyes. Some slight noise aroused him. The door leading into the hall, which he had failed to lock, stood partially ajar, and his eyes caught the vague glimpse of a figure gliding swiftly through the opening. With one bound he was upon his feet, springing recklessly forward. The hall was dark, but for a patch of moonlight at the further end. Against this he caught an instant, flitting glimpse of the intruder. It was a woman, yet even as his eyes told him this, she seemed to vanish into thin air—the hall was empty.

Vague and indistinct as was that fleeting vision in the moonlight, West felt no doubt as to the identity of his visitor—the woman was Natalie Coolidge. His one glimpse of her vanishing figure assured him of this fact, and he drew back instantly, unwilling to follow. Where she had gone he neither knew, nor cared. She had come to his room secretly, supposing him asleep, and this surprising knowledge dominated his mind. What could such an act mean? There was mystery here, at least, a mystery beyond his power of discernment. However, this recognition rather hardened him to his task than otherwise.

This time he locked the outer door carefully, and lay down on the bed, wondering if there would be any further [illegible] think, he was listening eagerly for the slightest sound of movement in the hall. There was none. He could only wait, and watch for the next move. Perhaps the morning would bring full explanation. With this conception in his mind, his head sought the pillow, and he lapsed into unconsciousness.

The long training of army service caused West to awaken early, while the house was yet quiet, but with the dawn already red in the east. He crossed to the window, and looked out, caught the flutter of a white skirt, and realized instantly that, early as the hour was, Natalie Coolidge was already up and about. He wondered if her presence might not be an invitation for him? Perhaps she had deliberately chosen this early hour, before the others awoke, to explain her strange conduct of the previous evening? At least, here was an opportunity to see and talk with her alone.

He dressed swiftly, and slipped noiselessly downstairs, unlocking the front door, and emerging into the fresh air, without encountering any stray members of the household. He passed beyond a vine-draped arbor before she realized his approach, and straightened up, welcoming him with a little laugh, her eyes full of demure mischief.

It Was a Woman.

"I rather suspected army discipline had not entirely worn off," she said pleasantly, "and that you might still prove to be an early riser."

"And does this expectation account for your presence?"

"Not wholly; it has become a habit with me. However, I promised to be very frank with you, did I not? Then I will begin now; this morning I really hoped I might see you for a moment before the others were stirring—we have so much to talk about."

"It certainly seems so to me," he responded honestly, yet not greatly encouraged by the amusement in her eyes. "Surely you cannot expect real service when given so blindly?"

"No, I do not. I mean to trust you fully. It is the only way; but do you still truly wish to serve?"

"I am enlisted in the cause without reserve," he insisted warmly, "While I learned but little last evening, that little was enough to convince me there is something strange under the surface. Your calling me to your assistance is no joke—you actually need me."

"I need some one on whose judgment and courage I can rely," she answered earnestly, "and I believe now that you are the one. It is rather an odd situation, Captain West, but the circumstances surely justify my action. Perhaps I shall have time to partly explain now."

She seemingly found it difficult to begin her story. The flush deepened on her cheeks, and her lips parted.

"It really seems so ridiculous," she explained at last desperately. "Almost like a dream of fancy, and I hardly know how to put the situation into words. If I were ten years younger I would almost be convinced myself that it was all imaginary, yet everything I tell you is true. I wonder if you will believe me?"

"Do not question that. I realize fully your earnestness."

"Yet I am going to test your credulity, just the same. Those people you met last evening have nothing to do with the story—none of them, at least, unless it may possibly be Percival Coolidge. I am rather afraid of him; I always have been. I believe he knows what all this trouble means, but I do not dare go and talk with him about it. That is really what is the matter, I suppose—there is no one I can talk to; they would only laugh at me.

"My father was Steven Coolidge, and was very wealthy. He did not marry until late in life, and I have reason to believe it was a great disappointment to his brother Percival that a child was born. Perhaps I ought not to make such a statement, but much has occurred to impress me with his dislike."

"He is your guardian?"

"Yes; you learned that last night?"

"From the colonel; he seemed to enjoy talking, and naturally, I was curious. Has Percival Coolidge wealth of his own?"

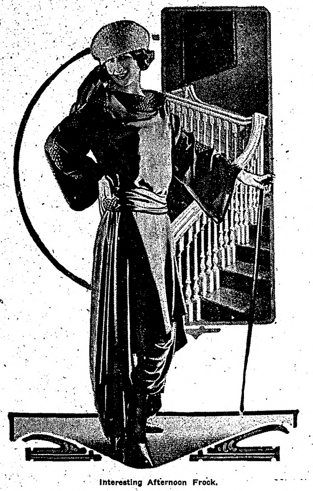
"You mean that fool story about some one else pretending to be her?"

Silks and Velvets Popular;

Winter Hats Now Appear

FOR afternoon and evening dresses, fashion at present seems to have eyes only for silks and velvets in lustrous, and often intricate, weaves. These new weaves bring to designers fabrics that are rich and elaborate, but continue to be supple and clinging, as they must be to keep up with the enthusiasm for draperies.

The new fabrics merit study; some of them are printed in raised designs, others have surfaces described as "blistered," "fluted" or "crinkled," they are all descendants of the metalasse of other days.

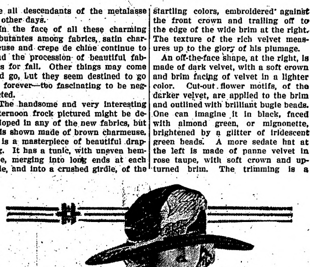


Interesting Afternoon Frock.

In the face of all these charming debutantes among fabrics, satin charmeuse and crepe de chine continue to lead the procession of beautiful fabrics for fall. Other things may come and go, but they seem destined to go on forever—too fascinating to be neglected.

The handsome and very interesting afternoon frock pictured might be developed in any of the new fabrics, but it is shown made of brown charmeuse. It is a masterpiece of beautiful draping. It has a tunic, with uneven hemline, merging into long ends at each side, and into a crushed girdle, of the satin. The tunic falls over a draped underskirt and, the plain, long bodice has large, flaring sleeves and a chic bateau neckline. Cord, covered with the satin, is used for making ornaments that embellish the sleeves and each side of the girdle. The same cord makes a border for the neck line.

When Tennyson sang of "the splendor dear to women," he revealed his insight into one of their ever-returning moods; they array themselves in splendor every once in a while, [illegible] and especially in winter millinery, there is a chance for a bit of splendor for everyone. Fabrics are rich, brocades and metal tissues are dazzling, plumage is gorgeous, embroideries and trimmings draw inspiration from Persia and India (and we look to the East for splendor). A little group of four hats, shown herewith, reflects that regal note that appears in all the styles. The velvet-covered shape at the top of the group, in dark brown Lyons velvet, becomes the background for a royal parrot in startling colors, embroidered against the front crown and trailing off to the edge of the wide brim at the right. The texture of the rich velvet measures up to the glory of his plumage.



Group of Winter Hats.

An off-the-face shape, at the right, is made of dark velvet, with a soft crown and brim facing of velvet in a lighter color. Cut-out flower motifs, of the darker velvet, are applied to the brim and outlined with brilliant bugle beads. One can imagine it in black, faced with almond green, or mignonette, brightened by a glitter of iridescent green beads. A more sedate hat at the left is made of panne velvet in rose taupe, with soft crown and upturned brim. The trimming is a heavy cord, covered with taupe velvet, and large satin-surfaced beads in the same color.

At the bottom of the group a fine felt heralds the return of these lovely hats. It is a tailored model with a very ingenious trimming of folded ribbon about the brim edge and a sunflower rosette, made of the same folded ribbon, posed on the crown.

Great Art.

Of course art gift and amiability of disposition are two different things; a good man is not necessarily a painter, nor does an eye for color necessarily imply an honest mind. But great art implies the union of both powers.

At any rate the country is on an automobile basis, and those alarming statisticians, who are forever trying to show by figures that the national income is not large enough to buy tires and gasoline, might as well throw away their lead pencils and begin to worry about something else. AGREEMENT SEEN FOR NEAR EAST

Allies and Turks to Hold Conference at Mudania to Discuss Problem.

TURK TO YIELD, BELIEF

British Report Kemal's Terms Unacceptable Though Discussable—Turks Yield More Ground in Straits.

London—The Turks have evacuated Kara-Bigha and retired from the neutral zone at this point, says a dispatch to the Times from Constantinople. On the other hand, the dispatch says, Turkish infantry have appeared within the neutral zone at Bergaz, 18 miles northeast of Chanak and at Kusu-Keul, 12 miles south.

Constantinople—The Kemalist proposals which will be laid formally before the Mudania conference are "discussable, but no acceptable."

This was the decision of the extraordinary council, which met at the British embassy. It included the allied high commissioners, ambassadors, generals and admirals.

M. Franklin-Bouillon, the French envoy, through whose efforts with Kemal Pasha, the conference was made possible, expressed his belief to the Associated Press correspondent that an agreement would be reached at Mudania.

"Kemal will make an even greater effort for peace than he has made for war," he said.

Two Important Questions.

Two of the most important questions to be discussed at the conference will be demarcation of a new neutral zone on the Asiatic shores of the Dardanelles and at Ismid, and the evacuation of Thrace.

The Allies hold that Kemal's demands as outlined by M. Franklin-Bouillon are of such a nature that the Angora assembly would thereafter be in a position to reject the Allied note.

Kemal Pasha insists on settlement of all military questions before replyfour of the ministers at Smyrna accepted the allied note in principle, but the attitude of the Angora assembly is not known.

No Reference to Zone.

The Allies feel that Kemal's demands could have been made with better grace if the Allied note had been fully indorsed by his government. Kemal's armistice terms make no reference to a neutral zone or neutrality of the straits, but the opinion of the Allied council was that the most important question to be discussed would be the establishment of a provision neutral line at Chanak, as suggested by General Harington's latest note to the Turkish nationalist leader.

OFFICERS USE SIEZED BOOZE

Charge Made That "Evidence" Was Used by Agents and Friends.

Washington—Charges that "certain representatives of the department of justice" converted to their own use large stocks of liquor seized in the enforcement of prohibition laws, were made in a special report filed by the District of Columbia grand jury.

The report asserted that the liquor was removed from the warehouse used by the department for storage purposes and was used by the officials involved for their private consumption, for distribution to personal friends, and as gifts to favored institutions.

There was no charge that any of the liquor was disposed of for financial gain.

Illegal withdrawals covered in the report were declared to have occurred between July 20 and September 11, 1920. The jury did not name the individuals who were involved, but declared that their conduct "cannot be too severely condemned."

At the department of justice, officials indicated that no action was in prospect since the offenses complained of were by "former attaches of a former administration" of the department.

William J. Burns, chief of the department's bureau of investigation, confirmed the statement that large stocks of liquor held in the custody of the department had "disappeared" between the dates mentioned in the grand jury report.

The first intimation of such a situation, Mr. Burns said, came to him when counsel for a defendant in a liquor case which had lapsed under the statute of limitations, filed claim for return of the several cases of whisky involved.

Soft Coal Rate Cut.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Notice of reduced freight rates on soft coal shipments from all points of entry from Canada to North Dakota has been received from the Great Northern by the traffic department of the Commercial club. The new rates effective now are the result of negotiations between the state industrial commission and the railroad, the commission having assurance from Canadian mines that they would be able to furnish North Dakota with 500 to 1,500 tons weekly.

12 SHIPS TO NEAR EAST

United States Fastest Ships to Guard Americans.

Washington—The United States government has acted quickly to protect American lives and property in Asia Minor.

Two divisions of destroyers, twelve of the fastest warcraft in the naval service, were ordered dispatched to Constantinople. Ships in the Asiatic area already are on the scene.

Their explicit orders are to protect Americans in the danger zone, to succor and to feed them. Whether they go into action, it was said, rests solely with Admiral Bristol, United States commissioner at Constantinople. It was made plain at both the State and Navy departments there must be no equivocation.

This action followed fast on the turn of events in Greece and Turkey. With the collapse of King Constantine's government in Greece, it was feared that American lives might be endangered there. But instead of being dispatched to Smyrna, where there are thousands of refugees, the destroyers were ordered to Constantinople.

It was admitted that this is a measure to back up the policy enunciated by Secretary of State Hughes that the Turkish waters must be kept open to international commerce.

RHINE ARMY BILL SETTLED

Coloring Commodity to be Accepted As Rhine Army Payment.

Washington, Sept. 28.—Secretary of State C. E. Hughes has worked out a plan whereby the United States will be reimbursed for the cost of maintenance of the army of occupation on the Rhine.

The reparations commission after consultation with the Allied governments, it was stated officially, has agreed formally to permit the United States to receive its share of German dyes without money payment. The cost of these dyes will be credited on the American bill against Germany for the army of occupation.

According to war department figures the amount to date is somewhat over $256,000,000.

The demand of Secretary Hughes on the reparations commission for payment of the American bill for the army of occupation created a sensation in European capitals.

It is up to congress to provide a machinery for the distribution of German dyes which will be received under the agreement just concluded with the reparations commission. It is assumed that the ultimate consumer will be compelled to pay the duty imposed under the present tariff.

Superior Receives First Anthracite.

Superior, Wis.—The first cargo of hard coal, approximating 8,000 tons, since the resumption of anthracite miners, is at the Duluth dock. C. P. White, northwest federal fuel distributor, said. No other hard coal is reported enroute or loaded for northwest points. Mr. White said. Unless immediate action is taken in loading aboard ships for the northwest docks, and if the sailors' strike called for Oct. 1st is effective, the northwest will have to depend upon all rail shipments of this fuel for its supply.

Cabinet Sustains 3-mile Ruling.

Washington—The president and the cabinet has decided to restrict prohibition enforcement operations within the three-mile limit at sea except in cases where ships beyond that limit are in communication with shore through their own crews. Prohibition enforcemnt officials will be authoritatively cautioned to observe this decision.

New King in Jugo-Slav Revolt.

Berlin—The Black Hand militarists have proclaimed Prince George king of Jugo Slavik, according to reports from the Hungarian town of Baja, 90 miles from Belgrade. The revolution followed a bloody clash.

TURKS-BRITISH NEARER PEACE

Armistice Parley Oct. 3 Expected to Pave Way for Near East Peace.

Constantinople—Orders for a cessation of military movements in the Chanak region of Asiatic Turkey and for the suspension of the activities of the Turkish irregular forces in Thrace have been issued by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the Turkish Nationalist leader.

Paris—The text of Mustapha Kemal's reply to the Allied joint note of September 23 was made public by the foreign office.

The reply is dated September 29 and promises immediately to stop the military operations which have been developing toward Constantinople and Chanak in pursuit of the Greek armies. It accepts the proposal for the armistice conference at Mudania Oct. 3, with representatives of the Entente and nominates General Ismid Pasha to act for the Turks.

Dealing with Thrace, the reply is worded with market firmness.

It credits the Entente with sentiments of justice toward Turkey, but demands that Thrace shall not be left one day longer under the Greek army saying that it is indispensable that Thraec shall be evacuated immediately and restored to the Angora government up to the west of the Maritza river, including Adrianople.

London says the British cabinet was called into an extraordinary midnight war council by Premier Lloyd George.

Heads of war, navy and air departments participated in this council. They considered important advices received from General Sir Charles Harrington.

The issue of peace or war with Turkey was left to a later cabinet session. Government officials hoped more favorable news may be forthcoming from Constantinople before the ministers reconvened.

High governmental officials were most pessimistic regarding the situation.

The press frankly stated in large headlines that Britain was "on the verge of war."

The most acute war crisis since August, 1914, confronted Great Britain.

The government faces the alternative of "backing down" and evacuating the Chanak area of the Dardanelles neutral zone, or of driving the Turkish army out.

FIRES RAZE MINN. VILLAGE

Town of Zim Wholly Destroyed—Residents Escape.

Duluth—The forest fires of the north country broke control when wind lifted to 25 miles an hour. The village of Zim was completely destroyed and both sides of th eVermillion trail were rendered impassable. No loss of life was reported at Zim, the settlers having had sufficient warning, but not a building was left in the community.

H. G. Weber, forest ranger, issuing a call for help, described conditions as "worse than they have been for several years," and he did not exclude the disastrous fall of 1918, when the Moose Lake-Cloquet holocaust cost many lives and millions in property.

A menacing fire is reported in Koochiching county where 400 forest firefighters are battling the menace which has burned over an area of more than 12,000 acres.

Menace in Lake Strike.

According to figures of the Cleveland Ore & Coal Exchange here, there are 14,137 carloads of coal on lake docks at all ports.

Last week there were 13,000 carloads on hand, it was said.

With only half a normal supply of coal in the Northwest, the lake seamen's strike, union officials here assert, will take 85 per cent of the 5,000 sailors off boats of the Lake Carriers' association.

The Lake Carriers' association claims the strike will not materially affect it and will not interfere with the coal movement to the Northwest. E. J. Sullivan, secretary of the sailors' union here, said that about 100 men out of the 350 registered by the union in Cleveland already have left their boats.

Four Dead in Gotham Fire.

New York—Several persons were burned to death in a fire which broke out in a five-story apartment house. Flames shooting from the windows made it almost impossible for firemen to enter the building from scaling ladders thrown up from the street. Four dead were removed from the upper floor after the fire.

Ten injured persons were rushed to hospitals, three of them being firemen engaged in rescue work. None of the four who were burned to death were identified.

Daubney, 103, With Pioneers.

El Paso—A battle between Mexican federal troops and rebels was raging in the hills near Juarez, only a few miles from the Texas border. Government forces had the upper hand [illegible]

REVOLUTION IN GREECE FINISHED

Revolutionary General Recognizes Army—Nationals in Thrace Rebel.

London—The dethroned king, Constantine, Queen Sophia his wife, and the Princes Andrew and Nicholas have departed for exile on a Greek cruiser.

Athens reports that General Gonatas, the power behind the throne of George II, moved to reorganize the Greek army for a march into Thrace to protect it against the threatened invasion of the Kemalists.

In official circles it was expected that recognition of George as the successor of the dethroned Constantine would be forthcoming from the powers soon.

The new government assumed a more stable aspect as a new cabinet, headed by Alexander Zaimis, a former premier took office.

"The full reorganization of our military forces to defend Thrace is the main work of the new government," Gonatas declared.

"We wish to maintain order and achieve the cessation of internal divisions. We will give the country a nonpartisan government.

"We requested the removal of Constantine from the throne of Greece because he was an obstacle in the relations with our victorious Allies. Furthermore the revolution was carried out to avoid the loss of Thrace."

Fearing that an attempt may be made on the life of Constantine by some of the more unruly of the revolutionists, the leaders were guarding his whereabouts with the greatest secrecy.

The Greek army in Thrace has definitely joined the revolution. The army corps in the Epirus also has thrown in its lot with the revolutionists.

The revolutionary committee decided to submit to King George II the name of a cabinet with Zaimis as premier and M. Politis as minister of foreign affairs.

J. BULL WANTS RUSS TRADE

Company Acts in Co-Operation With Soviets, Is Announcement.

Washington—In a Russian newspaper published in New York there is a little advertisement which calls up a prospect of world wide importance. The newspaper is called The Russky Golos, and the advertisement that the Canadian Pacific Railway company is prepared to bring passengers from Russia to America and that the Canadian Pacific Railway company has opened an office in Moscow. It adds the words:

"The company acts in co-operation with the Soviet government.

The importance of this announcement is in the field of that greatest of all world-wide intelligent, energetic influences—British diplomacy plus British trade.

The Canadian Pacific Railway company has ships that come across the Atlantic to this continent, trains that go all the way across this continent to the Pacific. It has ships that cross the Pacific to Asia. It is one of the most impressive illustrations of British capacity and one of the most effective agencies of British imperial development. It needs just one more link in its world wide usefulness to Britain. That link is in Russia.

The government of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic at Moscow—in company with the government of the Russian Far Eastern Republic at Chita—controls the longest single stretch of railway line in the world.

The British government has a special trade treaty with the government of the Soviet Republic at Moscow.

"Tino" Has 10,000,000 Francs Fortune.

Paris—King Constantine is in no danger of being reduced to the penury which embittered the last days of former Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary, according to Greek reports here.

It is asserted that Constantine took precautions and has 10,000,000 gold francs in safe investments, deposited partly in New York, Brazil and Switzerland. As soon as the situation in Greece became disquieting, the magnificent jewels of Queen Sophia and the royal household plate were shipped to Zurich, Switzerland, in charge of a trusted friend and safely deposited in the vault of a bank there.

McCumber for Tariff Commission.

Washington — President Harding was said by some of his advisers to be giving consideration to appointments for two republican senators, H. S. New of Indiana and P. J. McCumber of North Dakota, who failed of renomination. Senator New might become governor general of the Philippines or governor of Porto Rico. Senator McCumber is under consideration for a place on the tariff commission.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU

ILLINOIS PICNIC AT OLNEY BIG SUCCESS

Barnyard Golf Features Annual Play Day of Farm Bureau Folks—Good Speakers.

This year Illinois Farm bureau folks enjoyed their annual play day at Olney in Richland county. It was the third annual picnic of the Illinois Agricultural association, and more than 6,000 people braved a two-day rain to attend.

Barnyard golf, the big feature of the annual picnic, attracted the attention of the crowd early in the forenoon. Fourteen two-man teams from as many counties were entered in the tournament for the silver loving cup trophy. Ed Torbet and Joe Heskett, expert horseshoe throwers from DeWitt county and winners of the tournaments at the past two annual picnics, were again entered bent on winning the trophy the third time, so that it would be their permanent prize.

It was an easy matter for the easy-going DeWitt farmers to win their way through the preliminaries and in the finals they were opposed by the team representing Douglas county. The twice-champs took two straight games easily, 50-23 and 50-21, Heskett of the DeWitt team throwing nineteen ringers in the two games. Torbert, who is said to be the better pitcher of the two, pitched unconcernedly while smoking his pipe, and seemed content to let his partner do the scoring.

Kettles Sizzling With Southern Illinois Chowder at the Third Annual Picnic of the Illinois Agricultural Association at Olney.

The most celebrated southern Illinois chowder served to the large crowd at noontime proved to be all that was claimed for it.

The program of speaking came shortly after noon with Howard Leonard, Illinois, and John Coverdale, secretary of the American Farm Bureau federation as the principal speakers. Senator Kessinger urged farmers to stick to organization work. The keynote of his address was: "There is no chance for the unorganized farmer in this organized world."

Secretary Coverdale emphasized the important features of the Farm bureau, and showed what the Farm bureau can do for the American farmer.

Bill Staas of Stephenson county gave a short colloquial sketch representing the "Lazy Farmer."

One of the features of the late afternoon was the mule race. N. F. Elder of the Illinois Agricultural association executive committee driving a white mule outdistanced Robert Clarke of the grain marketing department of the I. A. A., who propelled the Red Top mule.

Olney was decked in gala colors for the occasion of the picnic. A large number of townspeople helped H. B. Piper, farm adviser for Richland county, in making the third annual picnic a distinct success.

CO-OPERATIVE PLAN BIG AID TO FARMER

Dairymen of Stephenson County, Illinois, Say Milk and Cream Can Be Sold at Profit.

Eight hundred farmers of Stephenson county, Illinois, say co-operative marketing of dairy products is successful. These farmers are stockholders in the Stephenson County Marketing company, and the excellent receiving and manufacturing plant at Freeport is eloquent testimony to the fact that milk and cream can be marketed profitably by organized farmers.

Stephenson county farmers have a lot of pride in their company because in the short period of less than a year its growth has been such as to make it conspicuous in the field of co-operative marketing. The organization, from its inception, has been characterized by a spirit of loyalty and enthusiasm which has in no small way been instrumental in its success.

When the dairymen of Stephenson county decided to revolt against the low prices which had always prevailed in their dairy product market, they went about it in a systematic way. First, they appealed to the County Farm bureau, and its adviser, G. F. Baumeister, to help in making the preliminary moves in forming an organization such as they wanted. The county farm bureau, co-operating with the Illinois Agricultural association and C. Larson of its department of dairy product marketing, undertook to make a comprehensive study of the matter.

A representative was sent to the states of Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin to make a survey of co-operative creameries and co-operative marketing in those states. From the facts obtained from this survey, the organization of the company was put in motion in September, 1921. Five hundred farmers were signed up in a short time, and the company was incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000.

A large lot was purchased in Freeport and a modern creamery and receiving plant of brick construction was erected. Two pools were put in operation at once, one for fluid milk and one for cream. The returns to the members were so much better than they had been before that many additional farmers asked to join the company. Now the membership numbers around 800, and the capital has been increased to $75,000.

Under the able management of Alfred Ahrensen, the milk and cream receipts have increased each week. The milk received is sold at wholesale to dealers in Freeport, and some to Chicago. The bulk of the remainder is sold to a local condensery. When the cheese market is favorable, considerable whole milk is used in the manufacture of cream cheese.

The cream received is manufactured into butter which finds a large and desirable market through its high quality. It has established a reputation under the trade mark, "Vitagold."

In addition to housing the plant and the company's office, the main building provides office quarters for the Stephenson County Farm bureau, an organization which has always worked hand in hand with the marketing company.

As an organization, the company moves and progresses with machine-like precision. Scientific and modern principles of business and marketing have been the guide marks in building up a marketing success that is as strong as its 800 members.

ATTENTION TO POTATO CROP

South Dakota Warehouses Have Ample Facilities for Grading, Sorting and Loading.

As Hamlin county became one of the leading potato producers of South Dakota, it became necessary to look for an outside market.

As is usually the case where large quantities of potatoes are raised no attention was given to the grading, sorting and packing according to market demands, a number of the growers' potatoes were becoming diseased and run out, thereby resulting in much loss when reaching the terminal market because of the quality. Also with the increased production came the difficulty of being able to load cars without considerable amount of loss in time as well as hard work connected with the loading operations.

During the fall of 1920 the Hamlin County Farm bureau, feeling a necessity for research along this line, conducted rather an exhaustive survey at the loading points.

The findings of the committee resulted in the erection of two co-operative potato warehouses in this county with full facilities for unloading, grading, sorting, packing, storing and loading [illegible]

POULTRY

BETTER PROGENY BY CULLING

Improvement Made in Flock by Getting Rid of All Hens Except Most Prolific Layers.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

That culling the poultry flock to get rid of all those birds except the vigorous, prolific layers results in noticeable improvement in the progeny is shown by recent investigations at the United States experiment farm, Beltsville, Md. The late moulters selected from a flock of 100 Rhode Island Reds in the fall of 1920 laid seven more eggs per bird during their second year than the original flock as pullets. They were used as breeders the following spring, and the first Red pullets to commence laying in the fall of 1921 were found to be the offspring of these late-moulting hens. Their pullets in a period of seven months have already averaged about two dozen eggs per bird more than the original flock.

Examining a Hen to Find If She Is Laying—Measuring Distance Between Pelvic Bones.

But it is not alone in number of eggs that the late-moulters' progeny excel, but also in the value of the product, as the distribution was more even, a much larger proportion of the eggs being laid during the winter months. In the last seven months the daughters of the late moulters not only averaged two dozen eggs per bird more than the original flock, but the value of their product was, figuring at the same prices, about $1.04 per bird more during the same period. It is expected that this margin will increase during the next five months.

FEEDING METHODS FOR EGGS

Methods Adopted by California Community Result in Better Health of Laying Flock.

A mortality of less than 10 per cent for the year among hens entered in the egg-laying contest of Sonoma county, California, last year is reported to the United States Department of Agriculture by local extension workers, who worked out the feeding formula used in the contest. The health record of the hens entered and their laying average of 176 eggs per hen for the 364 days have led many poultrymen to adopt the management and feeding methods used in the contest. It is estimated that 50 per cent of the poultrymen of the county have changed their method of feeding during the last five years, due to extension work influence.

POULTRY NOTES

Water is almost as important as feed in egg production.

• • •

A large red comb indicates health and egg production.

• • •

Males in pens reduce the total egg yield for the year.

• • •

Early maturing pullets usually make good egg producers.

• • •

Medium weight hens of any variety are usually most profitable.

• • •

Ninety eggs pay cost. The 150-egg hen is worth six 100-egg hens.

• • •

Half blue ointment and half lard or tallow makes a good louse killer.

• • •

The price of feed does not always disclose its real value in making eggs.

• • •

Shade is very necessary to successful poultry raising. [illegible]

FEEDING IS MOST IMPORTANT IN GETTING PROFITS FROM POULTRY

rofits Are Greater When Houses Are Kept in Sanitary Condition.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Next to good breeding and health, good feeding is most important in getting profitable yields from the poultry flock. A few simple suggestions on feeds and practices, such as those in the following paragraphs from the United States Department of Agriculture, will help build up the egg yield.

Principal Grains Used.

The principal grains fed to poultry are corn, wheat, oats and barley. Corn and wheat are the most popular. Corn is the best and most economical single feed, but is very fattening and should always be used with some other grain. Wheat is the safest to feed alone. The usual practice of successful poultrymen is to feed a part of the daily grain ration ground. This is on the theory that it is easier to digest. Soft feed, while it is a little more economical, must not be overworked. Too much soft feed may cause digestive troubles.

Ways of Feeding.

Methods of feeding differ, but a good rule to try to follow is to have empty crops in the morning and never have them quite full until it is time for the chickens to go to roost. For the first feed, grain scattered in the litter in the morning is best, the sooner after the birds leave the roost the better. This induces them to exercise. Feed about one-third of the scratch mixture in the morning and the other two-thirds in the afternoon. A light morning feed keeps the hens hungry and exercising all day. Have the litter from three to six inches deep and dry. It may be of straw, hay, leaves or any other material of this sort.

Indicates Health of Fowl.

The condition of the droppings is a good indication of the hen's health. They should be of enough firmness to hold their shape, but not solid. The normal color is dark, shading off into grayish white. Droppings that are soft or pasty and of a yellowish or brownish color indicate too much fat or a lack of meat. If the droppings are watery and dark with red splashes of mucus in them, too much meat is being fed. A greenish, water diarrhea usually is evidence of insanitary conditions, either in the surroundings, the feed or the water.

A ration must necessarily be based on local conditions and prices, but any of those quoted below will be found satisfactory.

Ration No. 1.

Mash.	Scratch Mixture.
100 lbs. corn meal.	50 lbs. cracked corn.
40 lbs. meat scrap.	50 lbs. wheat.
6 lbs. wheat bran.	50 lbs. oats.
6 lbs. wheat middlings.

Ration No. 2.

100 lbs corn meal.	100 lbs. cracked corn.
35 lbs. meat scrap.	50 lbs. oats.

Ration No. 3.

100 lbs. corn or barley meal.	100 lbs. cracked corn.
50 lbs. wheat bran.	50 lbs. oats.

HOW MANY SEEDS IN POUND?

United States Department of Agriculture Makes Count of Number in Various Kinds of Grasses.

Counts to determine the relation between the number of grass seeds to the pound and the number of pounds required per acre to assure a good stand of grass, have been made by the United States Department of Agriculture. In general the fine-seeded grasses require fewer pounds of seed to the acre than do the coarse-seeded varieties.

The work of the department shows that timothy on the average has 1,200,000 seeds in a pound. Kentucky blue grass has 2,400,000 and Redtop, 4,000,000, while Sudan grass has only 50,000. Orchard grass has 500,000; Canada blue grass, 2,700,000; tall meadow grass, 150,000; meadow fescue, 240,000; foxtail millet, 200,000; sheep's fescue, 680,000; red fescue, 500,000 seeds; Italian rye grass, 280,000; perennial rye grass, 280,000; and Bermuda grass, 1,800,000.

Timothy usually is seeded at the rate of 15 pounds to the acre; Kentucky blue grass, 14 to 18 pounds; Redtop, 10 pounds; and Bermuda grass, 5 pounds. Orchard grass is usually sown at the rate of 25 pounds to the acre; Canada blue grass, 15 pounds; and tall meadow oat grass, 40 pounds. Meadow fescue requires 25 pounds to the acre; foxtail millet, 12 to 25 pounds; sheep's fescue, 28 pounds; and red fescue, 30 pounds. Italian rye grass is sown at the rate of 30 to 40 pounds per acre; perennial rye grass, 30 pounds; and Sudan grass, 12 to 2[illegible] pounds per acre.

There are some 6,000 distinct species of cultivated and wild grasses in the world but only about 20 of these are of importance in the United States.

DECREASE IN GRAIN CROPS

Reports Indicate Smaller Yields of the Principal Crops in England and Wales.

The production of wheat in England and Wales for 1922 is estimated by the British ministry of agriculture to be 63,040,000 bushels from an area of 1,969,000 acres, according to a recent cablegram from the London representative of the United States Department of Agriculture. This estimate is 6,730,000 bushels less than the estimated production last year.

The area sown to barley was reported as 1,862,000 acres and the yield as 40,720,000 bushels, compared with 42,472,000 bushels last year. The oats area was given as 2,161,000 acres and oats production as 74,320,000 bushels, compared with 80,264,000 bushels last year.

Big Advantage of Alfalfa.

Even under the most favorable conditions common clovers cannot compete with alfalfa as a hay crop. [illegible] rule, the former will not produce much more than one-half the quantity of the latter. Besides, ton for ton, clover is not so high in feeding value as alfalfa.

Early Fattening Best.

A rule obtains in poultry raising, as with all forms of live stock intended for meat, that the younger you can sell a chicken at a fair price the more profitable it will be.

Potato Tops Help.

It is a mistaken idea that the land will be injured by plowing down potato tops. They furnish a limited amount of vegetable matter and are worth plowing down.

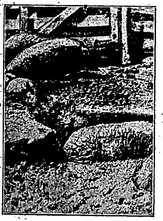
"DIRTY AS A PIG" IS SLANDER

Porker Is as Cleanly in Its Habits as Any Other Farm Animal if Given Chance.

"As dirty as a pig," is a common expression, yet the fact remains that a pig is as cleanly in its habits as other farm animals if given a chance. Too often the comfort of the swine herd is the last thing to be considered on the farm but it has been fully demonstrated that hogs will quickly and liberally repay for extra attention given them. Since the profit in feeding hogs depends upon the amount of gain per unit of feed, and since perfect health is necessary to secure the highest possible gains, it is of the utmost importance that suitable conditions for handling hogs should be the first thing to take into consideration.

Vigorous stock, drainage, a pure water supply, feed, suitable runs, shade, buildings, farrowing pens, feeding places, wallows, etc., must all be planned for and the plans systematically executed. Resistance to disease is natural, or it may be acquired. Natural resistance depends very much upon physical vigor. Exposure, poor food, parasites and other things that lower the vitality not only prevent hogs from making satisfactory gains but lower their resistance to disease as well.



Give Your Pigs a Chance—They Die in This Kind of a Home.

SECRET OF SUPERIOR FINISH

Animals of Improved Breeding Excel in Feed Lot, at Market and on Butcher's Block.

Why are some feeders able to finish their cattle more economically and more rapidly than other feeders who feed cattle of the same age? Why do some fat cattle top the market while others sell a dollar, maybe three dollars, below the top. Why are a great many consumers of meat willing to pay 35 cents a pound for prime beefsteak while they would reject inferior steak at half that price?

Because animals of better breeding are superior in the feed lot, at the market, and on the butcher's block. Why are wellbred animals superior? Because they have been bred for performance and have been selected accordingly for many generations. Have not scrubs been bred for performance? Decidedly not. The breeders of scrubs have had no future in mind. They have been bred for no definite improvement. Naturally then there are many very undesirable qualities in every scrub. A scrub bull will sire no two calves alike. He tears down a herd while a good purebred bull builds up a herd.

TEACH PIGS TO EAT GRAIN

Creep Should Be Provided for Little Porkers in Order to Wean Them Without Stunting.

It is important that pigs be taught to eat before they are weaned. They first learn to eat with their mothers, starting when about two weeks of age. Later they should be fed in a creep. In this way pigs may be weaned without being stunted.

It is advisable to take the sow from the pigs rather than take the pigs from the sow.

BALANCED RATION FOR SOWS

Shelled Corn, Tankage, Wheat Middlings and Salt Fed With Pasture Is Most Excellent.

A good ration for sows with litters consists of shelled corn, plus meat tankage, plus wheat middlings and salt, all self-fed. This ration, fed with good pasture and as much milk as can be spared, will keep the sows [illegible]

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.
Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

"Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned, fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law, make the necessary provisions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of the amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business, and to require that the proceeds of such taxes shall be distributed in the manner following, to wit: fifty per cent to the general revenue fund, forty per cent [illegible]

REALLY HAD GRIEVANCE

Heavily laden with bundles and intent on further incumbering herself before ending a shopping tour on F street, a lady of avoirdupois strolled by the store windows at a leisurely pace, blissfully ignorant that a diminutive newsboy impatiently was awaiting a chance to pass her in the same direction and hurry on to make a sale.

Suddenly the portly lady halted before a display of millinery or something so abruptly that the newsie collided with her forcibly, jarring loose from her grasp one of the packages.

Chivalry, harking back to the days when knighthood was in flower, prompted the young American immediately to exclaim, "Excuse me, lady," the while picking up the fallen bundle. The Twentieth century sense of right was not to be downed, however, and the urchin added, not insulently:

"But y' oughter 've given me the stop signal sooner!"—Washington Star.

CAR SERVICE DEMORALIZED

Potato Growers Facing A Very Serious Situation In Regard To Shipping

Railway transportation in Minnesota is in a deplorable state, and unless the Interstate Commerce Commission exercises its authority to bring Eastern roads to time, the Northwest will suffer immense losses. The Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Soo virtually refuse to load cars with potatoes for interstate shipment. In the past three weeks these roads have lost nearly ten thosand cars and have recieved none in return. Secretary Thos. Yapp, of the Minnesota Commission, is in Washington with instructions to camp at the door of the commission until relief is forthcoming. Eastern roads have thosands of idle cars, but they refuse to send them west as empties. On the other hand they are showing a disinclination to return western cars that have gone over on their lines. The Great Northern had orders for 2015 cars in one day and only were able to furnish 82. The three roads mentioned could move 1500 carloads of potatoes a day from now until close of the season if cars were available.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. M. Hyland, Herman Anderson, Oscar Hauge, M. Jackson, Mable, Ruth and Paul Anderson motored a week ago Sunday to the L. Giese home near East Grand Forks and spent the day there.

The Carl Johnson, Richard Larson and A. J. Hed famillies, Misses Olympia Moen, Esther Hovet and Lulubelle Jerpe were guests at the S. M. Hoff home for supper last Thursday evening.

A new concrete bridge has been built across the creek near the old creamery to replace the culverts at that point. Knute Kolstad and Ed Peterson did the work, and made a very neat job of it.

Auction Sale

A sale of stock, machinery, fodder and other articles will be held at the Geo. Breitsprecher farm northwest of Wylie on, Wednesday, October 18 th. See big bills for complete list of property to be sold.

Bishop Campaigning

Judge J. M. Bishop of Thief River Falls, was here last week in interest of his candidacy for district judge from this district. Mr. Bishop was accompanied by E. M. Wilson of Marshall County, the "dirt farmer" who was eliminated at the primary election in his campaign for the same position. Mr. Wilson is putting forth his best efforts to secure election of Judge Bishop, and being a real live wire he is cutting quite a swath.

Enjoy Social Hour

The basement of the Norwegian Lutheran church was filled with people, old and young, last Sunday afternoon, when the members of the church had decided to have a "social hour" together. A special welcome was extended to a number of new members on this occasion. Guests of honors were the Public School teachers to whom was extended a hearty welcome and good wishes for the success of their work.

Daily Freight Service

The Great Northern has started running a daily freight on this line. Increased business is given as the reason. A shortage of cars is delaying shipment of both potatoes and grain from this section.

Use of firearms, especially along the river within the village limits, has become so common as to be a nuisance. As a village ordinance prohibits shooting within town limits, steps have been taken to stop it.

N. J. Anderson was down from Thief River Tuesday looking over the political situation as relating to his campaing for re-election to the office of Register of Deeds.

Some repair work is being done, new walks will be built, and the basement entrances inclosed at the Norwegian Lutheran church on Water Street.

Thousands of geese have been noted going south the past week. Whether or not this indicates coming cold weather soon remains to be seen.

Mrs. N. A. Nelson is a delagate to the meeting of the Foreign Missionery Society which meets at Warren this week.

A good sized crowd is in attendance at the Henery Simonson auction sale which is taking place today.

State Good Roads

Minnesota is coming in for some mighty valuable advertising as result of progress made on its state road system. Tourists from other states who have occasion to travel long distances on Minnesota roads, are unanamous is their praise. The one man control plan which was scoffed at when the good road amendment was passed, has proven to be the best thing that ever happened to state road management in this state.

Buy A Cord Of Wood

Campaigns of various kinds to "buy a bale of cotton", or a Treasury bond and other things have been waged in different sections from time to time since the war. Some of these campaigns serve a good purpose. One that would be in order here at present is to "buy a cord of wood." In view of high prices for coal, it would be better to keep the money at home by patronizing our home farmers by purchasing their wood. Every dollar spent at home keeps just that much in circulation in the home community. Buy wood whenever you can, and buy it from the people who trade here.

State Taxes Redused

A reduction of over two and a half million of dollars in the 1923 state tax is announced by the State Auditor This means the tax payers of Minnesota will be saved an amount equivalent to over one dollar for every person within the state.

Last year for the first time in the history of the state the tax levy for general revenue was omitted entirely, and this year the same action is repeated in spite of the fact that other states find it necessary to impose usually heavy levies.

GIVE THE BOY A CHANCE!

The young man who weekly deposits a portion of his earnings seldom harvests a very large crop of "wild oats." Parents can do no better than to assist their boys in starting a bank account. It is a stepping stone to all that is good.

"PLAY IT OUT!"

SYNOPSIS.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure.

"Only what my father left him, which was a considerable sum, and a limited interest in the business. He was very much dissatisfied with his share. Before I was born he had confidently expected to inherit everything."

"The estate then is not settled?"

"Not until I am twenty-five; within a few days now."

"And your mother?"

"She died at my birth."

West leaned forward eagerly. "It is the estate then that troubles you?" he asked swiftly. "You imagine it has wasted?"

"No, not at all. They tell me it has increased in value. Percival Coolidge is a good business man, but something strange is going on behind the scenes. I seem to be fighting against a ghost."

"A ghost!"

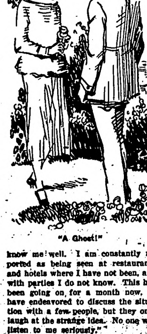
"Yes; now don't laugh at me! Do you suppose I would ever have done anything as reckless as advertising for help if I had not been actually desperate? Can you imagine a respectable girl performing so ridiculous an act, as putting her whole trust in a stranger, inviting him to her home, introducing him as her promised husband to her relatives and friends? Why, it almost proves me crazed, and, in a measure, I think I must be. But it is because I have exhausted all ordinary methods. I do not seem to be opposing anything of flesh and blood; I am fighting against shadows. I cannot even explain my predicament to another."

"You must try," he insisted firmly, affected by her evident distress. "I must be told everything if I am to be of any value. A half way confidence can accomplish nothing."

"But it sounds so foolish; I am being haunted! I know that, yet that is all I do know."

"Haunted, in what way?"

"I do not even know that; but by a woman, I think—a woman who must strangely resemble me. She pretends to be me—to my friends, to my servants, at my bank. I never see the creature, but I hear of her from others. She has actually drawn checks in my name, imitating my signature, and having them cashed by clerks who know me well. I am constantly reported as being seen at restaurants and hotels where I have not been, and with parties I do not know. This has been going on for a month now. I have endeavored to discuss the situation with a few people, but they only laugh at the strange idea. No one will listen to me seriously."



"A Ghost!"

"And you conceived the thought that perhaps a total stranger might prove more sympathetic?"

"Yes," she admitted. "If he was young and adventurous; provided I interested him at all. It would seem to offer me a chance; and then, if unknown to the party impersonating me, such a one might learn the truth unsuspected. Do you believe me, Captain?"

"I have no reason to doubt what you say. I mean to do my very best to uncover the mystery. You have these fraudulent checks?"

"Yes; one was returned to me only yesterday."

"I shall want them, together with one you drew yourself. You do not mind if I ask you one or two rather direct personal questions?"

"Assuredly not."

"What caused you to announce our engagement?"

She laughed, but from sudden embarrassment.

"It was silly, wasn't it! Really I do not exactly know; a sudden impulse, and the words were spoken. It occurred to me that our intimacy could be accounted for in no other way."

"So I supposed. Well, there is no harm done, but now, you understand, we must play out the game."

"Play it out?"

"Surely; act natural, permit no suspicion to be aroused. Even if I should feel impelled by duty, to kiss you, it is my privilege."

"Why—why, you cannot mean that!"

"Oh, but I do. This is no threat that I shall insist on carrying the matter to such an extreme, yet I must insist on the right if it becomes necessary."

Her eyes fell, the breath pulsing between her lips.

"I am not afraid," she said rather proudly. "Yes, I will play the game."

"Good! I knew you would. And now for the second question; why did you come to my room last night?"

She stared at him incredulously.

"Your room! I come to your room! Assuredly no; what can you mean?"

"Then it must be that I have already encountered the ghost," he declared smilingly. "For the very counterpart of you certainly visited me. I had a clear view of her. I would have sworn she was you."

"A woman?"

"Absolutely a woman; flesh and blood, no doubt as to that."

"When was this?"

"After midnight."

"It was not I, Captain West; please believe that—but hush; there comes Percival Coolidge!"

CHAPTER III

West Wins the First Hand.

The newcomer stood at the edge of the front steps, and paused long enough to light a cigarette before descending. His features were as clear cut as though done in marble, and about as expressive. For the first time, in the glare of the bright morning light, West took stock of the fellow, and realized his true nature. Instinctively he felt that here was the particular antagonist he was to be pitted against. His companion must have sensed the same fact, for she swiftly drew back beneath the shadow of the vines.

"You meet him," she whispered, "alone. I would rather he did not find us together."

She had vanished before he could interpose, slipping away so noiselessly, he was scarcely aware of her swift action. Coolidge strolled on, the blue smoke of the cigarette marking his progress. West stepped carelessly forth from the concealment of the vines, watchful for any change of expression on the face of the other. There was none, not even a look of surprise, or a tightening of the lip.

"Ah! Captain," he said easily, tossing his stub aside, and drawing forth his case for another. "Glorious air this morning; the advantage of early rising; you indulge, I presume?"

"An army habit, I mean to do away with later. Thanks. I suppose breakfast is not ready?"

"Hardly yet," glancing about inquiringly. "My niece is usually out here at this hour, which accounts for my venturing forth. She is not here?"

"Not now, although there are evidences that she has been," indicating the gloves and pruning shears visible beside the walk. "We must have arrived too late."

"So it seems. You are aware of who I am, I presume? the position I hold relative to her property?"

"Certainly; you are her uncle and guardian. Under the terms of the will you remain in full control until she is twenty-five, now almost at hand, except for an annual income, payable to her monthly. Is not that the situation?"

"You have apparently made very careful inquiry," he commented with a perceptible sneer. "No doubt this was a matter of deep interest to you."

"Of some interest, I confess," acknowledged West, controlling his temper. "Although my information has not come from inquiry. Miss Natalie was kind enough to talk to me about her affairs, presupposing my interest in them. My family is far from poverty stricken, and I have a very good profession. It is quite right you should know this."

"What profession, may I ask?"

"Civil engineer."

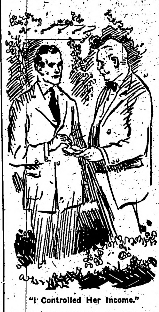
"But not established, I imagine?"

"I had very good connections before the war. Since returning from France, I have made no effort to renew these, or seek others. I, of course, expect to do so later, and shall be in no way dependent upon Miss Coolidge's fortune."

"Although quite willing to share it, I presume?"

"I think you have insinuated that often enough," returned West, fully aroused by the insolent words and manner of the other. "Perhaps it may be well for us to have a plain understanding without further delay, Mr. Percival Coolidge. As I understand matters, you are her guardian under the special provisions of your brother's will?"

"You are perfectly right, sir, and I should have been consulted previous to this engagement," Coolidge said with dignity. "Even now it is subject to my approval."



"I Controlled Her Income."

"I think not. Your guardianship was merely a special provision of the will, with reference to the estate. So I understand, at least. At twenty-one, she became mistress of her own personal affairs, and no longer needed to consult you."

"I controlled her income."

"Only the surplus; a certain sum was to be paid her each month until she was twenty-five; then the entire estate came into her possession. Beyond this you exercised no legal authority."

"You seem well posted."

"The lady herself informed me as to these facts."

Coolidge gave utterance to an oath, which burst from his lips before it could be wholly restrained.

"D—n you! just what is your game?" he exclaimed roughly, forgetting his pose. "Are you trying to get your nose into my affairs?"

"Most certainly not," returned West coolly, yet facing the other with a steady eye. "But I may be led to investigate those of Miss Coolidge, if she should so request. It seems she possesses no one to represent her at present—not even the family lawyer."

"What do you imply by that remark?"

"That she has gone to you, and to the attorney who represents the estate, relative to some very strange occurrences of late, only to be laughed at. No effort has been made to relieve her anxiety."

"You mean that fool story about some one else pretending to be her? And you propose investigating her wild imaginings, hey? By Gad, you are going to have an interesting time."

"I hope so; at least, I am hoping to discover some truth."

"Good. I wish you well," and his tone was one of decided relief. "Your adventures ought to prove quite amusing."

Coolidge laughed heartily, the whole affair apparently taking on a new aspect, now that he felt he comprehended the real purpose of the other.

"Oh, by the way, West, you must pardon me if I send Sexton into your room for a valise I left there. You see I occupied that suite until you came. I do not know why Natalie decided to change me this time—naturally wished to reserve the best for you, I presume."

"Very kind of her, I am sure. There is Sexton now."

"Which means breakfast is served. Shall we go in?"

The two men walked slowly up the graveled path, leading to the side door. West's thoughts were busy with this new discovery. Had he inadvertently stumbled upon a clue? So he had occupied the room usually reserved for Percival Coolidge. Perhaps here was the explanation of the coming of his strange visitor. West glanced aside at the face of his unconscious companion, deciding quickly to venture a chance shot.

"Were you expecting a caller last night?" he asked calmly.

Coolidge wheeled about, startled out of his self-control.

"A caller! Of course not. What put that in your head?"

"Because I had one, in that room you say you always occupied. The visitor vanished as soon as I was seen, and the thought occurred to me just now that you might have been the one sought."

"Perfectly absurd, West! You must have had a nightmare. What did she look like."

"Oh, I only had a glimpse in the moonlight; resembled a ghost more than anything else."

"And just about what it was," with a laugh of relief. "Some dream you better forget about. Come along; they are waiting on us."

They passed up the steps together; and into the pleasant breakfast room, where the remainder of the company were already gathered. Coolidge was again perfectly at his ease, genially greeting the guests, and had apparently already dismissed the incident from his mind. But West had settled on a point which Coolidge overlooked. He had gained the very information desired. He had carefully refrained from even suggesting the sex of his mysterious visitor. Percival Coolidge knew, without being told, that the caller was a woman. Then he also knew who that woman was.

The morning meal proved delightfully informal, Natalie gracefully presiding, and apparently in the highest spirits. No intimation of anything wrong burdened those present, the single servant silently performing his duties to the constant laughing chatter of those about the table. Even Coolidge, somewhat distant at first, yielded finally to the prevailing humor, and joined freely in the conversation.

This turned at last to the plans for the day, revealing a variety of desires, which Natalie arranged to gratify. Coolidge, rather to the surprise of the lady, suggested that Natalie accompany him into the city on a special errand of mercy. At first, amid the ceaseless clatter of tongues, West was unable to grasp the nature of his plea, or her reply, but finally overheard enough to arouse his personal interest, especially when his own name was mentioned in the discussion.

"I was not aware you ever concerned yourself in such matters," she said soberly. "It must be attended to today?"

"The case is very urgent, I am told."

"But how can I leave my guests—especially Captain West?"

West leaned forward.

"Do not hesitate on my account. I can easily amuse myself; or, if there is room, and it is not disagreeable to Mr. Coolidge, I might enjoy being of the party."

"Why, of course," she coincided eagerly. "Why couldn't he come along? There will be plenty of room if I operate the car. It is a case of destitution of which Uncle Percival has just learned—a widow and three children actually suffering. Surely it can do no harm for Captain West to accompany us?"

Coolidge exhibited no enthusiasm over the proposition; indeed West felt his response almost discourteous; yet this very suspicion aroused his own desire to make one of the party. The man was not pleased with this new proposal, that was evident enough; but the niece unquestionably desired him to accept the invitation. Not only her lips, but equally her eyes, pressed the matter, and West experienced no hesitancy in saying yes.

"Why, of course I will go," he returned heartily, "and I will be ready whenever you are."

"About half an hour then."

He retired to the room upstairs, partly for the purpose of exchanging his coat, but also half tempted to make a hasty examination of the valise which Coolidge had thoughtlessly left overnight. The conception had already taken strong hold on his mind that his visitor of the evening before had been the mysterious impersonator of Natalie Coolidge; and that she had come there with some deliberate purpose—no doubt a secret conference with Percival.

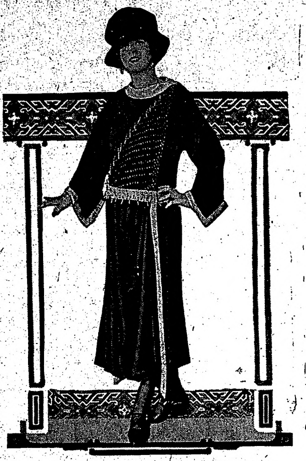
For what purpose? To West's mind only one object appeared probable. The man was too far advanced in life—certainly much above sixty from his appearance—to be involved in a love affair with so young and attractive a woman. Some other purpose, demanding immediate attention, must furnish the reason for her venturing to enter this house at such an hour, and coming directly to the room where she supposed Coolidge to be sleeping. To West's mind there could be but one answer. The two were mutually involved in a conspiracy of some nature, undoubtedly connected with the approaching settlement of the Coolidge estate. This girl, so strangely resembling Natalie, had in some way been discovered by the scheming guardian, who was now using her for his own selfish ends. She had been selected and trained to act a part—the part of Natalie Coolidge. Her ability to deceive had been tested in various ways. Now the moment approached when they were ready to play out the real game. Yet the nature of that game was in no way apparent. He could only keep quiet, and wait for some further development, even appear indifferent, while he secretly watched every suspicious movement of Percival Coolidge.

"Surely, you are not actually making love to me!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

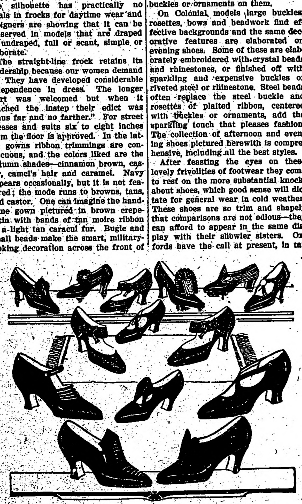
INSTEP-LENGTH FROCKS; FOOTWEAR FOR AUTUMN

JUST when the fashion reporter reaches the conclusion that there is no possible development of the straight-line dress which has not been displayed and no way of using beads that she has not seen, along comes a delightful contradiction of such ideas. The charming afternoon frock shown here is an example, and the chances are that clever artists in fashions will continue to think out new ways of varying these modes. The straight-line silhouette has practically no rivals in frocks for daytime wear and designers are showing that it can be preserved in models that are draped or undraped, full or scant, simple or elaborate.



CHARMING AFTERNOON FROCK

The straight-line frock retains its leadership because our women demand it. They have developed considerable independence in dress. The longer skirt was welcomed but when it reached the instep their edict was "thus far and no farther." For street dresses and suits six to eight inches from the floor is approved. In the latest gowns ribbon trimmings are conspicuous, and the colors liked are the autumn shades—cinnamon brown, castor, camel's hair and caramel. Navy appears occasionally, but it is not featured; the mode runs to browns, tans, and castor. One can imagine the handsome gown pictured in brown crepe-satin with bands of tan moire ribbon of a light tan caracul fur. Bugle and small beads make the smart, military-looking decoration across the front of the bodice. The skirt reveals lapped panels, with an uneven hem-line, and long, bugle beads on the belt and bodice. The decoration of beadwork has a flavor of American Indian bead embroidery that is interesting. More elaborate afternoon frocks or matinee gowns employ velvets, with silk applique trimmings that mimic rich embroidery, and use fur bandings. Their collars and sleeves are usually elaborated.



FALL MODELS IN DAINTY FOOTWEAR

Just to look over the showings of new footwear one would never imagine these dainty shoes as harbingers of styles for the coming winter. But the shops are not concerned so much with the display of the good, old reliable oxfords and boots for street wear that sell themselves—as they are about the dressy shoes in which the elements of style and beauty are such powerful factors in their success.

There are two predominating styles in the new dressy modes—the strap slipper and the Colonial shoe. For daytime wear, either suede or bright finished kid, patent leather and satin, make up the ensemble and sometimes two colors—as black and pale tan or black and beige—are combined in shoes. In the strap slipper there is an endless variety in the management of the strap feature and, occasionally some decorative stitching. Cross straps make opportunity for the use of small buckles or ornaments on them.

On Colonial models large buckles, rosettes, bows and beadwork find effective backgrounds and the same decorative features are elaborated on evening shoes. Some of these are elaborately embroidered with crystal beads and rhinestones, or finished off with sparkling and expensive buckles of riveted steel or rhinestone. Steel beads often replace the steel buckle and rosettes of plaited ribbon, centered with buckles or ornaments, add the sparkling touch that pleases fashion. The collection of afternoon and evening shoes pictured herewith is comprehensive, including all the best styles.

After feasting the eyes on these lovely frivolities of footwear they come to rest on the more substantial knockabout shoes, which good sense will dictate for general wear in cold weather. These shoes are so trim and shapely that comparisons are not odious—they can afford to appear in the same display with their showier sisters. Oxfords have the call at present, in tan or black calf and in kid, which is softer. They are laced in the front and have moderately low square or Cuban heels. When rubber heels are added—as they are by many active people—care is taken not to increase the height of the original heel.

To protect the ankles spats are worn with oxfords and are popular in tan and beige. They are even more comfortable than high shoes and have advantages—they can be taken off easily in the house and washed when they are soiled. Taking it all together, women are to be congratulated on the season's footwear, for it reveals the best efforts of American manufacturers—and they have no peers.

Allies and Kemalists Decide on Armistice Plan, and Then Comes Disagreement.

ISMET DEMANDS TOO MUCH

Insists Turkish Army Must Enter Thrace Immediately—Greeks Want American Help—Reginald McKenna's Advice on War Debts—Woman Appointed Senator From Georgia.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RUSSIA is determined to be a party to the peace conference of the Near East. Turkey says Russia and all other nations bordering on the Black sea must be represented in the meeting. France finds her policy regarding the Near East is almost identical with that of Russia, and therefore will probably favor the admission of the soviet government to the conference.

Do you think this would be both just and wise, and that soviet Russia's rulers have so far receded from their extreme policies that they are now entitled to representation in conferences of the powers?

IF, as now seems likely, the crisis in the Near East passes without warfare between Turkey and Great Britain the credit may be given largely to two men and to the good judgment of their governments in giving them a free hand. Those two are General Harington, commander of the British forces there, and M. Franklin-Bouillon, the skillful Frenchman who negotiated the preliminaries to the armistice conference at Mudania. Between them they are succeeding in bringing about a peaceful settlement and at the same time "saving face" for their countries. This latter, of course, was scarcely needed for France, but England had to recede from the position assumed for her by Premier Lloyd George and is now enabled to do so fairly gracefully.

Since Ismet Pasha, representing the Turkish Nationalists, was quite conciliatory, an agreement was speedily reached at Mudania giving eastern Thrace to the Turks and placing Constantinople under dual control of the allies and the Nationalists. The latter are to establish civil authorities in the capital, but agree that the allies shall remain there and control the port until definite peace arrangements are made. Eventually the Turks are to have full military and naval control of Turkish territory. Meanwhile the Nationalists agree to get out of the neutral zone and the British retire from Chanak to Gallipoli. Greece is given ten days to evacuate Thrace up to the Maritza river, and if she fails to do so the allies will blockade Greek ports and permit the Turkish Nationalists to send troops across the straits to push the Greeks out. This plan seemed to give assurance of speedy settlement of the whole affair, but on Thursday Ismet Pasha suddenly changed his attitude and vehemently demanded that the Turkish army be allowed to enter Thrace immediately. He would not listen to the arguments of General Harington, and the result was a temporary rupture of the conference. The allied generals asked their governments for further instructions and meanwhile they returned to Constantinople.

The fighting spirit of the Greek army in Thrace has been revived and both the soldiers and their officers believe they can successfully resist occupation of that territory by the Turks. Probably they must yield eventually, and this is admitted by Venizelos, who is acting as Greek ambassador at large. His present concern is the safety of the Greek population [illegible] steps to protect those Greeks and to prevent Turkish troops from crossing to Thrace until the Christians there have been evacuated. Already there are strong bodies of Turkish irregulars in Thrace and, to prevent atrocities and protect property, three military missions composed of British, French and Italian officers have gone to Adrianople, Lulue Burgas and Rodosto.

THE United States has sent 12 destroyers to the Near East to reinforce our naval fleet there and help in protecting life and property, but there is not the remotest chance of America's being drawn into war there. Bishop James Cannon of the Methodist church, South, sent rather hysterical cables to the State department from Constantinople urging militant intervention to save Christians in the East from Turkish massacres. In reply Secretary Hughes said the government had done and was doing all it could in this way through representations and by helping in the evacuation of the refugees from Smyrna. He concluded:

"As you are probably aware, the executive has no authority to go beyond this and there has been no action by congress which would justify this government in an attempt by armed forces to pacify the Near East or to engage in acts of war in order to accomplish the results you desire with respect to the inhabitants of that territory and to determine the problems which have vexed Europe for generations."

THOUGH the revolutionists in Greece are having considerable trouble in gettting together a cabinet, they are making progress in other ways and the new government may be considered as established. Actual recognition of King George II by the allied powers and the United States is expected soon. Former King Constantine and his wife and younger son are in Palermo, Italy, and it is said they will come to America.

Jugo-Slavia had been credited with hostile designs on Greek territory in western Thrace, but the Serbian minister to Athens has reassured the new government on this point, at the same time stating that his country would like to be assured free port rights at Saloniki. He said Greece could count on Serbia's help in restraining Bulgaria should she become aggressive.

DISPATCHES from Moscow indicate that the Turkish affair has brought within sight a rapprochement between France and Russia, which have been such bitter enemies since the advent of the soviet regime. As was stated above, they find their Near East policies practically identical, and now the French are being given assurance that the Russians will recognize their pre-war debts to France. The new feeling of friendliness is being fostered by a French business mission now in Moscow, and also by M. Herriot, mayor of Lyons and president of the radical socialist party of France, who also is visting Russia.

AUSTRIA is saved from disaster, at least for the present, by the League of Nations plan which was made effective last week when Chancellor Seipel and representatives of Great Britain, France and Italy signed the protocol. Austria is authorized to issue and sell bonds for nearly $132,000,000, and the three allied powers named, together with Czechoslovakia, are to be guarantors for 80 per cent of it; Austria pledges her customs receipts and the tobacco monopoly for the interest, agrees to balance her budget and accepts supervision of reforms by a commission of the league. The four guaranteeing powers declare they will respect Austria's territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty.

LOUIS BARTHOU, who has been French minister of justice, has succeeded Louis Dubois as president of the reparations commission and French member of the board. He may be a little more lenient toward Germany than his predecessor. There doesn't seem to be any improvement in Germany's financial condition. The [illegible] cancellation of orders with entire absence of fresh demands. On the London market Wednesday German marks struck a new low level. About 2,000 of them could be bought for a dollar.

THE American Bankers' association, in annual convention in New York, was addressed on the subject of the allied war debts by Rt. Hon. Reginald McKenna, former chancellor of Great Britain, and now chairman of the largest bank in the world. He said England was able to pay her debt to the United States in full and would do so, but he suggested that the bankers use their influence in favor of postponement of payment by any others of our creditors. Mr. McKenna warned his hearers that an attempt to enforce payment of the war debt beyond the ability of the debtor nations to pay would be fraught with the most serious consequences for the United States, as well as the countries of Europe. There would be an inevitable injury to the international trade of the whole world, reduced profits, lower wages, and unemployment, lower standards of living.

As a solution of the problem he suggested that "a full and frank" conference between the debtor and creditor nations should be called in order to discover the exact amounts that could ultimately be paid by the nations unable to meet their debts in full.

After a warm debate, the association adopted by a viva voce vote a resolution declaring that "it viewed with alarm" the tendency toward the establishing of branch banking in the United States and expressed its opposition to any branch banking in any form by either state or national banks. The banks of the towns and smaller cities were far too strong numerically for the big bankers who protested that branch bank system must prevail. John H. Puelicher of Milwaukee was elected president of the association.

GOVERNOR HARDWICK of Georgia was desirous that his state should be the first to have a woman United States senator, so he appointed to succeed the late Tom Watson, Mrs. William H. Felton, eighty-seven years old and distinguished for her work in the causes of temperance and woman suffrage. At the same time Mr. Hardwick announced himself a candidate for the unexpired term of Watson. The election is to be held November 7 and there is no chance for Mrs. Felton to qualify before that date by taking the oath of office in the senate chamber. Authorities in Washington are wondering whether or not she will be entitled to the salary and to the franking privilege and other prerogatives. Anyway, she has the distinction of being the first woman to be appointed United States senator with credentials duly made out and sent to Washington by a governor.

THAT the prophecies of another coal strike next spring will be fulfilled was made fairly certain by the action of the policy committee of the United Mine Workers of America Wednesday. It reaffirmed the demands of the February, 1922, convention of the union in Indianapolis, demanding the continuance of the present wages in coal mines until 1925, and, in addition, the six-hour days and five-day week, time and one-half for overtime work, and double time on Sundays and holidays.

American Farm Bureau

Colorado Extension Workers at Midsummer Conference at Fort Lewis School of Agriculture.

The Colorado State Farm Bureau, through its county farm bureaus, is closely co-operating with the extension service of the Colorado Agricultural college in its educational work among the farmers. The value of this co-operation is demonstrated by the success in counties where the county farm bureaus are best organized for community work as brought out at the midsummer conference of the extension workers.

DAIRY CO-OPERATIVE PLAN IS BIG WINNER

Goal of 6,000 Signers of Contract Passed on September 1 by Committee of Nine.

More than half of the milk of the 27 counties of the Chicago zone will be marketed co-operatively, as the result of the success in the re-organization of the Chicago Milk Producers' Co-Operative Marketing company. The re-organization plan is based on a contract devised by the committee of nine, appointed by E. B. Heaton, director of dairy marketing for the American Farm Bureau federation. According to the preliminary reports in the hands of the committee on September 1, the minimum of 6,000 signers which it was necessary to secure on that date in order to make the contract binding, was exceeded by at least 347, with many locals yet to report. Workers declare that the success of their campaign puts a new era in the business and indicates that before long harmony will reign between the organizations in this section. The campaign succeeded despite the bitter prejudices of some factions and the vigorous opposition from some milk dealers.

E. B. HEATON
Director of Dairy Marketing.

The counties affected are: Winnebago, Boone, McHenry, Lake, Ogle, DeKalb, Kane, Cook, DuPage, Whiteside, Lee, Kendall, Will and Kankakee in Illinois; Waukesha, Green, Rock, Walworth, Racine and Kenosha in Wisconsin; Lake, Porter, LaPorte, Jasper, Starke, Fulton and Wabash in Indiana.

The percentage of sign-up was strongest in Wisconsin. Without a single exception, every one of the 245 producers delivering milk to Beloit, Wis., signed. At Elkhorn, Wis., never organized before, 300 out of 353 patrons of the leading dairys were signed. Only three men still remained outside at Grays Lake, Ill. In Winnebago county, Illinois, where the Rockford, Pecatonica, Seward and Durand locals are all heavy producers, only about 100 dairymen were reported not signed.

In Green county, Wisconsin, where the marketing contract cheese pool will operate, more than 800 had signed, with the campaign not yet complete, working against the close time limit.

At Monroe, Wis., several hundred contracts had been signed up. At Monticello, Wis., 85 out of 88 had signed. New Glarus, Wis., reports more than 95 per cent. A number of smaller milk locals had reached 100 per cent several days before the close of the drive. Wisconsin men were not able to thoroughly cover Waukesha, Racine and Kenosha counties.

Indiana has signed its quota. Porter county, where the banks and the Valparaiso Chamber of Commerce took a hand, signed a large majority of its 500 producers. Even Lake county, Indiana, a center of disgruntled opposition [illegible]

The success of the Chicago campaign is of interest to producers and consumers not only in the Chicago district, but everywhere. The new contract contains unique features which lead many students of dairy marketing to believe that it will find application in a national way. E. B. Heaton, the farm bureau dairy marketing director, who has been largely responsible for the success of the plan, declares that the establishment of four pools within the main pool and the deduction of a small sum from the price in the inner district to be added to the lower price in the outer district in order to protect the fluid milk market from over-supply is essential to co-operative dairy marketing success in any section similar to the Chicago territory.

Mr. Heaton is secretary of the farmer's dairy marketing committee of eleven, and will propose that the essentials of the Chicago plan be adopted by the national committee.

BOYS AND GIRLS ARE IOWA FAIR WINNERS

Clifford Benson of La Moille, Iowa, Wins Grand Championship With His Calf.

Boys' and girls' club demonstrations and exhibits were main features at state and county fairs this year. In a number of states the county fairs are appropriating definite amounts to carry on this work and stimulate an interest in it.

One of the outstanding winners who just came to light at the Iowa State fair is Clifford Benson of LaMoille, Iowa, who showed the grand champion calf, a Hereford. With a class of 367, it took the judge all day to decide on young Benson's calf, which was a purebred named Beau Repeater. This gave Marshall county, Iowa, for the third consecutive year, the grand championship of one of the leading beef producing states of the nation. Marshall county is so elated over the winning with competition of 366 calves that they have secured funds to send the winning steers and boys to the Nebraska State fair.

The reserve grand championship went to an Angus calf shown by Dean Dodder of Letts, Iowa. The club boys and girls are showing, in addition to calves, around 400 swine and one thousand head of poultry. Over eight thousand dollars in prizes is being offered to the winners by the Iowa State fair.

In the state of Minnesota, Mr. T. A. Erickson, state club leader, estimates that the average appropriation of the 80 county fairs is $350, or a total of $28,000.

In New York state the premiums, prizes and incidentals provided by town and county fairs, banks, schools, farm bureaus and committees totals $14,500.

In the Hawkeye state, the assistant director of extension, P. C. Staff, estimates that at least $20,000 is being given in county prizes to boys and girls this year.

At the recent Central States fair held at Aurora, Illinois, Miss Frances Muth of Elburn, a thirteen-year-old girl, who has been in club work three years, won first and third place. She also entered her pigs in the open classes and won second and eighth on junior sow pigs and sixth on young herd and sixth on produce of dam. She raises Durocs, and good ones, having the Pathfinder strain. She plans to take her herd to the National Swine show at Peoria, and show the boys what a girl can do in the swine business.

Approximately $460,000 is being provided by the various counties in the United States this year in prizes for the boys and girls in club work. Many county farm bureaus are contributing liberally. The total amount being offered in prize money to boys and girls this year to encourage the work is $784,000.

DAIRY PRODUCTS—Butter markets firm during the week. Production shrinking and receipts on markets running lighter. Supplies especially of medium and lower grades appear ample to take care of immediate demand. A movement of storage goods heavy for season. Closing prices 92 score butter: New York 45c; Chicago 43c. Cheese markets steady during the week. Wisconsin board prices advanced Monday on small styles only. Firmness in the country not fully shared in distributing markets where buying is being held closely to requirements. Fall quality running good. Cheese prices at Wisconsin primary markets Oct. 5th: Twins 22¾c; Daisies 23½c; Double Daisies 23c¼; Longhorns 24¼c; Square prints 25½c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS—All classes and grades of live stock at Chicago showed sharp declines for the week. Hogs ranged from 25 to 85c down, lighter weights showing the greatest decrease. Beef steers 5 to 35c, cows and heifers generally 10c; feeder steers 10 to 15c and veal calves $1.75 to $2.25 lower. Fat lambs and yearlings declined 25 to 50c and feeding lambs 25 to 30c down while fat ewes were steady to 25c lower per 100 lbs. On Oct. 6th at Chicago hogs opened steady to unevenly higher, and closed weak to 10c lower on lighter weights and steady on others compared with Thursday's average. The cattle market was slow and generally weak to lower on all classes. Veal calves 50 to 75c lower. Fat lambs and sheep practicaly steady. Oct. 6th Chicago prices: Hogs, top $10.05; bulk of sales $8-$10; medium and good beef steers $7.15-$11.10; butcher cows and heifers $3.65-9.15; feeder steers $5.65-$8.10; veal calves $7.75-$11; fat lambs $12.50-$14.35; feeding lambs $13-$14.35; yearlings $8.75-$12.25; fat ewes $3.50-$6.75. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Sept. 29 were: Cattle and calves 163,136; hogs 7,884; sheep 124,868. As was the case of live stock prices, eastern wholesale fresh meat prices declined materially for the week. Beef ranged from weak to 2 lower, veal $1 to $5 lower on better grades and $1 to $2 lower on medium grades; lamb $4 to $6 down while mutton ranged from $4 lower to $1 higher and pork loins from $2 lower to $1 up per 100 lbs. On Oct. 6th beef was weak to $2 lower, veal steady at some markets and as much as $4 lower at others; lamb weak, tending lower; mutton weak to $1 lower while pork loins were unevenly 50c to $1 higher under light receipts. Oct. 6th prices god grade meats: Beef $15 to $18; veal $13-$17; lamb $20-$24; mutton $13-$14; light pork loins $27-$29; heavy loins $17-$22.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Peter A. Dahle and Emma Dahle his wife, mortgagors, to First State Bank of Plummer, mortgagee, dated February 20th, 1920, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, May 13th 1920, at 8:30 A. M. in Book 61 of Mortgages on page 128, with power of sale therein contained, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Thirty dollars ($30.00) installment by said mortgage secured. And whereas the said mortgagee has elected and hereby does elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One hundred twenty dollars ($120.00) with interest thereon at 10% per annum since February 20, 1920, and $180.00 with interest thereon at 6% per annum since February 20th 1922, the last sum being interest paid by the mortgagee under the terms of said mortgage, upon a prior mortgage of $3000.00 on said land, being a total due to the date of Three hundred thirty five dollars seventy-two cents ($335.72), and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: the Northwest quarter of Section Fourteen (NW¼ 14) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with exception of two acres reserved for church purposes, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County, at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 9th day of November, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $335.72 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $25.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

NELSON MERCANTILE CO.

TO MY FRIENDS!

During the many years I have been a resident of the 65th Legislative district, a good many changes have taken place, some for better and others for worse. During these years I have learned by actual experience that only through betterment of the conditions of the agricultral interests can a lasting and sound development of the district be accomplished. If it is my good fortune to be honored with election to the office of State Senator from this district, my aim will be to use all my energy and efforts and everything in my power to further any legislation which will be of benefit to the man engaged in agricultral work—which also means the only practical way to benefit all the people of the district.

Upon this industry depends the future welfare and prosperity of the district aud its people.

Thanking you for the good will and many favors extended me in the past, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

TURKS VIOLATE NEUTRAL ZONE

Turkish Troops Within A Days March Of Constantinople As Allied Generals Met.

PASHA BREAKS PROMISE

Greeks Promise to Order Nationalists Out of Thrace But Ask for Two Months in Which to Leave—Turks Losing Confidence.

Mudania.—Kemalist legions were within a day's march of Constantinople as the allied generals met with Ismet Pasha in renewed effort to untangle the near east problems.

In spite of the promise of Ismet, Turkish nationalists' representative, to cease the concentration of troops in the neutral areas, the Kemalists surged into the forbidden area.

Turkish cavalry has reached Shile and Yarmise, both places far within the neutral zone near the Bosphorus at the right of the sea of Marmora.

Yarmise is within a day's march of Constantinople. The cavalry is also nearing Karayakobi, which is in the same area.

The concentration in the neutral zone on the west of the Sea of Marmora in the vicinity of Chanak is also continuous. In this area, infantry have replaced cavalry, which is taken to mean that the Turks intend to dig into and hold their positions.

Greeks to Withdraw.

The latest allied plan of peace which includes the immediate withdrawal of the Greeks from Thrace and the occupation of that area by the allies for the period of one month after which a Turkish civil administration may be set up, was presented to Ismet Pasha by the military representtives of Great Britain, France and Italy.

The situation was somewhat relieved when the Greek cabinet instructed the Greek representatives to inform the allies that the government would order its nationalists out of Thrace. The Greeks, however, asked for two months instead of one to exacuate.

Lays Demands Before Assembly.

Ismet Pasha will lay the allied demands before the Angora assembly, and in the meantime the conference stands adjourned.

Lieutenant General Harington and General Charpy and Mombelli have returned to Constantinople to await the reply of the Angora government.

The conference met, and the allies presented their three demands—withdrawal of the Turkish troop from the neutral zones, limitation of the Turkish gendarmie in Thrace and nonoccupation of Thrace by the Turks until after the signature of the peace treaty. There was a long discussion of the question of evacuation and the various phases of the Thracian problem.

When it became evident that Ismet Pasha did not have the necessary power to decide definitely on these demands, the allied representatives made preparations for their departure.

There was distinctly less confidence in the Kemalist camp when it became thoroughly understood that there is now complete unanimity among the allies. The plans for dividing the allies having failed, it was realized that Kemal Pasha had the world arrayed against him.

YOUTH STARTS FIRE FOR FUN

Youth Starts Several Fires Just to Have Some Excitement.

New York.—With a six-story factory building in Brooklyn ablaze and ten firemen trapped in an unexpected back draught, a 17-year-old youth whose last name is Gold, within the police lines about the building told Fire Marshal Brophy a tale of personal heroism.

"What fire?" asked the marshal.

"Why this here fire," said Gold, displaying intense excitement. "I turned in the first alarm and I helped the firemen with their hose."

Marshal Brophy said that when he failed to show much appreciation for this assistance, Gold added that he had also started the fire.

When the ten firemen had been rescued and the blaze in the factory was out, the marshal took Gold to his office for further questioning. There, according to the marshal, Gold confessed he had started a half-dozen fires in Brooklyn in the last two weeks. Asked why he had started them, Gold is said to have replied:

"Oh, just for excitement, all except this fire. Today was Fire Prevention day, and I thought we ought to have some real action."

He was held on a charge of arson.

Cars Go East, Spuds Stay.

St. Paul—Although eastern railroads have a surplus number of boxcars on their lines, carriers operating in Minnesota and other northwest points are unable to obtain enough equipment to move Minnesota's perishable products, and as a result potato growers of this state stand to loose millions of dollars, O. P. B. Jacobson, state chairman, railroad and warehouse commission said. On 18 eastern roads, selected indiscriminately by Mr. Jacobson, he found that they have 171.7 per cent of boxcars on their tracks.

G. N. SIGNS PEACE PACT

Shop Strikers Go to Work But Not on Baltimore Plan.

Chicago—The Chicago Great Western railroad has settled the strike of its shopcrafts, it was earined. Officials of the road said the agreemnt was not the Baltimore peace plan adopted recently by the unions.

Three hundred men are to go back to work at once in the Minneapolis shops of the Greta Western, roundhouse ofremen said. No instructions have yet been issued as to what is to be done in the case of men employed since the walkout. About 100 new men are at work in the shops, according to the report made to the general superintendent's office. The plant has been operating on a basis approximately 50 per cent normal since the strike began.

LANDIS BARES HEAD TO MOB

Woman Leads Abuse by Fans of Venerable Baseball Arbiter.

Polo Grounds, New York—The second clash between Giants and Yanks came near ending in a riot when Umpire Hildebrand called the game "on account of darkness" at the end of the 10th inning, with the coro standing 3-3. If the stadium had been wood instead of solid concrete, the enraged crowd would have torn it to pieces.

A woman sitting behind him was the first to point him out. "There he is," she cried. Fans nearby jumped on top of the dugout to come closer. Seven or eight thousand had already started to leave, turned back and soon there was a swirling crowd around the exit for which Landis was heading.

Judge Landis semed surprised and disturbed. Realizing that it was impossible to be heard, he made no attempt to answer the mob but stood bare headed looking out over the crowd which shouted and shook fists at him.

Free State Offers Amnesty.

Dublin—It was with a hope of restoring peace without future bloodshed that the Irish government offered full amnesty to all offenders who surrendered their arms by Oct. 15, says the proclamation to this effect, issued.

The document sets forth the government's knowledge that many persons have been forced to participate in rebellious actions "against their will and better judgment, while others have come to realize that they have in truth put their hands to the ruin of their motherland."

German Marks Drop Lower.

New York—Heavy offerings of German marks in the Paris and London markets caused the local rate to drop to 4½ cents a hundred, a new low record.

100 Settlers Fete John Daubney.

Stilwater—One hundred old settlers of the St. Croix valley and their descendants assembled at the Stillwater Commercial club to honor John Daubney, dean of pioneers, who is 103 years old.

Overseas Owners Invited to Take Troubles About Enforcement to Courts.

Washington—President Harding ordered a temporary delay in the full enforcement of the Daugherty ruling against transportation of intoxicating liquors.

In a letter to Sec. of the Treas. A. W. Mellon, the President ordered the customs officials be instructed not to enforce the ruling against foreign vessels leaving their home ports or American vessels leaving foreign ports on or before Oct. 14.

America's "bone dry" constitution has started to "follow the flag" across, when enforcement began of the order against sale of liquor aboard American vessels.

While wireless carried to shipping board vessels at sea word that Attorney General H. M. Daugherty had ruled they were American "territory" and therefore must be dry, these other developments were taking place in Washington:

Chairman A. D. Lasker of the shipping board issued a sweeping order for the most drastic possible enforcement of the ruling.

Secretary Mellon set legal experts of his department at work on regulations governing foreign vessels, which, under Daugherty's ruling, must not bring a drop of liquor across the dry frontier, three miles at sea.

State Department officials let it be known they will give scant heed to any diplomatic protests against the order affecting foreign ships. Foreign ship owners who object to it were in effect invited to take their troubles to American courts, instead of raising a diplomatic fuss about them.

ALLIES UNITE ON POLICY

Entente Orders Greeks to Evacuate—Moslems Barred for Month.

Paris—A near eastern peace parley was called for Nov. 1. Scutari, Turkey, was selected as the place of the conference.

Calling of the conference by France followed an agreement reached by the governments of France, Great Britain and Italy that the Greeks must evacuate Thrace at once and that the Turkish army must not enter that territory until after peace has been concluded.

The Allied action was the answer of the western powers to the ultimatum served at the Allied general at Mudania by Ismet Pasha, Turkish nationalist representative, that detachments of Allied troops be evacuated from Thrace at once.

The agreement provides that the Allies will enter Thrace on the heels of the departing Greeks and take over the administration of the territory for a period of one omnth, after which a Turkish civil government may be set up.

It was believed that Mustapha Kemal, faced with the solid front of the Allies, would accept the plan.

The Allied generals at Mudania, whose conference with the Turks broke up after a deadlock was reached, are to be instructed by their governments to notify the Greeks to evacuate Thrace and order the Turks not to enter the province until after the period of one month and then to occupy only with a civil force.

Russia probably will not be included in the invitation to be dispatched to the Scutari conference, it was believed. Premier Poincare is known to be set against Russian participation in the councils of western powers.

GIANTS GET SERIES AS GIFT

Even Elements Favor Gians—Rain Lets Up On McGraws.

New York—New York's Yankees threw away the third ball game of the world series, and in one of the worst exhibitions of ball playing in the history of a world series, were three down at the end of a wretched day of play, the Giants winning, four to three.

Playing in a rain varying from a drizzle to a downpour, the rushing Giants simply romped off with the battle, a present. The Giants didn't win—the Yankees lost. They lost even the friends they had, and the fact that the luck was against them counts but little against the fact that their own lagging, ignorant style of baseball prevented them from winning in spite of the luck.

They gave the worst exhibition of base running, of taking advantage of opportunities ever seen on a ball field. In spite of that they made three runs. The Giants deserved nothing but they got four runs in an inning which was all luck.

The McGraws also won the 5th game and the pennant by a 5 to 3 victory, practically all the Yankee stars contributing to the downfall.

NATIONAL DAIRY SHOW OPENS

Continuous Drizzle Fails To Dampen Enthusiasm of Visitors.

St. Paul—Delegates and visitors from cities and communities in the Northwest saw a thousand champions of the dairy world, inspected machinery and equipment worth a million dollars, and was impressed by the magnitude of the International dairy industry on the opening day of the sixteenth annual National Dairy exposition at the Minnesota State Fair grounds.

A sombre drizzle of rain only served to mark the contrast with the enthusiasm of the opening day when the seven buildings bustled with spectators from the cities and farms of five big Northwest communities.

Prize cattle with their long names and pedigrees, cattle spick and spruce at the hands of their attendants, were in their places in the basement of the new livestock building. Hundreds of others were in buildings nearby.

A striking feature is the castle of "Ye Health Crusaders," of the National Tuberculosis association.

In the center of this land "flowing with milk" this land of wonders is a model town, "Milk City," the capital of "Healthland," with a model dairy farm adjoining and a milk bottle fountain in the center of the town.

Thousands from every community in the entire North and Central West will visit this great show before its close Oct. 14.

8,000 HOMELESS IN ONTARIO

Property Loss by Fire is Estimated at $8,000,000.

Toronto—Eight thousand persons have been made homeless by the fires that swept over northern Ontario, according to Provincial Premier Drury. He estimated the property loss at $8,000,000.

Reports from Cobalt says that provincial police have identified 48 bodies recovered by searching parties from the northern Ontario forest swept by flames. It is estimated the property loss may reach $15,000,000.

Refugees from the outlying districts are arriving and being cared for by the Fed Cross. Much needed supplies of bread, cooking stoves, beds and blankets arrived by special train from North Bay.

The Ontario government has ordered an official investigation of the cause of the fire.

A report from Jackman, Maine, says there was no halting of the forest fire which started in the cutover land north of here.

The flames have made deep inroads through the Aroostook county forests. Extra fire fighters are being rushed to the vicinity.

Lumbermen, driven into town by the dense smoke, say that the damage will be heavy. Great quantities of pulp wood, already cut and piled, were threatened.

Forest fires in the Northern Minnesota woods seem well in hand, and there are no reports of any new fires. Rains have been quite general over the burning area.

THREE FAMILIES WIPED OUT

Auto and Train Accidents Kill and Injure Many.

Minneapolis—Three lost their lives at a railroad crossing near Minneapolis, when a motorist failed to heed a train whistle, swelling the traffic death list to 14 for the week, a new high record for the twin cities. More than 60 have been injured in the week and six of that number are reported in a critical condition at hospitals.

Three families have been practically wiped out in automobile-railroad train crashes and three individuals have lost their lives under motorbus or automobile wheels.

Authorities investigating the 14 fatalities have, in each case, blamed the victims. One driver stalled his automobile on a railroad track near a blind crossing and eight lives were lost. A second one tried to cross ahead of a speeding train, and three were killed.

Individuals killed in city traffic stepped from a curb to cross the street or board a streetcar and failed to look before they stepped.

Wilhelm Would Renew Youth.

Berlin—An intimate friend of former Kaiser Wilhelm, who was a high official at the German court, recently suggested to the former emperor that he would be greatly benefitted by submitting to the surgical operation named after Professor Eugen Steinach, the famous surgeon of Vienna, who originated it. The exile of Doorn, who is nearly 64 years old, consented to undergo the operation, but it has not yet been performed.

The operation is popularly known as that for "rejuvenation" but Steinach himself prefers to designate it as one for "restoration or restitution."

COLT NEEDS HEALTHY START

Navel Ill, Scours and Constipation Are Three Common Troubles to Guard Against.

As it appears that the supply of horsepower on farms is beginning to run low and will be lower yet in another year or two, W. H. Peters, head of the Minnesota university's division of animal industry, contends it will surely pay to give a little extra attention to both mares and foals at foaling time. He says:

"Young colts are subject to three common troubles that cause a heavy death rate, namely, navel ill, scours, and constipation. To guard against navel ill every sanitary precaution possible should be taken, such as having the mare foal in a clean thoroughly disinfected box stall, carefully disinfecting the navel cord of the colt shortly after it is born, and washing the udder of the mare with a weak non-poisonous disinfectant solution. On farms where navel ill has occurred, it will pay to treat or have a veterinarian treat the colts with preventive serum.

A young colt is frequently constipated right from the beginning. Unless its digestive system is able to cast out the first feces the first day, it should be dosed with about four tablespoonfuls of castor oil, repeating the dose at intervals of six hours until the digestive system responds. Injecting a quart or so of warm water into the rectum with a gravity syringe will often help to relieve a constipated condition. One should not delay treatment for this trouble once it has been diagnosed.

"Scours is sometimes associated with navel ill, but may also occur when the latter is not present. This condition will often right itself in a day or two, but if it persists on the second and third days, with no improvement noticeable, treatment must be begun. The safest plan is to call a veterinarian because scours should be treated differently in different colts, depending on the apparent cause, the age and condition of the colt, and the stage to which the trouble has advanced."

SHEEP BUSINESS IS REVIVING

So Far Recovered That Many Operators Have Made Up Losses of Two Previous Years.

"The sheep business is coming back—in fact has so far recovered that the large operators have to a large extent recovered from losses of the two previous years," says A. E. Darlow, assistant professor of animal husbandry at Oklahoma A. and M. college.

"This favorable trend of prices on both fat sheep and wool will undoubtedly result in two things—a high price for breeding stock and an increased demand for same," Darlow adds.

"It has been our experience in Oklahoma that when ewes are high in price and profits necessarily small a large percentage of farmers go into the business in the following depression.

"This doesn't mean that farmers should not buy at present prices, but that they must be conservative. Don't buy a large flock if you have no previous experience, but buy a small flock. Also, don't go into the business at all if you don't intend to continue for several years."

PUREBREDS MAKE BEST GAIN

Calves Dress Out With Larger Percentage of Beef in Region of High Priced Cuts.

Good purebred beef bulls make more profit than scrubs because their calves make gains more economically and because they dress out a larger percentage of beef, of which a larger part is in the region of the high priced cuts. The question a beef cattle man should ask himself is not, "Can I afford to use a good purebred bull?" but "Can I [illegible]

COOKING SYRUP FROM SWEET CORN STALKS

Not an Economical Proposition in the State of Minnesota.

Cooking sirup of fine quality can be made from stalks of sweetcorn. Unfortunately, the variety of sweetcorn known as Crosby, which is generally grown by Minnesota canning companies and by farmers of the country adjacent to canneries, produces a very light tonnage of stalks, and, in consequence, a light yield of sirup. In other words, the manufacture of sirup from sweetcorn stalks is not an economical proposition in Minnesota under present conditions.

DR. J. J. WILLAMAN

University chemist in charge of sweet corn syrup investigations under appropriation by the legislature.

These facts are the result of an investigation authorized by a legislative appropriation two years ago. The investigation was placed in charge of Dr. J. J. Willaman, a chemist of the university's department of agriculture. A sirup making plant was fitted up in connection with a cannery at Wells, Minn., where all the leading varieties of sweetcorn produced in Minnesota were put under test.

The solution, says Dr. Willaman, is the breeding up of what he calls a "dual purpose corn"—a corn that will produce good ears for canning purposes and still be high in juice or sugar content. University chemists and plant breeders can develop such a variety of sweetcorn, says Dr. Willaman, if given time.

Minnesota Has Big Potato Crop.

In spite of drouth in spots and damage by insects, Minnesota has a big potato crop. Farmers have been digging a large tonnage, and many would be glad to hold their potatoes for higher prices if they had sufficient storage.

Circular No. 8, issued by the agricultural extension service of the university, gives the experience of Jacob Hurner of Glyndon, Minn., in storing potatoes in pits. Mr. Hurner has followed this plan for many years and says he has never lost more than a half a bushel of potatoes, and that was because of carelessness. He digs a hole about six feet wide to about four feet deep and as long as needed, depending upon the quantity of potatoes to be stored. The pit is filled and heaped up, then covered with old coarse hay about a foot deep after it is pressed down. On top of the hay he places about a foot of dirt, except along the ridge where a strip about a foot wide is left the full length of the pit for ventilation.

Mr. Hurner says the important point in keeping potatoes is to get them dry. Moisture from the sweating of the potatoes escapes through the hay along the ridge of the pit. When the ground is frozen to the depth of several inches the ridge strip should be covered with dirt, and about two feet of coarse hay, or straw thrown over the entire pit and also on the sides to protect the edges from freezing.

Besides Mr. Hurner's statement, Circular No. 8 contains a cross section view of the pit and the coverings. A potato grower in need of storage should write to the Office of Publications, University Farm, St. Paul, for a copy.

MILK NECESSARY IN DIET, SAY EXPERTS

University Specialists Urge Use of Milk and Its Products.

Because milk is essential to growth and health, home economic teachers in classroom and laboratory at the University of Minnesota, and extension workers from the same institution in going about the state, are emphasizing the importance of milk and its products in the human diet. A great many persons know that milk is a good food in a general sort of way, but they do not know that it is an essential food, necessary for growth and health, and they do not know why it is essential. As a result, milk is used by most persons in a haphazard sort of way and without the results which would follow a more intelligent use.

What the teachers at University Farm have to say about milk in the human diet, therefore, is of general interest. Here are some of the things being taught, things which every mother and father should know and teach to their children:

Milk is essential to growth and health—

Because it is a muscle-building food.

Because it is a bone-and teeth-building food, containing calcium and phosphorous needed for both bones and teeth.

Because it is protective, promoting health and growth, warding off a certain disease of the eyes, beri-beri, which is a form of paralysis, and scurvy; possibly, also, rickets.

Because lime for bone formation is utilized to a greater advantage in the presence of adequate quantities of a certain element in milk, known as Fat Soluble A.

Because milk contains proteins very necessary in the blood, and, therefore, is particularly valuable (especially in anemia).

Milk contains butterfat, and this element is essential in the diet of children. For this reason, if the income of a family does not allow money for butter for all of the members of a family, every effort should be made to include it in the diet of the growing children. The Division of Home Economics at University Farm believes that the term "butter substitute," which one hears now and then from laymen and specialists alike should be discouraged since up to the present time there is no recognized substitute for butter.

In the light of the foregoing facts, the specialists at University Farm hold that it is not a sound proposition from the view of economy to say that one cannot afford money for milk. "It is the food product which a family can least afford to be without." Again, the same specialists say: "On a limited income the purchase of whole milk and cheese is as wise an expenditure as can be suggested."

How much milk one should take depends on circumstances, but a good rule—one which the specialists of today advocate—is:

Not less than a pint of milk a day.

This is in addition to the use of the products of milk, such as butter or cheese, of course.

Business Records Should be Kept.

In the course of a radiophone address on the value to the farmer of keeping regular accounts, Prof. G. A. Pond, in charge of the section of cost accounting of the university's department of agriculture, emphasized the fact that whether prices are high or low the most economical producer will either make the most money or at least lose the least. Cost accounts, he contended, are the surest guide to economical production.

"It is important then for us as farmers to keep records of our business and study our costs," Mr. Pond said. "The last two years have been disastrous ones from a financial standpoint. We must plan our farm business for the future mighty carefully if we are going to pull safely through the period of depression in which we now find ourselves. Let us then keep records of our own business. Let us study our business. Let us avail ourselves of the information on economical production that our agricultural college has collected through their cost accounts. Let us adopt the business methods of the commercial industry, in order that we may rightly take our ranking as the big business of the country."

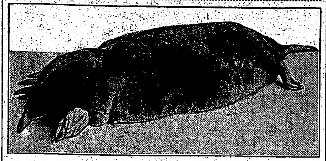
MOLE IS MARVEL OF ENERGY AND POSSESSES INSATIABLE APPETITE



Tests Show Mole Is Carnivorous Animal.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Perhaps no other animal is relatively so strong, does so much hard work in a day, or eats so much in proportion to its size and weight, as the American mole. A mole's appetite seems to be almost insatiable. When held in captivity and given food to its liking, it will sometimes eat more than its own weight in a day. This need for a large quantity of food is probably due to the intense activity of the little animal, for experiments have shown that it may be found at work at any hour of the day or night, whenever its runways require repairing or it is in need of new sources of food supplies.

From the standpoint of food habits, it would seem that moles are chiefly beneficial or at least neutral. Experiments conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture show that the mole is a carnivorous animal, though vegetable matter is occasionally found in its stomach. An examination of the stomachs of 200 moles showed that earthworms and white grubs form the bulk of the food. Beetles and their larvae and other insects that enter the ground, spiders, centipedes, and cocoons also form a portion. In one stomach were found the remains of 71 small white grubs, in one 250 ant puparia, in one ten cutworms, and in another 12 earthworms. In captivity, moles ravenously eat beefsteak, flesh of birds, fish, or almost any sort of fresh meat, but starve to death when supplied with nothing other than grain and root crops.

The chief damage done by the mole seems to be in tearing up gardens and making unsightly ridges in lawns. Moles have been dealt with in the United States chiefly as a nuisance, but in some European countries they are trapped extensively not only to be rid of them as a pest but also to harvest their pelts. In this country it has been demonstrated that moles are never dormant, that they never hibernate. They may be trapped at any time of the year when the ground is not frozen too hard to permit the working of the trap.

NAMES FOR WHEAT BY-PRODUCTS

Much Confusion Caused by Use of Various Terms.

Shorts and Middlings Are Used Synonymously in Some Sections of Country—Table Shows Styles Used in Many States.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sectional differences in the use of names for by-products of wheat are often confusing, says the United States Department of Agriculture in calling attention to the terms used in the regions growing the three principal types of wheat. The near Northwest, which includes Minnesota, the Dakotas, and parts of adjoining states, grows hard spring wheat; the Southwest, also Nebraska and Kansas, grows hard winter wheat; and the East and states as far west as Missouri and Iowa grow soft winter wheat. Of course, these areas overlap to some extent.

Most of the confusion has been caused by different names for shorts and middlings. In some parts of the country these terms are used synonymously, in others one may be used to the exclusion of the other. Where both are used there seems to be a tendency to apply the term "shorts" to the coarser materials, such as standard middlings; and the term "middlings" to the finer materials, such as red dog flour.

While there often may be considerable differences in the composition of corresponding by-products because of the differences in composition and texture of the wheat and of the slight differences in milling practice, the methods of manufacture in the different milling sections are similar and the following table read horizontally, shows the names used in the different regions for the same by-product feed:

Northwest.	Southwest.	East.
Bran.	Bran.	Bran.
Standard middlings.	Brown shorts.	Brown middlings.
Flour middlings.	Gray shorts.	Gray middlings.
Red Dog.	White shorts.	White middlings.
Wheat mixed feed.	Wheat mixed feed.	Wheat mixed feed.

"Shipstuff" is a term that has been used in the past for various wheat by-products. It has no very definite meaning, although it seems to apply only to wheat products.

TO DRIVE OUT TUBERCULOSIS

Plan for Eradicating Disease in Cattle From Entire Areas Daily Growing in Popularity.

The plan for eradicating tuberculosis in cattle from entire areas, such as counties, is daily growing in popularity according to reports coming to the United States Department of Agriculture. The idea has taken hold in Michigan and is spreading rapidly. Already, five counties have been freed of the plague, and reports from the inspector in charge for the government show that the boards of supervisors have appropriated money and made provision for co-operating with state and federal forces. When one county joins the ranks for eradication its action stimulates others to follow. The prospect of ultimately ridding the country of the disease never looked so promising as at present, say those in charge.

Disposing of Dead Fowls.

Fowls that have died from any cause whatever should be burned or buried at once. Burning is preferable as it disposes of the whole matter effectively and for all time.

Yellow Tinge in Alfalfa.

The yellow tinge and stunted growth which begin to appear in the alfalfa about the time of the second and third cuttings can usually be traced to one or more of three conditions. These are lack of lime and inoculation and the presence of disease.

Fuel for Winter Use.

In cutting wood for winter use, remember that small branches not over an inch in diameter make excellent cook stove wood, just the kind the housewife likes when she has some quick baking to do.

Forage for Themselves.

Chickens require very little care after the first few weeks. They have a knack of foraging for themselves and do quite well when allowed to follow the hogs and cattle.

Feeding Bees in Fall.

No matter how strong the honey flow or how much surplus the bees gather in summer, it is important to feed some in fall unless some honey is coming steadily up until frost.

AVOID UNWHOLESOME LITTER

Specialists at Iowa Station Recommend Covering Floor With Finely Cut Alfalfa.

Not many poultry keepers realize the close relation between the condition of the litter in the fowls' quarters and the health of the birds. Poultry specialists at the Iowa station say that unwholesome litter has been known to cause the death of hens, and they recommend covering the floor with finely cut alfalfa or clover.

CATER TO MARKET DEMANDS

Some Dealers Won't Handle Very Fat Hens, While Others Carefully Avoid Leghorns.

Some buyers won't touch very fat hens; they claim they can't find a sale for them; others don't want to handle Leghorns. It is a good plan to know which way the local wind blows since much of the profit of the small breeder must come from local sales. [illegible]

POULTRY

INDICATIONS OF GOOD LAYER

Distance Between Keel and Pelvic Bones Shows Capacity—Late Molters Are Favored.

It has been found that there are definite outward indications and measurements of a fowl's body which indicate greater or less production.

For instance, it has been observed that a bird during the course of its laying spreads out the pelvic or pin bones. The greater and longer the production the more these bones are spread. Also production straightens out the curve in these bones. The activities of the intestines cause the fowl to have what is called capacity, that is, considerable capacity between the pelvic and keel bones.

It has also been noted that continual laying uses up the surplus fat in the body so that in the fall of the year after a fowl has been producing heavily we find by feeling the fowl between the pelvics and keel it has a soft pliable feeling, no layer of fat being evident under the skin.

There are also definite color changes which take place with egg production. Directly after molting, during which time the fowl has laid up a surplus of fat, the skin, shank and beak of the yellow-skin varieties have a very strong yellow color. As the process of egg laying continues this yellow color disappears. Observations show that the color around the vent disappears first, then in the beak, then in the legs. In leaving the beak it leaves the base first, the part nearest the head, and fades out toward the tip. In leaving the legs it begins on the front of the leg where the leg joins the foot and fades upward and back. The reddish color around the edges of the eyelid also fades with production.

The molting of the fowl is another definite index of production. The late molter is almost invariably the best layer. The stage of molt is a good index as to whether one bird has been a better producer than the other. A fowl usually molts in the neck first, then the body, the tail, and the wing, starting from the center and molting in both directions. This might vary a little in rare cases.

The Red Plump Comb Denotes the Layer.

The above are some of the indications which are used in judging production contests.—H. Embleton, Poultry Division, Oklahoma A. and M. College.

POOR FOWLS LOWER PROFITS

Smaller Flock of High Producers Will Prove Far More Satisfactory—Cuts Feed Bill.

There is certainly no room for fowls on any farm when they lay so few eggs during the year that they scarcely pay for the grain and other feed they get. A smaller flock of high producers will make twice the profit with a smaller cost for feed and housing space. When a hen begins to moult, taking most of the summer and fall to replenish her supply of feathers, it is about as sure a sign as a poultry-raiser needs that she is an undesirable bird.

ENCOURAGE PULLETS TO LAY

With Small Amount of Attention and Care Young Fowls Will Produce Much Earlier.

Most pullets raised on the farm start laying when they are about ten months old in spite of the fact that a small amount of attention and care would bring them into laying when they are from six to seven months old. Getting eggs three months earlier at a time when egg prices are likely to be high is an important factor in increasing the profits from the flock.

BELIEVE RICE HAS A SOUL

For That Reason Javanese Islanders Perform Ceremony Which They Call a Wedding.

Rice is the most important food product of the island of Java. The islanders believe that rice has a soul. In order to keep on good terms with the "rice soul," prayers are offered to the rice plant, and offerings of fruit and flowers are made to it. One of the prettiest ceremonies of the island is the "wedding of the rice," a make-believe marriage ceremony which takes place every year at harvest time.

On the "lucky" day the Dookoon calls the relatives and friends of the owner and leads them into the field. They are all in holiday dress and wear garlands of flowers about their heads and bodies. The Dookoon selects two stalks of rice of the same length and thickness, to represent the bride and groom. Then four other stalks, two to represent the bridesmaids and two to represent the best man, are selected.

The "bridal party" is smeared with yellow unguent, decorated with garlands of flowers, shaded from the sun with a palm leaf awning, and the stalks are cut around them.

After a great feast the party sets out for the granary, where the bridal party is locked for 40 days to denote the passing of the honeymoon.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by

CLIFFORD L. HILTON

Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to

MIKE HOLM

Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

"Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned; fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law make the necessary previsions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of the amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business, and to require that the proceeds of such tax shall be distributed in the manner following, to wit: fifty per cent [illegible]

ALUMINUM CHIPS

Fine aluminum chips, such as are produced in the machining of the aluminum alloys used in motorcar construction, are hard to remelt without excessive loss, a reduction of 40 per cent being common. According to a statement published by the bureau of mines, the total loss from this cause throughout the country, with aluminum at its present price, amounts to $600,000.

The bureau has published valuable suggestions for minimizing this loss. The main cause of the trouble seems to be the lack of ready coalescence of the metallic globules, and this means that the problem is one of colloid chemistry aplied to metals.—Washington Star.

Beliefs Concerning Lightning.

Continental Europe had, and has, its superstitions regarding lightning. In some parts it is believed that the bird called cross-bill, kept in the house as a pet, is a sure preventive of destruction of the house by lightning or fire. It is said that this power is granted to the bird because it used its peculiarly shaped bill, with the two mandibles curved and crossed over each other, to extract the nails from the wounds of Christ impaled on the cross.

WITH THE CHANGING WORLD

Ambitions of Three Generations of Women Seem to Have Undergone Pronounced Variations.

Grandmother wanted to have the biggest and whitest washing on the line before the neighbors had theirs out; to make the best soap, jellies, bread and pies, to have the reputation of keeping the cleanest house in town; to be well married early in life; to have a large family of well-behaved children, and to have her friends think a recipe must be good if she used it.

Mother wanted to be cultured and refined and to do the proper thing at all times; to be well married rather late in life; to have two or three well-dressed children; to be able to hire and keep a good maid; to be dressed in good taste, and to have her friends think a word was spelled or pronounced correctly in her way.

Daughter of today wants to live in the most exclusive apartment house in the city; to be able to drive her own car; to have a chow, a Pekingese or a Persian cat; to be married and divorced a time or two; to have her friends think her gown the latest fashion or she would not be wearing it, to have girls ask her what kind of powder and rouge she uses, and to make men turn around.—Katherine Negley, in Judge.

How To Make A Good Potato Pit

Many Minnesota farmers who have a large crop of potatoes lack up-to-date storage facilities. Storage is especially important this year when the country's potato crop are so heavy and prices are so low.

Circular No. 8, issued by the agricultural extension division of the university gives the personal experience of Jacob Hurner of Glyndon, Minn., who has been storing potatoes in pits with great success for many years.

Mr. Hurner digs a hole about six feet wide and three and a half or four feet deep. The length of the excavation is governed by the quantity of potatoes to be stored. "I fill the pit full and heap the potatoes up as steep as they will lay," says Mr. Hurner. "Then I cover them with old coarse hay about a foot deep after it is pressed down. I cover this with about a foot of dirt, except along the ridge where I leave a strip about a foot wide the length of the pit. This is for ventilation.

"The important point in keeping potatoes is to get them dry. The moisture from the sweating of the potatoes is allowed escape through the hay long the ridge of the pit. I leave them this way till the ground is frozen quite hard, and then I cover the strip with dirt and throw about two feet of coarse hay or straw over the whole pit, letting it lay about six feet to each side. I consider coarse hay better for this purpose than straw as it is less likely to blow off and it catches the snow better.

"In order to keep water from running through the hay in case of rains, it is a good plan to make a ridge by nailing two wide boards together and laying it over the opening in the banking, until the opening is closed and straw thrown over the whole pit.

Auction Sale

Dave and Gust Soderman are having bills made for an auction sale of stock machinery and other personal property which sale will take place Monday Oct. 30 at what is known as the Ira Carpenter place southeast of here. The owner of the farm is expected here from Wisconsin to occupy the place within a couple of weeks and being unable to find anything else suitable, Soderman Bros. have decided to close out rather than to keep their stock over winter.

Ole Ible, candidate for sheriff of Pennington County, was in the village calling on friends and doing a little campaigning yesterday.

Buys Barber Shop

In a deal made last week, Theodore Ducharme of Red Lake Falls, bought the barbershop here from Ernest Patenode. The latter will continue to operate his pool room, and will reside in the rooms over that place. Mr. Ducharme, who took charge of the place Monday, will bring his family here and will occupy the Carpenter residence which will be vacated by Mr. Patenode and family.

Mr. Ducharme was a prominent member of the Red Lake Falls ball team last season, and the local fans are elated over his coming here. This paper takes occasion to extend a welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Ducharme, and, also a hope that they will find their new surroundings congenial, and prosperity will be their lot.

Minnesota Leads As Butter State

Minnesota's co-operatively made butter again ranks as the best in the world. This announcement was made in St. Paul last week when a silken banner, offered by the National buttermakers' association was awarded to Minnesota. The contest was held in connection with the National Dairy show. The banner is the most sought after token in the butter world.

This is the fourteenth time in eighteen years that Minnesota has won this honor. Ten highest entries from Minnesota averaged a score of 96.076 out of a possible 100. Iowa won the award last year.

Spud Prospects Brighten

Shortage of cars wherein to ship has prevented a glut of the eastern markets and spud prices are showing a slight upward trend. A comparison with amount of potatoes marketed last season shows there has been less shipped this year than last. Growers who are a long distance from shipping point find present market unprofitable, but may come thru in good shape by storing their crop and selling in early spring.

Refuse to Allow Search of Foreign Ships Until Three-Mile Limit Is Entered.

WOULD CAUSE TROUBLE

England Is, However, Willing to Co-operate to Prevent Smuggling of Liquor Into America—Hughes Handed Note.

Washington—England will not agree to a treaty with the United States extending the right of search of vessels up to 12 miles off shore. However, England is willing to co-operate with the United States in preventing smuggling of liquor into this country from Canada and the Bahamas.

This is the substance of the note handed Secretary of State Hughes by Ambassador Geddes in reply to Secretary Hughes' note of June 26 on the subject.

Secretary Hughes made public his correspondence with the ambassador without comment. There was nothing to indicate that any further step to extend the right of search for American prohibition officers beyond the three-mile limit was in prospect.

Action of the cabinet in recently approving the abandonment of such search, presumably because of possible international difficulties, coupled with the British reply, appeared to indicate that operations would continue to be confined within recognized territorial waters.

The American note dealt particularly with smuggling operations from British possessions in waters adjacent to the American coast and suggested methods by which the existing extremely unfortunate condition might be remedied.

DISABLED VETS AID PLANNED

MacNider Criticizes Government Officials' Feeble Efforts to Aid.

New Orleans—The American Legion, through its national commander, Hanford MacNider, has affirmed that the welfare of disabled veterans was its chief interest.

The government's handling of the disabled, from the time of the armistice was signed, down to the present, was described as one of "tragic mistakes, politics, alibis, and blunders," in the report of the Legion's rehabilitation commission, and Colonel C. R. Forbes, director of the United States Veterans' bureau, in a counter-statement to newspaper men asserted that the bureau which he heads was "the most perfect large organization in the world," and that implied criticism of it was not justified by facts.

Charles Bertrand, president of the Inter-Allied Veterans' federation and an officer of the French Legion of Honor, bore renewed pledges of fraternity and friendship to the Legion from the nations associated with the United States in the World war, who had been in session here two days prior to the opening of the Legion convention.

The convention held no sessions during the afternoon of the first day, and veterans spent the rest of the day and much of the night in impromptu reunions on sidewalks, in hotel lobbies, and in the old French quarter of New Orleans.

In historic Jackson square, in the heart of the French quarter, an outdoor fete was held in honor of the veterans. Jackson square is the spot, where, in 1815, Andrew Jackson mustered his forces to fight the British and win the battle of New Orleans. The "buddies" who are inclined to cheer any opportune suggestion gave the bronze equestrian statue of "Old Hickory" repeated cheers.

AVIATOR BEATS OWN RECORD

Mount Clemens, Mich.—Traveling at a greater speed than any human being ever before attained, Lieutenant R. L. Maughan, a United States army pilot, set a new world's airplane speed record by covering a one-kilometer course at the rate of 248.5 miles an hour.

The record was made during official government tests of speed planes that participated in the national air races at Selfridge field, and was electrically timed by officers from McCook field.

Aeronautical engineers and army and navy officers who witnessed the flight were astounded. The demonstration, they declared, proved that there was no limit to the speed that might be attained in the air.

$1,500,000 FLEE TURKS

Migration of Refugees May Complete Catastrophe.

Athens—The Turk will enter Europe on the heels of 1,500,000 terror stricken refugees—Greek and Armenian Christians—who are fleeing westward before the crescent and sword of Islam. Five hundred thousand of these exiles already have arrived in Greece.

From the cities of the Asia Minor coast, where the deportations and massacres still continue—from Constantinople where the Europeans live under the threat of an invasion—from the Tracian plain where the word from Paris struck terror to 250,000 Christians who know the Turk of old. Frantic rabbles of these refugees are tareaming inte Geeece.

The migration may complete the catastrophe here. Greece—itself a nation of 5,000,000—does not have food, accommodations or employment for this horde. With winter approaching, disease is prevalent in the crowded concentration camps. The situation has passed the phase where the government can cope with it unaided.

COURT WRIT BLOCKS ACTION

Ship Seizure for Carrying Liquor Is Estopped by Injunction.

New York—Federal Judge Learned Hand has granted a temporary restraining order prohibiting H. C. Stuart, acting collector of the port, Ralph A. Day, federal prohibition director of New York, and John G. Appleby, chief zone prohibition officer, from putting into effect the federal order to seize ships and liquor under the Daugherty prohibition order.

The injunction was granted on application of the International Mercantile Marine corporation acting for the American lines, included in that corporation. It specifically affects the Steamers Finland and St. Paul. The order will be in force, Judge Hand said, until a hearing scheduled for October 17.

GASOLINE DROPS TWO CENTS

Increased Production Reason—Saves $2,500,000 a Month.

St. Paul—Motorists are informed of a reduction of two cents a gallon on gasoline, which became effective at once at all oil filling stations over the entire Indiana field, including the Twin Cities and adjacent territory.

The approach of winter months, and increased production of crude oil with lower prices on that commodity, is responsible for the reduced price of gasoline, according to F. L. Cochran, manager of the Standard Oil company here.

The saving to users in the territory affected by the cut in price is estimated at $2,500,000 a month.

SHIP AFIRE—217 RESCUED

Four Liners Were Rushing to Aid of Burning Ship.

San Francisco—The fire on the Steamer City of Honolulu was beyond control at 10:10 a. m. and the ship was being abandoned by the captain, chief engineer, first officer and radio operator, the last four aboard the vessel, a radio dispatch received here said.

A later report credits the freight steamer West Faralon with rescuing the passengers and 147 of the crew. Four vessels were rushing to the aid of the burning liner. Those rescued will have to be removed to larger ships as they arrive on account of limited accommodation.

NATIONAL DAIRY SHOW SUCCESS

Event Declared Greatest Farm Gathering Ever Assembled in America.

Minneapolis—Hosts to the greatest farm gathering ever assembled in America was the title conferred upon the twin cities by officials of the National Dairy Exposition, as businessmen of Minneapolis and St. Paul turned to plans for capturing the show for 1923, and with it the World's Dairy congress and its delegates from practically every nation on the globe.

The northwest, by its remarkable outpouring of farmers and townsfolk from half a dozen states, has made the 1922 dairy show the best and most useful in the 16 years of national dairy expositions, W. E. Skinner, its general manager, said. "The show that closed witnessed the largest and most earnest gathering of real farmers any such show ever assembled."

"The magnificent co-operation of the businessmen and the thoughtful women of the twin cities have given this show a distinct feature not heretoofre attained," Dean H. E. Van Norman, president of the World's Dairy congress, said. "I am sure I speak the thought of every director and officer in this brief word of appreciation to those who have advertised this show in its purpose to improve and cheapen a necessary human food, to reduce the death rate and improve living."

16 ROADS IN NON-STRIKE PACT

Shopmen Waive Right, Companies Pledge Not to Litigate.

Chicago—Sixteen railroads have completed agreements with the new individual shop unions by which, in effect, the men waive the right to strike and the companies pledge themselves not to litigate. Both parties agree to abide by the decisions of the federal labor board. This does away with the labor boss sitting in some remote point and ordering out all the men in the U. S.

The 16 roads already signed up are the Southern Pacific (Pacific system); Missouri, Kansas & Texas; Southern Pacific, Texas & Louisiana lines; Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis; Central of Georgia; New York, New Haven and Hartford; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Colorado Southern; Great Northern; Lehigh Valley; International & Great Northern; Union Pacific system; Illinois Central; Florida East Coast; Trinity & Brazos Valley, and San Antonio, Uvalde & Gulf.

MAY REWRITE 5-POWER PACT

President Harding Sounds Out Britain and France on Move.

Washington—Administration officials would not discuss reports emanating from London and Paris that the United States is sounding out European powers on the proposition of an international land disarmament conference.

There were no denials of the reports, however, and there is a well defined belief here that the president and Secretary C. E. Hughes are planning to issue an invitation to the powers for such a conference which would be operated on lines similar to the Washington conference last winter which resulted in the naval treaty and the four power Pacific pact.

At that conference land disarmament was included in the agenda, but the time was unpropitious for its consideration. It was the general understanding that a future conference would be called when European nations would be in a better position to discuss land disarmament.

It was also disclosed that another three power conference to review the naval treaty is within the range of possibility.

TO SAVE POTATO CROPS

Farm Experts Teach Pitting Method to Potato Growers.

St. Paul—Potato growers in the northern and central part of the state will be instructed in the best methods of pitting their potatoes, by county agents of potato growing communities and by representatives of the University of Minnesota agricultural extension department, according to plans formulated at a conference between state agricultural officials and F. L. Peck of the "U" extension department.

The meeting was called by Hugh J. Hughes, director of markets, Department of Agriculture, when it was decided to send a representative to the various potato growing counties of the state and to obtain the co-operation of the county agents in advising with the farmers the need of pitting their corn.

Lack of proper railroad equipment to handle the vast crop of tubers grown in the state this season, makes it necessary for farmers to take some means of saving the potatoes from the freezing weather which is expected to arrive soon.

ARMOUR REFUSES WHEAT PIT SECRET

Packer Adheres to Determination Not to Reveal Wheat Trading.

Chicago—J. Ogden Armour again refused to give the Federal Trade commission which is investigating trading in wheat futures the figures showing the extent of his grain trading in 1920, 1921 and the early months of 1922. Mr. Armour, on the stand Wednesday, had refused to give details of his grain transactions and was excused until Friday.

Victor Murdock and other members of the commission tried in vain to shake the decision of the witness. Finally Mr. Murdock, vice chairman of the commission, excused Mr. Armour and said the commission would decide later what it might do in the situation.

In hearings in the East, as well as thus far in the inquiry conducted here, Mr. Murdock said, the commission had been able to obtain from every witness, except Mr. Armour, such information as it sought.

Commissioner John F. Nugent, as well as Vice Chairman Murdock, took a hand in questioning Mr. Armour.

"Are you alone the only man unwilling to give the commission these figures?" Mr. Nugent asked.

"Of all the witnesses you are the only man who has refused to answer," Mr. Nugent continued. "Shall we report that to the Senate?"

"I must decline to answer," Mr. Armour said.

U. S. CHECKS FOREIGN LOANS

Leading Bankers Assert All Appeals From Europe Referred to U. S.

New York—American bankers are making no loans to foreign governments or to European individuals or concerns without the approval of the United States government, where the least suspicion exists that such loans might be used either directly or indirectly for such purposes as might add to the present unsettled economic or political conditions in those countries, leading New York bankers assert. Their comments followed publication of Washington dispatches announcing that the making of such loans by bankers of this country would be frowned upon by the government where it seemed the money might be used for stirring up war.

An incident which it is believed induced the government at Washington to remind American bankers that they would incur its displeasure if loans were made to foreign governments or to private individuals which might be secretly diverted to war purposes, was the recent newspaper advertisements announcing that the Rumanian government intends seeking to float loan of $40,000,000 in this country.

LABOR A MENACE TO BRITAIN

Austen Chamberlain Warns Against Breaking Up Coalition Government.

Birmingham, England — Austen Chamberlain, the government leader, addressing the Midland Conservative club here declared it would be criminal to break up the present coalition in view of the labor menace.

"I don't pretend to say when an election will occur," said Mr. Chamberlain. "I expect it is the undoubted right of the prime minister to choose."

At another point Mr. Chamberlain said: "I have worked with Mr. Lloyd George in perfect harmony. He has told us 'I know not when an election will come.'"

Mr. Chamberlain's speech indicated the line upon which Prime Minister Lloyd George will make his fight for political life in the next general election and removed doubt as to whether Mr. Chamberlain, as Unionist party leader, would support his chief.

Mr. Chamberlain took his stand in favor of the coalition on the ground that the country faced a great national danger in the Labor party.

SOME VALUABLE INFORMATION ON THE ERADICATION OF WEEDS

Mowing is one of the useful methods where it can be done. There are a few things which yield larger returns for labor involved than mowing the edges of grain fields along the roads. Numbers of weeds may be prevented from seeding and the appearance of the land is greatly increased. Other pieces of unused ground which have grown to weeds should be mowed if nothing better can be done. Some weeds are killed by mowing, others send up new shoots. Some flower early, others late. Consequently about four mowings are needed during the season. June 10, July 1, July 20, and August 10, might be suggested as the general dates of mowing.

Treatment of Winter Annuals and Biennials.

Seeds of winter annuals germinate in the fall, the plants become well establish and those which survive the winter are ready to make a quick growth in the spring. Mustards of ally sorts are the most common weeds of this type. "Stubbling in" a crop is especially conducive to such weeds as the ground is not worked enough to kill more than a part of the seedlings. If ground is not to be plowed, the disc and harrow should be used to kill such plants and to keep the soil in condition to cause the growth of as many of the weed seeds as possible. Biennials are relatively unimportant and can be controlled by the same methods as the annuals.

Treatment of Perennials

Most perennials reproduce freely by seed and what has been said of annuals applies to them also. But prevention of seed production prevents only the increase of some perennials. It does not kill the root, neither does it prevent the spread by underground parts.

To destroy perennials, two general means are available: (1) dig out all underground parts, (2) starve them by preventing leaf growth. A combination of the two will be used in most cases. leaves are both lungs and stomach to a plant. Without them it cannot live. A starving animal can prolong its life by use of food material in its tissues, and by small amounts of food. So, also, can a plant. Leaf growth can be prevented by smothering with tar paper, straw or heavy growth of other plants, or by repeated cultivation. Hoeing off just below the surface will destroy the roots if done frequently and persistently.

Small patches of quack grass or similar weeds may be dug out by hand. The rootstocks will be broken more or less and pieces left in the ground will continue to grow, so the spot should be revisited every few days until no more growth shows. The plants dug out by hand had best be burned as soon as possible. If left in a pile they will start growing.

In covering with tar paper, care must be taken that the underground parts do not grow out beyond the cover. The ground should be hoed off smooth, the paper lapped sufficiently, and held down securely as by boards weighted with stones. Covering with straw or manure is often a failure in that the weeds are able to grow through or beyond the cover.

Larger areas must receive careful cultivation. If only one side or end of a field is affected, this should be worked by itself to prevent dragging pieces of roots int othe other part of the field. The type of implement used in cultivating should be preferably one which tends to bring the roots to the surface with as little cutting as possible. Persistence is the most important factor however. The amount undertaken should be small enough to permit thorough work.

Quackgrass sod may be mown about June 15, the hay removed and the soil plowed shallow. The sod should be cut sharply, laid flat and well packed down. Double disc whenever growth appears, plow deeper late in August, and continue to disc until the ground freezes. The field may be kept bare or it may be planted to corn if thoroughly cultivated and hand hoed to get all the plants. The second year another cultivated crop may be used or a late heavy seeding of millet or buckwheat. This should be sufficient to clean the ground, but in [illegible] should watch for the plants, as they will re-establish themselves [illegible] if not entirely killed out. [illegible] plants previous to attempting eradication, and to prevent seed production. Often there will be a few stalks which will still need mowing to keep them from going to seed. Sheep are the most efficient as they will nearly destroy the plants by close grazing. A little salt is sometimes scattered on small patches to induce close grazing. Pasturing stubble fields prevents much weed seed formation.

Chemical sprays have received considerable attention as a simple way of destroying weeds, but they have been only partially successful. Broad-leaved plants which are not protected by hairy or waxy coverings are easily affected by such means. Common mustard and kinghead in grain can be killed if the spray is applied before the plants are too old. Hare's ear mustard and Indian mustard are protected by a waxy covering; marsh elder and others by hairs. The leaves of perennials such as dandelion and sow thistle can be killed, but new ones are quickly produced so that the treatment must be repeated several times. Spraying may be practicable for roadsides, fence rows or other places difficult to reach by other means. The chemical most commonly used is sulphate of iron at the rate of 1½ to 2 pounds per gallon of water.

Weed seeds in the ground are eliminated chiefly by keeping the surface soil in good condition for their growth so that the seedlings can be killed. The length of time for which seeds may live in the ground varies much according to the kind of seed, the nature of the soil, and the amount of moisture. Mustard has always attracted attention by its appearance in fields which had no mustard for several or many years. In general, mustard and seeds with thick coats may remain viable for five to eight years or even longer; grass seeds not over two or three years. Most of them retain vitality better in dry soil, and when buried deeply in compast soil. Deep plowing should be avoided when a field has borne a heavy crop of weed seeds. The surface should be worked often in order to cause the growth and destruction of such seed without burying it too deeply to grow. Seeding to grass for several years will kill much of the weed seed in the ground.

Thirty Most Troublesome Weeds Of North Dakota.

To name the thirty worst weeds is a matter of some difficulty, and if several such lists were prepared by different people, probably no two lists would contain exactly the same plants. Some weeds are especially troublesome on certain soils, in certain districts, or in certain crops. Some people are more successful than others in dealing with weeds. Consequently opinions differ as to what weeds are the worst.

Sow thistle, quackgrass and Canada thistle are placed first here on account of the difficulty of eradication due to their spreading from the roots, as well as by seed. With them are discussed several plants often confused with them. Next come field bindweed and leafy spurge—not yet common but needing watching. Then follow the annuals and last, three perennials which differ in habit from the first five.

Some of the annuals—wild oats, Russian thistle, mustards, etc.—probably cause greater losses than sow thistle or quackgrass because of their abundance over larger areas. Thus both present and possible future damage needs to be considered and different weeds are difficult to compare.

Digging for gold and digging merely to produce a ditch are vastly different. Both may require the same amount of physical effort, but the gold digger finds keen enjoyment where the other man only watches the clock and wishes the day were over.

Milking ordinary cows and milking high producing cows are in the same degree and for the same reason vastly different. The average cow of the United States is regarded by the boys on the farm as a necessary evil and few dairymen regard dairying as an interesting game. That is the primary reason why dairying on the average North Dakota farm is not liked.

POULTRY

TREATMENT FOR SCALY LEGS

Affection Is Common Among Chickens and Is Caused by an Extremely Small Mite.

Scaly leg of poultry is a common and well-known affection of chickens that sometimes causes affected birds to become worthless. It is caused by an extremely small mite that works in and under the crusts that form on the legs. Caraway or sulphur ointment will kill the pests. Scales form at the point of invasion of the insect, and under them the skin is irritated and bloody. Badly affected birds walk with difficulty, and may even lose a toe; later they become thin, lose their appetites and prove worthless.

To treat scaly leg the feet and legs of affected fowls are held in warm water for several minutes, so that the crusts are softened and can be removed. A mite killer is then applied to the dry diseased surface. The following mixtures are recommended: 1. Oil of caraway, mixed in four times as much lard or vaseline; or, 2, flowers of sulphur, one dram; carbonate of potash, 20 grains; and lard or vaseline, half an ounce. Some poultrymen have used a mixture of one part of kerosene and two parts of raw linseed oil with speedy effect. The legs of the affected fowls are dipped in this mixture, care being taken that the feathers are not wet.

GARBAGE FED SUCCESSFULLY

District of Columbia Poultry Farm Reports Excellent Results From Waste Material.

A poultry farm in the District of Columbia which handles about 1,000 fowls reports excellent results from the use of well-selected garbage. This material is hauled twice a day and fed to the birds about ten o'clock in the morning and again during the middle of the afternoon so that the table scraps are fed fresh only two or three hours after they are discarded from the kitchen. The feeding method of this poultryman is to scatter the garbage on the grass in such quantities that the fowls will clean up all the refuse. He rotates these feeding spots in such a way that no contamination results. The outstanding feature of the success of this poultryman is centralized in his painstaking selection of the garbage and the elimination of all objectionable material.

Profitable returns have resulted also from the feeding of garbage to fattening cockerels and old hens. A small flock of turkeys is maintained on this farm and the gobblers gobble their way to a front line position when garbage lunch time rolls around. The turkeys keenly relish the table scraps and abandon tender grasshoppers and succulent alfalfa in order to scamper to the feeding spots when the garbage wagon approaches.

RAISE CHICKENS FOR PROFIT

Besides Furnishing Supply of Eggs and Meat for Family Some Can Be Marketed.

Raise more chickens. Besides furnishing meat and eggs for the family a good flock of hens will lay eggs to sell. It costs little to get a good flock started; they live largely on waste for a good part of the year and do not require a large acreage of cleared land for their keep.

Determine Best Laying Hen.

You can help to decide which hens are kept at a loss by going through the house just after dark and feeling the crop of each bird. Those hens whose crops are packed full are in all probability the hens which are laying [illegible]

WINTER SHOULD BE RESPITE OF FARM ANIMALS FROM PARASITES

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Most of the domestic animals that are kept on pastures during the summer collect a wide assortment of internal parasites that spend part of their life cycle within the animal and part of it outside. The infection, says the United States Department of Agriculture, usually takes place in warm weather, as at that time there are proper conditions of moisture and temperature for the development of the organisms. In some cases there are insects that act as intermediate hosts for certain parasites and of course during the winter such hosts are not active. Some parasites of horses and cattle are carried by biting insects that introduce them into the blood stream of the animal. Several species of parasites spend part of their life cycle in dung beetles and through these beetles are taken in with grass and get into the digestive tract of the animal. The ordinary house fly is a carrier for one of the stomach worms of the horse. Various kinds of tape worms of poultry spend a period of their existence in house flies, snails and other lower animals. All these worms require also proper conditions of warmth and moisture for their development.

Get Rid of Parasites.

From these facts about the habits of some of the well-known internal parasites of domestic animals it is plain that fall and early winter is the most opportune time to rid the animals of them, and give them a chance to recuperate. Such an interior clean-out also reduces the number of chances of reinfection on the pastures the following spring. Winter is a rest from reinfestation, but because animals have to resist adverse weather conditions it is doubly advisable to get rid of all parasites, to give the animals an opportunity to use their feed in maintaining body temperature and in putting on fat or producing milk.

There are probably hundreds of treatments recommended by various persons for worms, bots, and other parasites, most of which are useless or very nearly so. However, there are certain treatments that have been proved by experiment to be effective for certain parasites. It has been found that bots can be removed from horses by the use of carbon bisulphide. It is given in six-dram doses, in capsules, and a purgative is unnecessary. The horse is usually kept off feed for 24 hours before the capsule is given. This treatment will also get the big round worms that frequently infest the small intestine. To get rid of the round worms that are found in the large intestines, use oil of chenopodium (oil of American wormseed) in doses of 4 to 4½ drams, with a quart of raw linseed oil or an aloes ball.

So far veterinarians have very little to say about the treatment of internal parasites in cattle. Not a great deal of work has been done along this line, but copper sulphate has been found of some use as a treatment for stomach worms.

Control Stomach Worms.

This copper-sulphate treatment for stomach worms is very effective in the control of stomach worms in sheep. A 1 per cent solution in water is the strength usually employed. Three fluid ounces of the 1 per cent solution is sufficient for yearlings and older sheep, and 1½ ounces for lambs three months old and older. At the bureau of animal industry farm at Vienna, Va., this treatment is given once a month through the year, and the treated lambs have made better growth and grown more wool than lambs that were not treated. At the age of one hundred and twenty days, treated lambs have averaged 60 pounds each. Other worms of sheep are hard to get rid of, but carbon tetrachloride gives promise of, being effective for many of them.

In the case of swine, oil of chenopodium in doses of one dram for 100-pound pigs, and other doses in proportion, will remove the large round worms from the small intestine. A dose should be accompanied with one to four ounces of castor-oil. This treatment is given with a dose syringe. Although worm treatments are given to hogs in a great many cases in capsules with a capsule gun, there is considerable danger that, owing to the peculiar anatomy of the pig's pharynx a capsule will be put in the wrong place. A great many hogs, say veterinarians in the Department of Agriculture, have been killed in this way.

Treatment for Poultry.

A treatment frequently used for round worms in poultry is made up by soaking a pound of finely chopped tobacco stems in water for two hours and then mixing the stems and the water with half the usual mash ration. This amount is for 100 birds. The feed which is mixed with the tobacco is given after fasting the birds for 24 hours, as usually they will not eat it otherwise. So far no recommendation can be made for ridding hens of other intestinal parasites.

A word of caution is necessary as to the use of remedies for parasites, which applies as well to medicinal treatment generally. Medicinal treatment for parasites and other conditions should be given only by or under the direction of properly qualified and competent persons, otherwise serious damage may be done to valuable animals and little or no benefit result from the treatment.

FREEZING POINTS OF MANY CROPS

Object of Special Studies in Bureau of Plant Industry.

Experiments Being Conducted With Various Fruits and Vegetables Liable to Freezing in Handling or on Market.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The freezing points of a large variety of vegetables and fruits, which are likely to be subjected to freezing conditions during harvesting, handling, or marketing, have been the object of special studies in the bureau of plant industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. Between 15,000 and 20,000 determinations have been made including the freezing points of 20 varieties of apples, 22 kinds of strawberries, 18 varieties of potatoes, [illegible] plums, blackberries, raspberries, cranberries, and some cut flowers, particularly peonies, roses, and lilies. Besides this general study, the work is being continued with the principal fruits and vegetables which are liable to be in danger of freezing either in transit or on the market. In this work the methods of detecting freezing injury, the rate at which fruits and vegetables freeze in constant low temperatures are determined.

The freezing points were determined for 18 standard varieties of Irish potatoes, grown under the same cultural conditions, harvested at the same time, and stored at the same temperatures. The freezing point apparently varies with the variety and shows a tendency to vary with the family group. It has been shown that potatoes can frequently be exposed to temperatures much below their freezing points if they are not disturbed until the temperature is again above the freezing [illegible]

LIVE STOCK FACTS

SOUND POINTS ON BABY BEEF

Producer Generally Finds It Necessary to Breed His Own Stock—Well-Bred Cows Best.

The producer of baby beef generally finds it necessary to breed his own stock. Calves with the conformation and quality to finish at 18 months of age are seldom bought on the market in any numbers of uniform type, and at a figure where they can be profitably fed out. Older and plainer stock can be bought for less money, will make larger gains, and sell at about the same price a hundred pounds as the finished calf.

The problem for the producer of baby beef is to get his raw material of the proper quality as cheaply as possible, and in the opinion of N. K. Carnes of the live stock division at University farm, he can generally do this best by keeping a herd of real, well-bred beef cows, and by feeding and caring for them economically. The feed and care of the cow will be charged against the fatted calf.

"The majority of beef producers," says Mr. Carnes, "prefer to have their calves dropped in the spring of the year. The calves can run with their dams on pasture during the summer, and be weaned in the fall about the time they go into winter quarters. By this practice, the beef cows can be wintered more economically. They require less shelter and labor, and less concentrated food than when they are suckling calves. A beef cow of good type will support a calf and keep her own flesh on pasture without any grain. When the pasture is short or dry, silage can be generally fed at a profit. Breeding cows can be wintered well on good legume hay or on carbonaceous roughages with some nitrogenous concentrates to balance the ration. The beef cow should utilize the roughage on a farm to maintain her body weight. The high-priced concentrates can be fed more economically to her growing calf.

"Regular care, with plenty of pure water and salt will go a long way toward keeping a cow in condition. Do not let her get down thin, because it always costs money to put on flesh, and she must be in condition if she is to raise a healthy, vigorous calf."

TAKE CARE OF BOAR'S FEET

Many Superior Animals Have Been Ruined Because Owner Neglected His Toe Nails.

Did you ever see a big boar stumbling around with his toes spread out and his pasterns down nearly to the ground? Certainly you have. Many a good boar has been ruined because his owner did not take care of the animal's feet. In trimming the boar's feet, first gain the confidence of the animal. Be patient and quiet with him and you can do almost anything with a boar; but just as soon as you antagonize him, it will be impossible to accomplish anything.

Scratch the boar on the flank and he will lie down and stretch out so that it is possible to get at his feet without causing him any discomfort. At the same time you will have him in a position to do the work with the least effort on your part. Use a sharp knife and pare off the bottom of the foot. Trim the toe back until you reach the quick; you will do no harm if you draw a little blood as it is necessary to trim into the quick in order to get shortness of toe. Each time that you trim the foot you will be able to shorten the toe a little more, so that by patient effort even a bad foot can be shaped up nicely and trained to grow in the correct shape.

SOW-FEED AT WEANING TIME

Object Is to Check Secretion of Milk—Dry Oats Are Safe Feed for Short Period.

When pigs are weaned the feed should be cut down to check the secretion of milk. Dry oats make a safe feed for a sow for a few days. If the udder gets very full, it is a good plan to turn the sow in with the pigs once a day for a few days. By this system the sow's milk supply is reduced, and she is dried up gradually.

A SUDDEN CHANGE

SYNOPSIS.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, apparently is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance, and the feeling of antagonism is mutual.

It was not at all probable the satchel contained any criminating evidence, yet the temptation was strong to obtain, if possible, a hasty glance at the contents. But for this he was already too late, scarcely reaching the room indeed, before Sexton appeared, announcing his mission.

"Coolidge tells me he usually occupied this room," West ventured curiously, "How did it happen I was put in here?"

"It was upon order from Miss Natalie, sir, but she did not mention the change in time to remove the bag."

"How long have you been here, Sexton?"

"Sixteen years, sir."

"You knew Miss Natalie's father then, and must enjoy the place to remain so long?"

"It has been very pleasant, sir, until the last month or so," regretfully, yet evidently glad of the opportunity to talk, lingering with one hand on the knob of the door. "Since then things haven't been just the same."

"In what way?"

"Well, I don't exactly know, sir. Miss Natalie seems to change her mind, an' we never can please her. That's the trouble, mostly. Last night I waited up until you all went to bed, an' then locked the house, the way she told me to. But that didn't suit her at all, for she stopped me on the stairs, an' made me go back an' leave the side door unlocked—just said she'd attend to that herself."

"Miss Natalie told you? You are sure, Sexton?"

"Oh, it was her, sir; there was a light burning in the hall, an' she was all dressed up as though she was goin' out. 'Taint the first time, either. I ain't got no right to say anything, but it puzzles me what she wants to go out for at that time o' night. And I thought maybe I ought to speak to Mr. Percival Coolidge about it."

"No. I wouldn't, Sexton," said West quietly. "It would likely enough only get you into trouble. Probably she cannot sleep well, and so walks in the garden."

As West made no further effort to continue the conversation, but began to carelessly roll a cigarette, Sexton slipped silently through the opening, the valise in his hand, and closed the door behind him.

This attempt to dig information out of a servant was not a pleasant experience, yet West felt that in this case it was fully justified. If he had retained any lingering doubt to what had occurred the previous night, this doubt had entirely vanished in the face of Sexton's testimony. His visitor, and the one who had ordered the servant to leave the side door unlocked, had been the same—not Natalie Coolidge, but strangely resembling her. Whatever else her purpose would be, one object was clearly connected with the presence there of Percival. Very well! this meant that he already had two distinct lines of investigation opened to him—the woman, and the man. The first was like pursuing a shadow, but Coolidge was real enough. He determined to keep in touch with the fellow, confident that he would thus be eventually led to a discovery of his companion.

CHAPTER IV

A Visit to the Indigent.

The guests had either retired to their rooms, or were wandering about the spacious grounds; at least none were in evidence when West emerged on to the side terrace, where Miss Natalie and Percival Coolidge waited.

It was not a long ride, the point sought being a short submerged street in the southwestern secton of the city. The runabout felt its way cautiously forward through a jostling throng of screaming youngsters, and finally turned into Arch street, only two blocks in length, with low, two storied, wooden cottages on either side. Percival, plainly nervous at the surroundings, indicated the place sought in the middle of the first block, and Natalie ran the car up against the curb.

"Is this the place?" she asked doubtfully, eyeing the rather disreputable cottage, which seemed deserted.

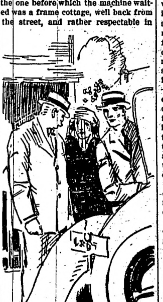
Coolidge unfastened the door, and stepped out.

"Yes, it's all right," he answered sharply. "You might wait here, West; we'll only be gone a few minutes. [illegible] along, Natalie." West, who [illegible] said heartily, "I shall be very comfortable; don't bother about me."

He had a distinct impression that Coolidge did not desire his company any further, yet this suspicion aroused no sentiment. This was a matter with which he was in no way concerned, and the only interest he felt was strictly impersonal. Sinking comfortably back in the seat, his gaze centered on the maze of children playing in the street. Their antics amused him for some time, but, at last, he began wondering at the delay of those within, and his mind drifted to the peculiar conditions with which he was confronted. If some conspiracy was on foot against Natalie, what could be its object? and who were directly involved? Seemingly, Percival Coolidge was the only person who could be directly interested should misfortune occur to his niece; he was the guardian of her inheritance, and responsible for what remained of her father's estate. Undoubtedly he also was the next heir at law. His interest in the matter was therefore easily figured out. West had to learn the condition of the Steven Coolidge estate, and whether or not Percival had administered it justly. Once satisfied upon that point, he would know better what further steps to take.

If Coolidge was engaged in some criminal scheme the man was certainly shrewd enough to carefully cover his trail. It was no sudden temptation to which he had yielded, but a deeply laid plan, formed, perhaps, as long ago as his brother's death, and now just coming to a head.

West's glance took in the surroundings, but with no conception that they would have any direct bearing upon the mystery he was endeavoring to solve. It was a block of irregular houses, a tenement on the corner, a dirty-looking brick, the other houses of wood, mostly two stories in height, rather disreputable in appearance, but the one before which the machine waited was a frame cottage, well back from the street, and rather respectable in appearance, although it must have been some years since last painted. The door was shut. The chimney indicated no sign of smoke, the front yard gave every evidence of long neglect.



"Really I Feel Quite Unnerved."

An urchin, chasing a ball, plunged recklessly beneath the auto, emerging with the sphere in his grimy fist. West stopped him with a question.

"Who lives in there?"

"I don't know. These folks just come in. They ain't got no kids. Here ye are, Micky!"

"Wait a minute. Here's a dime for you. You say these people just moved in?"

"Yep."

"When?"

"Couple days, maybe. Hooligans moved out 'bout a week ago, an' then, a while after that, these guys moved in. I ain't seen nobody 'round, but a sorter middlin' ol' woman."

West, having abstracted all the information possible, made no further effort. The knowledge thus obtained as to the present occupants of the cottage did not exactly coincide with the story Coolidge had told. He had spoken of a widow with three children in destitute circumstances following the father's death. The boy asserted there were no children in the family. And they had just moved in, within a very few days, during which time the neighborhood had only glimpsed a "middling old" woman. It was strange at least, adding distinctly to the puzzle of the whole affair. West grew nervous, wondering why the two should remain so long within, out of sight and hearing. He had been waiting now for three-quarters of an hour. He opened the door of the car and stepped out upon the curb, almost tempted to investigate the cause of delay. As he stood there undecided, the two emerged from the cottage and descended the steps together, through the [illegible]

They came down the narrow board walk together, Percival carefully holding the lady's arm to prevent her tripping over the loosened planks, but neither exchanging a word. Natalie appeared somewhat sobered by her visit, and West noticed that she had tied a light veil over her face, which slightly shadowed her features. It was only as they reached the curb that she spoke, her voice rather low and listless.

"Would you mind driving the car back?" she asked Coolidge. "Really I feel quite unnerved."

"No wonder," he returned sympathetically, "I have never witnessed a sadder case; the conditions were even worse than I imagined. I should never have brought you with me, my dear."

"Oh, I am not sorry I came; but it has been a lesson to me. I do not think I ever before realized what such poverty meant. It was most pitiful."

"Do not think of it any longer, Natalie," Coolidge insisted rather gruffly. "They are all right now. I shall telephone for a doctor as soon as we get back, and attend to the rent the first thing tomorrow."

"I know, Uncle, but I cannot forget so easily."

The returning ride seemed very brief, and, almost before West realized it, the car whirled in through the Coolidge gate, and came to a stop at the door. The party separated pleasantly. Natalie disappeared somewhere within, while the two men strolled out to the tennis court where the guests were enjoying a spirited game. All met again at lunch, and then separated, some to motor over to the lake, the others amusing themselves as they saw fit. Both Coolidge and Natalie vanished, while West, finding himself alone, chose a book from the library, and, solaced by a cigar, sought a shady nook on the porch.

The book, however, was but a mark for his thoughts, which continually revolved about the strange surroundings in which he found himself. He was apparently making no progress, was no nearer a solution of the mystery confronting him. Thus far, at least, no direct clue had presented itself. Numerous things had occurred to strengthen suspicion, and to increase interest in the quest. But beyond this—nothing. He liked the girl and was completely enlisted in her service. He disliked Percival, and was convinced the fellow was planning evil. Several incidents had already strengthened this belief; yet there was nothing positive upon which to build; no path of adventure for him to follow. To speculate was easy enough, but real facts eluded him.

Sexton appeared in the door, evidently looking for some one. The man espied him there in the shadow of the vines, and came forward.

"Miss Coolidge requests your presence, sir, for a few moments," he said gravely.

"Why, certainly; did she say where, Sexton?"

"In the library, sir; she is waiting there now."

"Very well. I will join her at once. Thank you, Sexton," and West disappeared into the cool, darkened hall.

CHAPTER V

An Unexpected Dismissal.

The shades had been drawn closely to exclude the sun, and for a moment after he first crossed the threshold of the library, West was unable to distinguish any occupant. He heard Sexton silently close the door behind him, but it was not until she moved slightly that he was able to perceive her presence directly across from where he stood. Her voice broke the silence.

"You will find a seat next to the window, Captain," she said quietly. "It was very good of you to come."

"The pleasure was mine," he replied. "You wished to speak with me, the servant said."

"Yes." She leaned back against the couch on which she rested, with face now clearly revealed, one hand nervously twirling a fan. "This is a very strange situation in which we find ourselves, Captain West."

"I have felt so," he admitted, surprised at this beginning. "Yet I must confess, I am now becoming quite reconciled."

She sat up suddenly, with eyes searching his face.

"What do you mean by that?"

"Perhaps I ought not to say," he answered boldly. "Yet circumstances seemingly justify frankness between us. I mean that I feel far more deeply interested in the final outcome of this affair today than I did yesterday—it means more to me."

"Indeed! Why?"

"Largely, I imagine, because I am privileged to know you much better. That naturally makes a difference."

"Does it indeed? You imply then an increased interest in myself as an individual brings with it a greater desire to serve me?"

"Assuredly, yes."

"Then you render my task doubly hard," she said [illegible] happiness [illegible] in this matter merely in a business way, as—as—a detective. Surely you understand this clearly?"

"In a measure that is quite true," feeling the sharp sting of her words. "Yet the comparison is hardly fair, is it? I am not a detective in the sense with which you employ the term. You knew I was not serving you for pay."

"Did I?"

"I should hope you did," his voice hardening slightly.

"But for what other end did you volunteer your services?"

"Perhaps that is not so easily explained. It was a spirit of adventure which first led me to answer your advertisement, I presume. At least, I can give it no other name. Then, when we met, you appealed to me personally; I felt a desire to further our acquaintance and—well, your story aroused my interest."

"Is that all?"

"It might have been had not you chosen methods of procedure which led me to other thoughts."

She laughed.

"Oh, I see! All this has happened because I introduced you to the others as my fiance. Why, that is positively funny. Didn't you know that was only a part of the game being played?"

"Yes," he said, ignoring the humor of it, and feeling oddly sober, "I understood, and was playing the same as you. Only both of us, I think, forget an important fact."

"What, please?"

"That we were young, socially on a level, and that you were an exceedingly charming young woman."

She laughed again, yet this time with more restraint.

"That is quite ridiculous, Captain West. Surely, you are not actually making love to me?"

"No, I am not. I am merely facing the situation very frankly, It would be useless for me to claim lack of interest in you. From our very first meeting you have appealed to me strongly—more so than any other woman of my acquaintance. I confess I care for you—as a woman."

"Really you are quite flattering. I never dreamed I possessed such marvelous powers." She remained silent a moment, her eyes shaded by their long lashes; then uplifted them again to his face. "This makes it all the more necessary that I now speak plainly," she went on at length, "That I should explain to you it has all been a mistake. That was why I asked you to come here now."

"All a mistake! Not the trouble you were in, surely?"

"Yes. I must have dreamed most of it, I think. I have just had a long, confidential talk with Percival Coolidge, and we understood each other perfectly. Everything has been explained. So there is no necessity for our pretending any longer."

West rose to his feet, comprehending her full meaning, yet unwilling to yield his position without further explanation.

"Your words are certainly plain enough," he said slowly, "yet I trust I may be pardoned if I ask a question or so. Do you mean the mystery is already solved without my further assistance?"

"I am convinced there was no mystery; that it was only imagination, Captain West. My calling you was a mistake."

"There is no one impersonating you?"

"No."

"The checks at the bank; the strange person using your name; all these were myths?"

She laughed.

"Of course. I really believed all I said to you at the time, but everything has been explained since, and I realize how very foolish I have been."

"You sent for me, then, merely to say I was dismissed?"

"Yes."

"And you told Coolidge, of course, how I came to be here?"

"Yes."

"And the others? What will they think?"

"Why, that can make no difference. Let them suppose we had a quarrel, and that our engagement is broken," and she laughed again, evidently vastly amused at the idea.

"But you, personally?" he insisted.

She sobered instantly, also rising, and facing him.

"Captain West, let us be sensible. I invited you here for a certain purpose. You were employed as much as any of my other servants. Is that a sufficient answer?"

"It certainly is. I will depart at once."

"Thank you. The limousine will be at the door. You will return to the club, I presume?"

"Temporarily, until other arrangements are made."

He bowed and left her standing there in the shadows, the expression of her face veiled, but there seemed no response, no softening in the rigid attitude of her figure. She did not care; was only interested in his immediate departure. The change had occurred with such abruptness West was unable as yet to realize its full significance, but with no attempt to combat her decision, left the room, closing the door behind him.

American Farm Bureau

Michigan State Farm Bureau, Lansing, Michigan.

Michigan farmers say "Our farm bureau is SOME hired man."

The activities of the Michigan Farm Bureau federation have been as varied as they have been beneficial. By one act—that of blocking temporarily the abandonment of railroad branches—the farm bureau did a splendid service in transportation for its members.

The purchasing department of the Michigan Farm Bureau federation saved $7,500 to its members by purchase of 1,500,000 pounds of binder twine. A big saving was made also in the purchase of sulphate of ammonia. Fifty-one cars of coal were purchased when this fuel was hard to get.

The 1921 wool pool paid off, netting the poolers an average of 19 cents.

Two hundred thousand pounds of certified Grimm alfalfa seed were purchased for members since January 1, 1922. The Michigan Farm Bureau maintains a seed-cleaning plant that is used by thousands of its members.

The first week of the produce exchange, just started, $5,305 worth of produce was marketed at a saving.

The farmers of Michigan pay $10 a year for their membership fee. All of these services are included and they are satisfied that it is one of the best $10 that they ever spent.

EUROPEAN FARMER IS MAKING BIG HEADWAY

Samuel Adams Returns From Extended Trip and Tells Interesting Story of Conditions.

Land in Europe is passing from the control of the landed gentry, the big landlords, to the peasant small holders, the farmers who actually till it. Europe is rapidly returning to normal food production. Germany is bound to come back economically. Russia will have grain to export within two years. Co-operative marketing is being perfected by European farmers until it is the dominant feature of both the economic and political structure over there.

These are the conclusions of Samuel Adams, scion of the famous Adams family which gave us two presidents, who has returned from Europe after several months spent studying co-operative marketing and the agricultural situation. Mr. Adams carried a commission from the American Farm bureau which gained him ready access to the heads of the government in all the countries visited—England, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Poland, Germany, Switzerland, Denmark, France, Holland and Belgium.

Samuel Adams.

Mr. Adams says: "In every country which I visited, I found that the farmer was regarded as the great stabilizing force. For that reason the governments, whether clerical or socialistic, red or white, see the necessity of giving the peasant a real ownership in the land he works. In all these countries new laws are being passed so that the peasant may purchase his small holding and owe fealty to none except the government. In Scandinavia they have worked out an ingenious scheme whereby the farmer living on his own land gets a reduction on his taxes. This taxes absentee landlordism to death.

"The impression that Russia does not have a stable government has been grossly exaggerated. I spent some time in Finland, only a night's ride from Russia across the bay. The Finns do not agree with the Russian system of government, but they recognize that it is bringing order out of chaos faster than some of us realize. [illegible] be surprised to see [illegible] imported from Russia [illegible] is making great headway in all these countries except England. In Britain consumers' co-operation under the Rochdale plan is highly successful, but the British farmers are too individualistic and have too attractive markets right at their back doors to stick loyally by their collective selling societies.

"The farmers in Denmark and the other Scandinavian countries have developed co-operative marketing to a high point. It has changed the whole face of the country, not only squeezing the profit out of distribution but also resulting in better farming and improved production.

"The most unforgettable incident of the trip was the Passion Play at Oberammergau. Mrs. Adams and I came away feeling that no one could witness that great pantomime of the life of Jesus without resolving to live a better life, more earnestly devoted to serving one's fellows. If everyone could see the Passion Play there would not be so much trouble in this world of ours."

HOWARD IS HEARD BY RADIO

Farmers Attending Picnic at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, Listen to Executive by Wireless.

"They ain't no sech animal" was not meant for the last decade. It is not safe to make any sort of a negative statement with regard to what will or will not happen these days.

Take for instance a big farm bureau picnic held the other day at Fond du Lac, Wis., when 5,000 farm bureau members met to have a good time. Ten years ago no one would have thought of having the president of the American Farm Bureau federation speak to them by radio. And yet that is just what happened at Fond du Lac.

President James R. Howard of the American Farm Bureau federation talked by radio to the farm bureau members there. Here, in part, is what he said:

"By one of the greatest industrial miracles the world has ever seen—radio—I am permitted to speak to you, through the air, without wires. What may this new means of thought transmission not hold of progress and advancement for us who live on the farms of America! Perhaps no other movement in the history of the world has made so rapid progress within the short span of ten years as has the farm bureau. It is entirely within bounds of propriety to say that no other movement has so impressed the general public, or accomplished as large results as has yours."

COTTON SALES ARE STARTED

Fifty Bales of Strict Middling Sold to Birmingham Concern for Premium Price.

The Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton association has made its initial sale of cotton. It consisted of 50 bales of strict middling to the Avondale mills of Birmingham for 25 cents per pound. The price was considerably above the market of today, but the premium was paid by the Avondale mills in order to show that they are deeply interested in co-operative marketing of cotton and anxious to make the first year in Alabama an outstanding success. The average daily receipts of the association are now above 200 bales. The warehouse men of the state are promptly mailing to the association all samples which are being graded and stapled by experts in the Montgomery office. Credit amounting to $6,000,000 has been extended to the association. Allen Northington, general manager, states that the association could handle every bale of Alabama cotton [illegible] under contract.

Mudania Protocol Is Signed and Greeks Are Fleeing From Turkish Territory.

PEACE CONFERENCE ON NOV. 1

Attorney General Daugherty's "Dry Seas" Order Creates a Stir—May Help Ship Subsidy Bill—Great Britain Pays America $50,000,000 Interest.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

> ATTORNEY General Daugherty has ruled that no intoxicating liquor may be served on any American vessel anywhere, and that no vessel whatever may bring liquor within the three-mile limit, even though it be sealed. Do you agree with the opinion that this ruling will increase the chances of passage of the ship subsidy bill; and what do you think of that measure?

TURKEY for the Turks—that in a word will be the effect of the protocol signed by the allied commanders and the Kemalists Thursday morning at the little village of Mudania, if the Near East peace conference soon to be held follows along the same lines. Something like a million and a half Greeks who have been residents of Asia Minor, Constantinople and eastern Thrace are fleeing westward, fairly panic stricken at the thought of massacre and outrage which Christian peoples have been taught to expect from the Moslem. An added incentive to their flight is afforded by the fear of Turkish reprisal for the acts of the Greek army in Anatolia and the Greek civilians in Constantinople.

Truly the plight of these refugees is most serious. Abandoning their long-time homes and sacrificing their possessions, they are struggling in disorganized masses to get out of Turkish territory, and the means of transportation are pitifully scant. Pestilence already is appearing in the crowded concentration camps, and food is scarce. Of course they are all trying to get to Greece, but what will become of them there, is a problem. The government at Athens is striving to devise means of caring for them, but the country already is crowded and has neither the food nor the money to provide for these hundreds of thousands of newcomers. In eastern Thrace the Greeks are working feverishly to save all they can of their harvest. There is a lot of wheat there and the Greek government may purchase it to help stave off a famine. The Thracian delegates in the Greek parliament have cabled to Secretary Hoover for aid from America.

Another throng that is trying to get out of Turkish territory is composed of the many thousands of Russian refugees. They believe that Kemal has secretly promised the soviet government that he will send them back to Russia, and the record of the Bolsheviki leaves them in no doubt as to what their fate would be there.

COMPLETION of the armistice protocol was accomplished at six o'clock Thursday morning and the document was signed by Generals Harington, Charpy, Mombelli and Ismet Pasha, for Great Britain, France, Italy and the Turkish Nationalists respectively. Full agreement was reached only after many anxious days during which Ismet's excessive demands were met by General Harington's calm and unafraid firmness. The Englishman told the Turk plainly that his government had said its last word, and that if its terms were not accepted the Turks must take the consequences. He reminded Ismet that England had a strong navy, a good army and an abundance of guns. While the British [illegible]

Charpy received instructions from Paris, where Lord Curzon had been in conference with Premier Poincare, and announced that France adhered to the terms proposed. Ismet Pasha, losing thus the support he may have counted on, had no alternative but to yield, and this he did with good grace. The Greek representatives sent a note saying they could not sign the protocol, but the Turks were assured that it would be effective in three days despite this refusal. "Let's sign," said Ismet, and the signatures were appended and the threat of war faded out. Later Greece decided to sign.

The terms of the Mudania convention are substantially as given in this column a week ago. Greece is given fifteen days to evacuate Thrace as far west as the Maritza river, handing over the civil powers to the allied authorities, who will immediately transfer them to the Turkish authorities. Turkish gendarmerie in limited numbers will control the territory for the time being, with allied troops on guard to prevent disorders, but within thirty days after Greece gets out Thrace is to be turned over wholly to the Turks. New neutral zones in the Chanak and Ismid areas, in the Constantinople peninsula and in Gallipoli are to be defined by mixed commissions and are to be respected by the Angora government.

It is understood the peace conference will open on November 1 in Scutari, or possibly in some city in Italy. It is probable that Bulgaria, Georgia and the Ukraine will be invited to send representatives, but not the Moscow government. Other nations that are likely to have delegates, in addition to Great Britain, France, Turkey and Italy, are Jugo-Slavia, Rumania, Greece, Hungary, Austria, Czechoslovakia and possibly Poland.

HAVING avoided war with Turkey without losing dignity, and retaining for the present the actual control of the Dardanelles, the British government seems once more solidly entrenched, and the talk of retiring Prime Minister Lloyd George, which broke out furiously a few days ago, is dying down. His opponents at home, indeed, now have no fit man to suggest as his successor, for Bonar Law, upon whom they had counted, has renewed his fealty to the Welshman, as has Lord Birkenhead. The Unionists are said to have decided to stick by the coalition and make it practically a permanent party when the general election comes, which probably will be about Christmas. The premier, after a week of retirement in the country, made a notable speech Saturday in Manchester, telling his opponents what he thought of them and demanding the support of the country for his policies.

BUCHAREST was en fete Saturday, when King Ferdinand and Queen Marie were formally crowned as rulers of the kingdom of Rumania which the war enlarged by the addition of Bessarabia and Transylvania. The ceremonies were gorgeous and many other nations were represented by princes and high dignitaries. In view of the fact that soviet Russia still threatens Rumania, it is worthy of note that France sent Marshal Foch and with him General Weygand, who organized Poland's successful opposition to the Bolsheviki two years ago.

ATTORNEY General Daugherty certainly stirred up the animals when he barred liquors not only from all American vessels, but even from all other ships while within the American three-mile limits. At first there was a storm of comment punctuated with excited predictions of what foreign governments would do to us in the way of retaliation and with predictions that all foreign steamship lines would divert their ships to Canadian ports, leaving New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle and our other coast cities to go to wreck and ruin. With the subsidence of the tempest these facts appear: The British government says it has no interest in the domestic legislation of the United States, which it has a perfect right to put into operation, and if British subjects break United States law they will have to take the consequences. [illegible]

French labor circles are concerned because the French law provides that sailors must be given wine daily. All American vessels, notified by wireless, at once sealed their liquor supplies and are turning them over to the authorities on reaching port. Many foreign vessels sailed with their usual supplies of booze, in order to bring about test cases, and the Cunard and Anchor Steamship companies began proceedings in the United States district court in New York to restrain government officials from seizing their ships or the liquor aboard them. These companies attack the legality of the Daugherty order on the ground that it is in contravention of the general commercial treaty of 1815 and a misinterpretation of the Volstead act.

The International Mercantile Marine corporation obtained from Federal Judge Hand a temporary restraining order enjoining New York officials from molesting the liquor on the steamers Finland and St. Paul.

The American Steamship Owners' association decided to abide peacefully by the ruling provided the prohibitionists will reciprocate by giving their support to the ship subsidy bill. It cannot be denied that the attorney general's decision met with general approval throughout at least the Middle West and South, and it is believed its effect will be greatly to improve the chances of the ship subsidy measure when it comes up for passage in congress.

GREAT BRITAIN, through Ambassador Geddes, has just paid to the United States $50,000,000, which is approximately the amount of this year's interest on the British debt to America. Sir Robert Horne, who is coming to help adjust the terms of the debt, is delayed by the unsettled state of foreign and domestic policies and may not arrive before the end of the month.

It is stated in Paris that France will not be able to pay any part of her debts for four years, since all receipts for that period must be devoted to reconstruction of the devastated regions. When the interallied financial congress meets in Brussels the French government will probably submit a plan drawn up by Premier Poincare. It calls for a revision of Germany's indebtedness on a basis of actual reparations only, wiping out all charges for pensions, war allowances and the like. France's claim would thus be reduced by almost 25 per cent.

THE Irish hierarchy last week delivered a shrewd blow at the rebellious Republicans in the form of a pastoral letter strongly condemning guerrilla warfare against the Free State government and declaring "the killing of National soldiers is murder before God."

JAPAN notified Washington last week that the official documents of ratification of the Washington treaties were on the way and that her embassy had been given full power to exchange ratifications. This was most gratifying to the administration, which is beginning to get a bit annoyed by France's long delay in ratifying the pacts. Paris dispatches say action by the French parliament is not likely during the forthcoming session because of the great number of domestic issues and the Near East affairs.

GRAIN MARKET BEARISH

Active Buying for Seaboard Raises Wheat Price

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended Oct. 13, 1922.

GRAIN: Grain prices generally averaged higher during the week, influenced by war news early in week, strength in Liverpool, and continued transportation difficulties. Chicago December wheat up 3⅝c net; Chicago December corn up 3c. Wheat had a higher range on the 13th on lack of selling pressure. Corn active and higher with larger outside interest. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.18; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.13; No. 2 mixed corn 69c; No. 2 yellow corn 69c; No. 3 white oats 42c. Average farm prices No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa about 55½c. Closing future prices: Chicago December wheat $1.19⅝; Chicago December corn 64c; Minneapolis December wheat $1.08⅛; Kansas City December wheat $1.03; Winnipeg December wheat 96⅝c.

DAIRY PRODUCTS: Butter markets barely steady during the week. Receipts continue to run light following seasonal decrease in production. Supplies of all grades ample with some tendency toward accumulation. Undertone somewhat unsettled in anticipation of heavier arrivals. Storage butter fairly active. Closing prices 92 score butter: New York 45c, Chicago 43½c.

Cheese markets firm during the week. Comparatively light receipts and good fall quality maintained firmness. Growing confidence through the week was expressed in more active trading. Cheese prices at Wisconsin primary markets Oct. 12th: Twins 24c; Daisies 24c; Double Daisies, Young Americas, Longhorns and Square Prints 23¾c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: Practically all classes of live stock were lower than a week ago. Hogs dropped 5 to 60c per 100 lbs. Beef steers ranged from 10c lower to 15c higher; butcher cows and feeder steers unchanged; veal calves weak to 25c down, while butcher heifers showed a slight price improvement. Fat lambs and yearlings 25c and feeding lambs 25 to 35c lower, while fat ewes were not materially changed for the week. On October 13th butcher hogs 10 to 15c lower; packing sows and pigs unevenly steady. Butcher heifers strong to 15c higher; butcher cows steady to strong; other classes about steady. Sheep and lambs practically steady compared with Thursday's prices. October 13th Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $9.50; bulk $8.15 to $9.40; medium and good beef steers $7.15 to $11; butcher cows and heifers $3.65 to $9.35; feeder steers $5.65 to $8.10; light and medium weight veal calves $7.50 to $11; fat lambs $12.25 to $14.10; feeding lambs $12.75 to $14; yearlings $8.50 to $12; fat ewes $3.50 to $6.75. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Oct. 6th were: Cattle and calves 180,327; hogs 13,515; sheep 170,401.

Fresh meat prices in eastern wholesale markets were not materially changed for the week. Beef practically steady, veal weak to $1 lower; lamb and mutton firm to $1 higher and fresh pork loins weak to $3 lower.

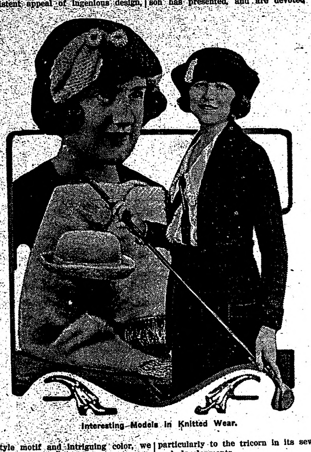
Modish Knitted Outerwear;

Turbans Again Are Popular

SPORTS apparel departments and specialty shops are fairly bubbling over this season with new ideas in modish knitted outerwear. As one views these garments, whose novelty and charm is of thrilling interest, the wonderment is that only comparatively in the last few years have we grown into an appreciation of the artistry of things knitted. What with insistent appeal of ingenious design, style motif and intriguing color, we find the inclination grows to plan to a great extent one's autumn and winter wardrobe in terms of knitted outerwear.



Interesting Models in Knitted Wear.

With the college girl the cloth skirt and gay colored sweater is taking the place of the sleeveless dress, which was such a vital part of the campus wardrobe last year. Slipons are the kind most called for and these come in an entirely different range of effects from other seasons.

Among the latest types is the blouse with collar, cuffs and tight hip band of black, while the body and sleeves are made of vertical stripes in many well-harmonized colors.

With knitted dresses, scarf sets, also knitted, are very popular. There is a new slynx scarf which has a loop stitch that gives it the effect of knitted astrakhan. Herewith is shown one of the popular brush wool sets, which are admirably worn with suits and sweaters.

Tuxedo sweater coats, all of fine silk, are a happy possession for any time of the year. In woolen knit tuxedos, checkered or plaided effects are attained in the stitch and not by contrasting color, such as is noted in the illustration herewith.

Speaking of knitted hats, these also express extreme novelty. We picture a handsome type which has the effect of the modish Hindu wrapped turban. It is knitted in colors, alternating around the crown a section of blue with white.

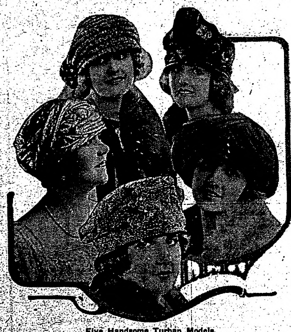
It is well to know that manufacturers have made provision for cold weather requirements and slipon sweaters are of much heavier weight than those sold in the summer. Some extremely handsome numbers show an embroidery of rich design, and this marks an innovation in sweaterdom. Navajo all-over patterns are in star- [illegible]

The turban is a classic in millinery and, while large, irregular and picturesque hats are flourishing like the green bay tree, at the same time new honors are being thrust upon the turban and other small hats. American women like them, especially for the street and in winter time. They are enthusiastic over the spirited and flattering styles which the present season has presented, and are devoted particularly to the tricorn in its several developments.

A group of five handsome models gives a hint of the varied types of turbans that have been successful. Designers have everything at hand to make brilliant, and even gorgeous, bits of headwear, for the small hat can afford to be very rich and ornate.

Velvet is the medium which has been chosen for the two hats at the top of the group. In the hat at the left it is shown covered with shirrings over heavy cord. This is a youthful model finished at the right side with a handsome rosette of silk. A more matronly affair at the right is entirely of velvet with a twisted collar about the crown and an immense chou of shirred velvet at the front, centered with small silver blossoms on each side. Just below, the Hindu model made of malines belongs to any age, and is developed in many colors. For evening a sparkling, upstanding ornament is often added.

One interpretation of the Hindu turban appears at the left of the group, made of silver tissue, but it appears in velvet and in combinations of velvet and metallic fabrics, as well, and there are many ways of adding a touch of trimming to it. Velvet and soutache braid make the charming turban that finishes the group. It differs in shape from all the rest, is becoming to matronly wearers, and is one of those unusual hats that may be worn anywhere.



Five Handsome Turban Models.

The future of the turban is brilliant in more senses than one, for it is scheduled to be worn as a dance hat during the coming winter. Made of cloth of gold or silver, it is embroidered with colored silk floss and adorned with gold or silver beads.

ST. HILAIRE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Reports are now in the hands of each student which will show the results of his work the past six weeks The first six weeks are the most difficult of all the school year, and as usual the resulting grades are not all satisfactory. The next weeks should show improvement for with the newness of our work worn off every one should begin his work seriously, Also the necessary books and supplies are now at hand so there is no excuse for unprepared lessons on that score.

George Norman enrolled in the High School department, Monday.

The freshmen have organized their class with the following officers: Loyd Bilden—President, Dorthy Olson—Vice President, Mae Kenney—Secretary, Hazel Fricker—Treasure Miss Moen—Faculty Advisor.

The need for a larger library allowance is felt with the increased enrollment in our school, There is a serious lack of books for outside reading in the English courses. New books of every kind are needed for many of the books which we have are badly torn. A good library is a vital part of every school equipment but is often sadly neglected.

Last Thursday, Friday the faculty members attended the convention of the Northwestern Minnesota Teachers Association at Thief River Falls, so our school was not in session.

Plans are under way for an exhibit of our school work to the patrons of this school district before the Christmas holidays.

The third and fourth grade pupils, Miss Hovet teacher, this week recieved letters from pupils in the same grades at Bemidji. With these letters came a box of specimens of evergreens found about that city. These specimens will form an interesting study for the children. Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.
Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

"Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned; fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law make the necessary provisions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business, and to require that the proceeds of such tax [illegible]

Potato Situation Grows Serious Here

Unless cars in which to ship are forthcoming within the next couple weeks, potato growers stand to lose a large amount here. Very few growers are equiped with enough storage facilities to handle more than their seed so it will be necessary to ship before freezing weather starts if they are to get anything at all for their crop. The I. C. Commission has ordered cars westward, but growers have but little faith in otaining relief from car shortage until too late to ship.

Over in Dakota the situation is even more bad. No cars can be obtained there either, and with cold weather coming on there will be thousands of bushels frozen.

Bishop Gaining Favor

According to reports from other parts of the Fourteenth Judicial district, the candidacy of Attorney J. M. Bishop of Thief River for the judgeship is gaining in tavor in all parts of the district. MURDER?

SYNOPSIS.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance. Natalie, Coolidge and West plan a visit of charity. Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie for a purpose. Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but leaves.

The Body of a Suicide.

As the car whirled West down the circling driveway, the only sign of life visible about the house was the motionless figure of Sexton on the steps. If either Miss Natalie, or Percival Coolidge, took interest enough in the proceedings to witness his departure, they chose to remain carefully concealed within. There was no pretense even at speeding the parting guest. He had simply been dismissed, turned out, decently enough, perhaps, considering his status, yet with a certain measure of contempt which rankled nevertheless.

The young man could not altogether reconcile this style of treatment with his preconceived conception of Miss Natalie Coolidge. He had been too deeply impressed by her to easily relinquish his previously formed opinion of her character. This latest action did not at all coincide with her former open friendliness. He had not gone to her as a servant, nor had she in any way treated him as such. What could account for so remarkable a change?

Perhaps it was the influence of Percival Coolidge. This explanation seemed probable. The man had in some way regained her confidence, and then, through trickery, had succeeded in poisoning her mind. From the very first Coolidge had disliked him instinctively, and made no effort to conceal his feelings; he resented the intimacy between him and Natalie, naturally enough, and would use every means possible to get the younger man completely out of the house. No doubt he looked upon him as dangerous. But why? There could only be one answer to this query. His own dishonesty; his secret knowledge of some trickery relative to the funds of the estate. He had convinced the girl of his honesty, but, more than ever, West believed the fellow a rascal.

These thoughts flitted through his mind, yet not consecutively, as the car left the grounds, and turned on to the main road, leading citywards. They were still skirting the Coolidge estate, although the house behind was concealed by shrubbery. Suddenly, just as they cleared the bridge, and began to mount the opposite grade, there came a sharp report, sounding so close at hand the chauffeur clamped on his brake, and glanced anxiously over the side of the car.

"Blow-out, wasn't it, sir?"

"No," said West shortly, staring himself out into the thicket of trees at their left. "It was a shot fired over there; a revolver I should say. Wait a second, Sanders, until I see what has happened."

It was largely curiosity which led him to leave the car. The sound of either a rifle or a shotgun in that lonely spot would have been instantly dismissed as natural enough, but a pistol was different. That was no place for such a weapon. It somehow had a grimly sinister sound.

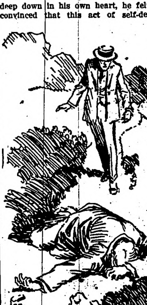
Determined to learn exactly what had happened, West pressed his passage forward through the vines of the fence, and emerged into the field beyond. A half dozen yards and he found the clover trampled, as though a man had passed that way. The trail led into a shallow depression, past a rather large boulder, near which the trampling of the grass was even more plainly revealed, as though the stranger had remained here for some time, had even seated himself, and then, abruptly ended a few yards away. Evidently the fellow had turned back at this point and retraced his steps.

West, now thoroughly puzzled and already convinced that some mystery hovered over the place, began to circle through the untrampled clover, but without any defined purpose. All at once, at the lower end of the gully he came, unexpectedly, upon another trail, this one well marked, apparently frequently used, which led straight across the field, and terminated at a small gate leading through the wire fence. Evidently here was a short cut to the road, well known to the servants on the estate, and possibly others. The discovery, however, told nothing further than this, and contenting himself with another glance about the unchanged field of rustling clover, West proceeded along the course of the path, intending to thus rejoin the automobile, waiting his return behind the trees.

Within a few steps of the gate, which was closed, he came to a sudden, horrified pause, staring ahead at a strange something huddled in the path. It was a shapeless thing, bearing no resemblance to a human being, until he advanced closer; then he recognized the form of a man, curled up as a dog sleeps, face down, hidden by his arm, and limbs drawn up, as if in a sudden spasm of agony. A hat was in the path beyond, where it had fallen, and a revolver lay glittering in the sunlight a few feet away. There was nothing familiar about either figure or clothing, yet unquestionably there lay the body of a suicide. The single shot they had heard, the tell-tale revolver close to the dead man's hand, were clear evidence of what had occurred.

The unexpectedness of this discovery, the peculiar position of the dead man, the loneliness of that deserted field in which he lay, shocked West and, for a moment left him strangely hesitant. Who was the man? What could have led up to the pitiful tragedy? Yet he advanced step by step nearer to the hideous object in the path. The man had been shot directly behind the right ear, killed instantly, no doubt, as the deadly bullet crashed through the brain. West lifted the arm which concealed the face, already shrinking from the suspicion which had began to assail him. Then he knew who the dead man was—Percival Coolidge.

West stood guard beside the body until servants came and bore it to the house, but made no effort to follow. Instead he gave his address to Sexton, and continued his journey into the city. After what had passed between them he had no desire to again encounter Miss Natalie; and under these circumstances, actually shrank from meeting her. Just what this man's death might mean to the girl he could not safely conjecture, yet deep down in his own heart, he felt convinced that this act of self-destruction would later prove to be a confession of guilt. Yet, be that as it may, he was already definitely ruled out of the matter. Not unless she personally sent for him could he ever venture to go to her again in any capacity. To his mind this decision was final.



Who Was the Man?

He was called for the inquest and gave his testimony. The hearing was brief, and the facts ascertained so clear there remained no doubt in the minds of any one but what this was a case of suicide. No particular attempt was made to probe into the cause, the personal affairs of the dead man being left for later investigation. West saw Natalie at the inquest for the very few moments she was upon the stand, but their eyes did not meet, nor did the girl give any evidence of recognition. Somehow the impression the young woman left upon him in those few moments was not a pleasant one. He could not clearly analyse this result, yet she was either acting a part to conceal her true emotions, or else she was really indifferent.

It was not until the following day that reason began to reassert itself, and he succeeded in marshaling the facts of the case more clearly in his own mind. He even began to doubt and question his own testimony, yet, before he reached any real conclusion, one of the club servants approached his chair.

"Captain West, there is a man out here asking to see you."

"A man! Where?"

"I had him wait in the anteroom, sir."

"Very well, Mapes."

It was Sexton, twirling his hat nervously in his hands, and still standing irresolutely in the middle of the floor. As sight of West he took a hasty step forward, eager to explain the cause of his presence.

"You'll pardon me, sir," he burst forth in apology, "But I must see you, sir."

"That's quite all right, Sexton. Let's step in here where we can talk quietly."

He pointed the way into a private card room, closing the door behind his visitor.

"Take the seat over there, Sexton. You came in to see me from Fairlawn?"

"No, sir, I didn't. The fact is, I'm not out there any longer."

"Not there! What do you mean?"

"I've been discharged, sir, with two other servants, since the funeral yesterday."

"Discharged! By whom? Not Miss Natalie, surely?"

"Yes, sir. She didn't give no reason; just said we were not wanted any longer. That's one reason why I came here to see you, sir."

"But I hardly know how I can be of help. I have no house of my own, and—well, the truth of the matter is, Sexton, just at present I am not on very good terms with the young lady myself."

"I know that, sir," more confidently, "and it isn't a position I am seeking, at all. I have quite a tidy bit of money laid away, and could get plenty of work. That's not the point, sir. Why should Miss Natalie tell me to go like that? It isn't a bit like her, sir; she ain't seemed natural at all lately, and I tell you there's something wrong goin' on out there. I'm sure o' that, sir."

"Sure of what?"

"Well, for one thing, it's my opinion that Percival Coolidge never killed himself, sir."

West sat up stiffly, as though struck a blow. These words startled him; drove his own mind into sudden activity.

"What makes you think that, Sexton?" he questioned slowly.

"Well, there's more than one thing," as though glad to have made the plunge, and anxious to justify himself. "But first of all that wasn't his revolver they found lying beside him. He always had one in his valise, an' it's there now, or was when I looked to see."

"You didn't tell that to the coroner."

"No, sir; he never put me on the stand. Besides I didn't know about it then. Did you notice where he was shot, sir?"

"Behind the right ear; the wound was plainly visible."

"Not very easy for a man to do himself, sir."

"No, but possible, nevertheless. The coroner was satisfied on that point."

"Yes, sir, but the coroner overlooked one thing, sir. He was sure it was a suicide case, and wanted to get done with it in a hurry. I and Simmons, sir, washed the body to get it ready for burial, an' I combed the hair down over the bullet wound. There wasn't no powder marks on the skin, an' not a hair was singed, sir. That's what makes me say he never killed himself."

West sat silent and motionless, looking straight at the man opposite, endeavoring to decide on a course of action. Some way in the depth of his earnestness, Sexton no longer appeared a servant. He was a man, voicing a man's heart. West realized the change instinctively; here was an intelligent loyal fellow, to be met frankly, and for the time being, at least, on the ground of equality. It would be useless to try to either mislead, or deceive.

"Sexton," he began finally, "this is a pretty serious charge you make, my man, but since I have been thinking things over, I confess some suspicious circumstances have arisen in my own mind. Of course I was not aware of these facts you have just related, but they fit in nicely with some observations of my own. The truth is," he confessed frankly, "I did not tell all I knew to the coroner's jury. I meant to do so, but the right questions were not asked me, and certain details slipped my memory until too late. Do you recall a boulder of rock out in that clover field?"

"Yes, sir. to the right of the path; it is mostly hidden now by the growth."

"Entirely concealed, a few yards away. Well, when I crawled through the fence after hearing that shot fired, I saw nothing, and heard nothing. I had advanced into the field several rods when I came upon the trail of some one leading directly north. It was not a path; merely evidence that a single person had passed that way. I followed, and came to this boulder. Here there was every proof visible that the previous party had remained for some time, seated and lying on the ground under protection of the stone. The occupancy was a recent one. Then evidently, whoever it was, had advanced to the right in the general direction of the gate through the fence, near where Coolidge's body was found. The marks of advance ended on a little rise, some ten yards from the boulder, where the fellow apparently turned about and retraced his steps."

"How far was that from the gate into the road, sir?" Sexton asked breathlessly.

"Within easy shooting distance for a revolver of that calibre, I should say. Any good marksman could have rung the bell."

"And you saw no one?"

"No; not a sign; the fact is I failed at the time to put two and two together. The thought of a possible murder never occurred to me."

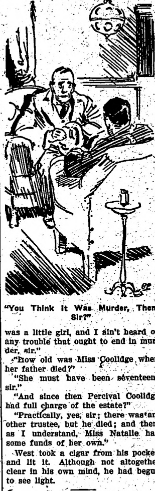
"You think it was murder then, sir?"

"Yes, I do," replied West gravely. "It has all the marks, but who committed the crime? What was the motive? It will never do for us to make such a charge, after the coroner's verdict, without positive proof."

"No, sir."

"And you know of nothing which might clear this up?"

"No, sir; I've been with the Coolidges sir, ever since Miss Natalie was a little girl, and I ain't heard of any trouble that ought to end in murder, sir."



"You Think It Was Murder, Then, Sir?"

"How old was Miss Coolidge when her father died?"

"She must have been seventeen, sir."

"And since then Percival Coolidge had full charge of the estate?"

"Practically, yes, sir; there was another trustee, but he died; and then, as I understand, Miss Natalie had some funds of her own."

West took a cigar from his pocket, and lit it. Although not altogether clear in his own mind, he had begun to see light.

CHAPTER VII

Against a Stone Wall.

Was this discovery anything to him? What difference could it make whether Percival Coolidge had died by his own hand, or been treacherously shot from ambush? How would it benefit Natalie Coolidge to have the truth revealed? And, if it would benefit her, why should he devote his time and labor to such an effort? She had cast him off; thrown him aside; her affairs had no further interest for him. Let her lawyer take care of them. These were West's first thoughts.

All true, yet this state of mind brought no satisfaction. He was interested; he could not escape his first impressions of the girl, or drive from him a desire to serve her, whether she wished it, or not. She might, indeed, be in equal danger from an assassin. He could not determine this until he learned the cause of the slaying of Percival. Then, on the other hand, suppose some one else's suspicions were also aroused. Who would they naturally look to as guilty of this horrible crime? There was but one answer—Natalie Coolidge. She was seemingly the only person to directly benefit by his death. All these considerations urged him on, overcame his doubt and indecision. Then he desired to learn the truth himself. His eyes rested on Sexton's anxious face.

"I've been thinking it over," he admitted quietly, "and I guess it is up to you and me to find out what this means."

"Yes, sir," hesitatingly. "You—you don't think it was Miss Natalie, sir?"

"No, I do not, Sexton. I have my own reasons for saying that. Yet naturally she is the one to be first suspected. Do you know anything?"

"Only that I am sure she was in the garden, sir, when the shot was fired. I saw her there just after you drove away."

"That is conclusive then, so far as her personal actions are concerned."

> "Rather a wild guess, but it will give us something to do. Are you game, Sexton?"

AN ENGAGEMENT PRESENT

"I've had an engagement present, cackle, cackle, cackle," said Miss Hen.

"Let Me See."

"Do let me see it," said Miss Fidgety Fashionable Hen.

"Cackle, cackle, let me see it," said Mrs. White Hen.

"And I want to see it, too," said Miss Brown Hen.

"So do I," said Red Top, the Rooster. "I most certainly want to see it. Cock-a-doodle-do, pray show it to me."

"I'd like to see it," said Mrs. Duck. "Quack, quack, please let me see it."

"And I want to have a view of it too," said Sir David Duck.

"What is all the fuss about?" asked Mr. Gander, as he walked by the other barnyard animals.

"Oh, nothing for us to bother about," said Mrs. Goose.

"I thought as much," said Mr. Gander.

"Miss Hen is engaged to Robbie Rooster and all the other barnyard animals want to see the present she has been given which she calls her engagement present," Mrs. Goose explained.

"I don't want to bother to see it," said Mr. Gander. "I am sure you don't want to bother either."

"No, I don't want to bother," said Mrs. Goose. "Such a thing would be a waste of our time. We can't bother with the other barnyard animals.

"We prefer our own society."

"Just as we should do," said Mr. Gander. "Just as we should do."

"Let me see the present," begged Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"I'd like to see it," said Sir William Goat, known as Billy by the barnyard friends.

"Oh, show it to us," said Mrs. White Hen.

"I can't," said Miss Hen. "Cackle, cackle, it is quite impossible. I can't.

"I would if I could, but it's impossible."

"How absurd," said Miss Fidgety Fashionable Hen.

"Ridiculous," said Mrs. White Hen.

"Utterly nonsensical," said Miss Brown Hen.

"Too queer for words," said Red Top, the Rooster.

"I cannot understand why she says such a thing, quack, quack," said Mrs. Duck.

"I don't understand, either," said Sir David Duck."

"Tell old Billy Goat," said Sir William Goat.

"You see," said Miss Hen, "I can't show you my engagement present. I told you that I had been given an engagement present, but I didn't say you could see it as that is so impossible."

"Why is it impossible? Was it such a horrid present that you are ashamed to show it to us?" asked Miss Brown Hen.

"Of course not," said Miss Hen proudly. "My dear Robbie Rooster would only give me the very best.

"But it is impossible to show it to you as I have eaten it! Ah, yes, it was a beautiful engagement present. No hen was ever given so fine and delicious a worm as Robbie picked out for me.

"He said he looked them all over and waited until he succeeded in getting the very best of all.

"But I have already eaten my engagement present. And I thoroughly enjoyed it."

"So that was it," said Miss Fidgety Fashionable Hen.

"Our Own Society."

"How stupid of us not to have understood."

"How stupid," said Mrs. White Hen.

"Very stupid," said Miss Brown Hen.

"You Hens should have thought of that," said Sir David Duck.

"You should have thought of that, Hens, it is true," said Mrs. Duck.

"Well, I might, too, have thought that it was something you had eaten," said Billy Goat. "For an engagement present that can be eaten is surely nicer than any other, is my goat opinion."

"And now they all know," said Miss Hen. "Ah, I kept them guessing while all the time I was feeling happy and contented for I had received my engagement present and had thoroughly enjoyed it!"

How It Looked.

"I've been down by the river," announced little Marjory, "and I saw a man sit there and drown three worms."

RYE AND CORN GO UP

Durum Up—Spring Wheat Stationary—Meats Decline.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended Oct. 20, 1922.

GRAIN: Grain prices advanced the first half of week and declined during the latter half but closed at net gains. Chicago December wheat up 2⅝c; Chicago December corn up 4c. Principal market factors were higher foreign markets, the transportation situation, strength in corn, and more bullish sentiment. The declines were due to profit taking. Wheat unsettled on the 20th. December liquidation forced break in corn early but strength in May future and steong cash market caused reaction. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.19; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.16; No. 2 mixed corn 74c; No. 2 yellow corn 74c; No. 3 white oats 43c. Average farm prices: No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa about 61c; No. 2 hard winter wheat in central Kansas $1.04. Closing future prices: Chicago December wheat $1.12½; Chicago December corn 67⅞c; Minneapolis December wheat $1.08⅝; Kansas City December wheat $1.06; Winnipeg December wheat 97⅞c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: All classes and grades of livestock on the Chicago market showed price improvement for the week. Hogs advanced 10 to 30c; beef steers 45 to 70c; butcher heifers 15 to 80c; butcher cows firm to 20c and feeder steers firm to 10c and veal calves 75c to $1 up for the week. Fat lambs advanced 50 to 75c, feeding lambs 25 to 50c and fat ewes 60c to $1. Yearlings showed a net advance of 75c per 100 pounds. On Oct. 20 Chicago hogs opened stedy to 10c lower, closed steady, while veal calf prices declined 25c. Oct. 20 Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $9.65; bulk of sales $8.25 to $9.60; medium and good beef steers $7.25 to $11.65; butcher cows and heifers $3.65 to $10.15; feeder steers $5.75 to $8.10; light and medium weight veal calves $8.50 to $11.75; fat lambs $13 to $14.60; feeding lambs $13 to $14.50; yearlings $9.25 to $12.75; fat ewes $4.50 to $7.35. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Oct. 13 were: Cattle and calves 183,063; hogs 10,015; sheep 192,316. In eastern wholesale fresh meat markets beef and mutton firm to $1 higher, compared with a week ago, veal firm to $2 higher; lamb $3 to $5 higher while pork loins were generally weak to slower, $1 lower. On Oct. 20 beef and mutton generally steady to firm in eastern wholesale fresh meat markets; veal steady to $1 higher; lamb steady at some markets and as much as $2 higher at others; pork loins weak and slightly lower at some markets. Firm to $1 higher at others. Oct. 20 prices good grade meats: Beef $15 to $18; veal $14 to $19; lamb $25 to $28; mutton $12 to $16; light pork loins $23 to $27; heavy loins $15 to $22.

DAIRY PRODUCTS: Butter markets firm and higher than week ago. Demand apparently lighter but scarcity of fancy goods has resulted in further advances on goods most in demand. All scores shared in this support. Closing prices 92 score butter: New York 46½; Chicago 45. Cheese markets advanced sharply during the week in line with Wisconsin cheese board prices established Monday and are now about 2c higher than a week ago. Wholesale markets have raised asking prices account replacement costs but buyers have been slow to take hold. Markets unsettled at close. Cheese prices on Wisconsin primary markets Oct. 18th: Twins 25¾; Daisies 26, Double Daisies 25½; Young Americas 24½; Longhorns 25¼; Square Prints 26.

Minneapolis Colsing Cash Prices.

BONAR LAW TO BE PREMIER

America's Attempt to Dry Up the Seas Meets With Various Kinds of Opposition—Doings of the American Legion Convention.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT HARDING, in a letter addressed to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, to be read at a Republican meeting, said: "Agricultural production is very nearly restored, taking the world as a whole; but agricultural prices are so low that it is apparent to all of us that the farmer is not being compensated." Asserting that the administration has done all in its power to restore the balance between prices and costs of production, he said the trend is "strongly toward better conditions for the farmer."

Do you and the farmers of your acquaintance agree in this with President Harding?

COALITION government in Great Britain has gone to smash. Lloyd George has resigned as prime minister and his entire cabinet is out. A. Bonar Law has been asked by the king to form a new conservative ministry. Lloyd George has promptly begun a fight to regain power as chief of a new party. The British are entering on the most exciting political contest they have had for many years. A call for a general election is expected shortly.

The downfall of the coalition ministry was brought about when the conservative—otherwise tory or unionist—members of parliament and of the cabinet, in caucus at the Carleton club, decided their party should go to the country as an independent party, and, if elected, choose a conservative premier. This action was taken against the protests of Austen Chamberlain, their leader, and in accordance with the advice of A. Bonar Law, hitherto a staunch supporter of Lloyd George. It was precipitated by an election in Wales which was won, surprisingly, by the conservative candidate.

At this writing it is not certain that Bonar Law will attempt to form a ministry, but he probably will do so, and it is taken for granted that all its members will be conservatives except Lord Grey, who will be offered the post of minister for foreign affairs. The life of this ministry undoubtedly will be short.

As is said above, Lloyd George has not quit the fight. He delivered a hot speech at Leeds Saturday and several others on his way there, and made it plain that he won't "take his punishment lying down." He has the nucleus of a new and strong party in such conservative leaders as Lord Balfour, Austen Chamberlain, Lord Birkenhead, Worthington Evans and others who have stood by him in this crisis. It will be a party of moderates and may be called the center or national party.

UNCLE SAM in the role of prohibition enforcer is not having things all his own way on the seas. Federal Judge Learned Hand in New York, after hearing arguments in the suit brought by foreign and American shipping companies to enjoin the United States government from enforcing the ruling of Attorney General Daugherty, reserved his decision and extended the temporary restraining order. The British government has rejected the proposal of Secretary Hughes for a treaty to extend the right of search of vessels up to twelve miles off shore, and has formally protested against the seizure by our dry navy of a Canadian schooner eight miles off the New Jersey coast. France, Holland, Italy, and perhaps other countries, are only awaiting the necessity of contesting the right of the United States to enforce a ruling that will mean either that their seamen will be deprived of the daily allotment of wine guaranteed them by their laws or that their vessels must refrain from entering American waters.

In addition to these embarrassments, the government is being told that the trade of our insular possessions, especially the Philippines and Porto Rico, will suffer greatly if foreign vessels carrying liquor are barred from entering their ports. Secretary of War Weeks is especially insistent on this point, and it is said to be likely the government will follow his suggestion and ask congress speedily to revise the Volstead act so that the ruling of the attorney general may be modified.

Mr. Hughes' note to Great Britain, suggesting extension of the right of search dealt especially with liquor-smuggling operations. In reply, Ambassador Geddes said his government was doing and would do all it could to prevent such smuggling, but that it has consistently opposed any extension of the limit of territorial waters and "do not feel that they can properly acquiesce, in order to meet a temporary emergency, in the abandonment of a principle to which they attach great importance."

THOUSANDS of former service men spent last week in New Orleans, taking part in the fourth annual convention of the American Legion, and they had as guests a number of much-decorated heroes from the allied nations and some distinguished American civilians. It was a lively gathering and woke up the old Crescent city. Moreover, it did and said and heard some things that are likely to have effect on governmental and congressional action. Naturally the bonus, or, as the legion members prefer to call it, the adjusted compensation, came in for much discussion. This was very one-sided, however, for the organization as a whole was decidedly in favor of the bonus, and a resolution, strongly worded, was adopted declaring that the men who fought the war were underpaid and that there should be an adjustment. Former Judge Landis, in a fiery speech, upheld this view and was wildly cheered.

Col. A. A. Sprague, chairman of the legion's rehabilitation commission, submitted a report severely criticizing the government's achievements in that line to date and excoriating individual congressmen and senators. "The story of hospital construction by the government up to date," the report declared, "judging by actual results, is a tragedy for the sick, a discredit to the government and an affront to the American Legion. There is not a redeeming feature in it—politics, promises, plans, failure to prepare anything but alibis in advance, red tape, excuses and contentions conspired to defeat the actual providing of needed beds."

President Harding's delay in the matter of naming co-operative committees on rehabilitation in various districts was the subject of comment.

Thursday the convention after an exciting debate adopted a resolution demanding the removal from office of General Sawyer, co-ordinator of the federal hospitalization board. The vote was 601 to 375.

On Wednesday the boys had their parade, and it was a big one. Some ten thousand of them were in line, and they had 25 military bands, 23 drum corps, lots of tanks and floats and flags and standards, while above them circled two squadrons of airplanes and many seaplanes.

General Pershing arrived in New Orleans on Thursday and was given a rousing welcome. It was said he was particularly pleased with the report of the military affairs committee, adopted by the convention, calling for the drafting of industry and labor in the event of war.

One of the distinguished guests of the convention was to have been Col. C. R. Forbes, director of the federal veterans' bureau. He went, with his staff, but departed almost at once, because, according to report, the supporters of one of the candidates for the position of national commander charged that he was sent there by President Harding to play politics. On the other hand, a Down-East post of the legion, composed of former marines, has dissolved because it believed the legion and another organization of veterans were being used for political purposes by their members.

SEVERAL recent victories by the Red army in eastern Siberia over the White Russians have caused a great deal of apprehension in that region. The Reds are advancing on Vladivostok with the evident intention of occupying it as soon as the Japanese evacuate the city. More serious is the threat of the Reds against the Chinese Eastern railway, toward which other columns of the soviet army are moving. Gen. Chang Tso Lin, the Manchurian military leader, is prepared to resist the Reds and, if necessary, will make an alliance with the White Russians. The Moscow government has demanded that China cease aiding the White forces by permitting them to concentrate in Chinese territory for attacks on Siberian soil.

MOSCOW also is taking a firm stand concerning the coming Near East peace conference. The soviet government says if it is not represented in that conference any results of it will be of no effect, and it especially protests against its exclusion if Rumania and Jugo-Slavia participate. Russia supports fully all the Turkish claims on frontiers and for sovereign rights on the coasts of the straits, opposes any control of the straits by the League of Nations or by mandate, and declares for absolute freedom of commerce in the straits.

Large numbers of the refugees from Thrace, chiefly Armenians, entered Bulgaria the early part of last week, and on Thursday the Bulgarian frontier was closed to them. Half a million of the fugitives are in Macedonia, lacking shelter, food and clothing. French troops in considerable numbers are arriving in Thrace to preserve order, and in some places, notably Adrianople, a big part of their task is to prevent the Greeks from burning the city and slaughtering the Moslems before they depart.

PREMIER FACTA of Italy apparently has successfully withstood the demands of the Fascisti that he and his cabinet resign. The ministry refused to yield and Facta made an unexpected showing of strength. Benito Mussolini, leader of the Fascisti, was so impressed with this that it was said he would instruct his followers, at their great gathering in Naples this week, to refrain from causing the government any more trouble. Gabriele D'Annunzio, the soldier-poet, has signed an agreement with Mussolini establishing common action between their forces.

PORTLAND, ORE., doesn't propose to be pestered by "wobblies." Learning that thousands of members of the Industrial Workers of the World were gathering there to participate in the waterfront strike, the city council appropriated funds for a lot of extra police and the mayor ordered immediate raids. Between two and three hundred men were arrested and held on charges of vagrancy. It was said the I. W. W. plans contemplated the swarming of 25,000 members of the organization to Portland and other Pacific coast points.

WORLD'S records went by the boards in the aviation races at Mount Clemens, Mich. Lieut. R. L. Maughan of the army won the Pulitzer trophy, and later set a new speed record of 248.5 miles an hour with the same plane. This was not considered official, because no official of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale was present, but later Gen. William Mitchell, assistant chief of the army air service, took the same machine and drove it at a speed of 224.05 miles an hour before official observers.

Our luck with dirigibles continues bad. Last week the big army balloon C-2, which had made the trip from coast to coast, was destroyed at San Antonio, Tex., on its return journey. While being taken from the hangar it was struck by a high wind and its gas bag was ripped. Explosion and fire resulted. Several members of the crew were injured, but all escaped death.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Peter A. Dahle and Emma Dahle his wife, mortgagors, to First State Bank of Plummer, mortgagee, dated February 20th, 1920, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pennington County, Minnesota, May 13th 1920, at 8:30 A. M. in Book 61 of Mortgages on page 128, with power of sale therein contained, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of Thirty dollars ($30.00) installment by said mortgage secured. And whereas the said mortgagee has elected and hereby does elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One hundred twenty dollars ($120.00) with interest thereon at 10% per annum since February 20, 1920, and $180.00 with interest thereon at 6% per annum since February 20th 1922, the last sum being interest paid by the mortgagee under the terms of said mortgage, upon a prior mortgage of $3000.00 on said land, being a total due to the date of Three hundred thirty five dollars seventy-two cents ($335.72), and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit: the Northwest quarter of Section Fourteen (NW¼ 14) in Township One hundred fifty-two (152) North of Range Forty-one (41) West, in Pennington County, State of Minnesota, with exception of two acres reserved for church purposes, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Pennington County, at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Thief River Falls, in said county and state, on the 9th day of November, 1922, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $335.72 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $25.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by

CLIFFORD L. HILTON

Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to

MIKE HOLM

Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

> "The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

> "The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

> "Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law make the necessary provisions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate, based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund, and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of the amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business; and to require that the proceeds of such taxes shall be distributed in the manner following, to-wit: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund, and ten per cent to the permanent university fund.

An Important Part Of Fall HOUSECLEANING

Clean your electric bulbs and fixtures thouroughly and carefully. This is an economic measure as well as a feature of good housekeeping. In order to get full value of the current you are useing, let the light gleam through clear, shinning glass.

TO CLEAN LAMP BULBS

Remove them from fixture. Wipe the glass part with a danp cloth and polish with dry cloth.

TO CLEAN FIXTURES

Remove glass shades and wash in warm, soapy water. It may be necessary to use a small brush. The inverted bowls of semi-inderect lights should be wiped with a hot, damp cloth and a little non-scratching cleaning powder.

Shirred silk shades can sometimes be cleaned by brushing well, first with a dry brush, then with a brush dipped in lukewarm suds, and drying at once with a soft towel. Delicate and expensive shades should be dry cleaned.

Polish brass and other metal parts, and wipe with a dry cloth the long, silk cords on floor and table lamps. Use a furniture polish on mahogany finished lamp bases.

NEW PREMIER OPPOSES WARS

Choice of Bonar Law to High Post Means Abstinance From Foreign Affairs.

CONSERVATIVES RULE

Adventures of Lloyd George Government Forced Climax, and People Demanded Change in Foreign Policy.

London—The succession of Andrew Bonar Law to the premiership means that the British empire will be led back firmly by a master hand to a course of traditional conservatism in international affairs, which means abstinence from adventure abroad, determination not to mingle in the affairs of other nations and a fixed policy of maintaining the historic traditions of the British empire.

It is an old truth that wars and international complications have been studiously avoided by the conservatives. Whenever they have been out of power the nation has become entangled abroad and, in the end, it has been the conservative element on whom has fallen the task of extrication.

The adventures of the Lloyd George government brought things to a climax and forced the conservative majority in the coalition to assert its principles. The crash was inevitable.

Bonar Law represents in the fullest sense the true, unalloyed policy of Britain's ancient conservatism. He is a careful, conscentious thinking man who never acts on impudse. If anything, he errs on the side of caution.

No Speculator.

He is imbued with the spirit of the old Scotch covenanter. He has no sympathy with international speculation. His premiership will be remarkable more for steady, unswerving determination first, to get the house in order before attempting to put on decorations.

So far as his attitude toward the United States is concerned, his understanding of and sympathy for the American democracy is deep and well founded. He, perhaps more than any other statesman, understands the American people, their hopes and their aspirations, and it is regarded as a magnificent augury for an even closer understanding between the two great democracies that Bonar Law should be the first minister of the British democracy.

NORTH DAKOTA MINE FIRED

Aberdeen, S. D.—The Haynes coal mine at Haynes, N. D., one of the biggest working mines in the Northwest, is afire, the result of alleged malicious mischief on the part of a workman, who is reported to have been apprehended and to have entered a plea of insanity due to shellshock.

The mine has not ceased operation, it was reported. The fire is in a deserted cavein in the mine, and the plans are to block the entrance to the mine proper with a concrete wall. North Dakota fire apparatus is to be on the ground to fight any fire that approaches the tipple.

INDICTMENTS ASKED IN CASE

New Brunswick, N. J.—Developments in the investigation of the murder of Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Reinhardt Mills center about the sitting of the Somerset county grand jury at Somerville when it is learned indictments against at least two persons, probably a man and a woman, will be asked by County Prosecutor Beekman.

Confident that he has built up a stronger case than is generally believed, Prosecutor Beekman has questioned several of the newer figures in the mystery. He disclosed nothing of the results, nor the identity of the two persons said to be eyewitnesses of the double slaying, upon whose testimony he is believed to rely greatly in obtaining the indictments.

HOOPER, JEWELL MAKE UP

Chicago—For the first time since he issued the call for the federated shopcrafts to walk out on July 1, B. M. Jewell, president of the organization, called on the United States railway labor board, holding a lengthy conference with Chairman Ben W. Hooper. President Jewell notified Chairman Hooper that he shopcrafts within a few days would present a petition to the board for reopening of its case against the New York Central involving establishment of the piecework system in shops at Elkhart, Ind.

Missing Teacher is Found.

Miss Schneider was previously reported to have sought refuge in a convent. "Gossips" in her home town were responsible for her leaving home, Miss Schneider said in messages to her parents, who have kept in touch with her.

FRANK S. LAND

Frank S. Land of Kansas City, who, back in 1919, conceived the idea that it would be a fine thing for the Masonic order to sponsor an organization of young men between the ages of seventeen and twenty-one. He wrote out a ritual and on April 1, 1919, organized the "Order of De Molay," with the belief that he had started a local organization. Now, three years later, there are 710 chapters of the order, with a membership of nearly 200,000 youths. Sons of Masons and their friends are eligible to membership.

FORBES QUITS SESSION

Convention Declares for Fight for Compensation.

New Orleans—Something of a surprise was thrown into convention circles when it became known that Col. C. R. Forbes, director of the United States Veterans' bureau, who came here upon the invitation of Hanford McNider, national commander of the American Legion, and who was scheduled to address the convention upon the work of his organization, had suddenly left New Orleans and returned to Washington.

Colonel Forbes took with him his entire staff.

He made no public statement as to the reasons for his departure, nor did he intimate whether the action was taken solely on his responsibility.

Kenesaw Mountain Landis was introduced by Commander MacNider as the man who, in his opinion, most nearly typifies the Rooseveltism tradition.

Having carefully moved from his vicinity all the fixture within reach of his emphatic arm, following a near mishap to one of the magnifiers, Mr. Landis tore into the convention with one of his characteristic speeches, which warned the hearts of the Legionnaires and brought them to their feet several times.

TURK CAPITOL FORBID THEM

British Navy Ordered to Stop All Vessels Carrying Kemalist Troops.

Constantinople—The Allied missions has reached an unanimous decision forbididng the Kemalist gendarmerie destined for Thrace to enter Constantinople.

The British navy has been ordered to stop all vessels bearing Turkish national police.

The order produced keen disappointment among the exuberant Turkish population which had made preparations on a vast scale to welcome the Kemalists.

Nothwithstanding the unanimous decision of the Allied commisioners to forbid the Kemalist gendarmerie destined for Thrace to enter Constantinople, a contingent of the gendarmerie numbering about 200 arrived unexpectedly at the Stamboul waterside from Ismid.

Their ship anchored near the railway station pending further action by the Allies.

U. S. DIRIGIBLE IS BURNED

C-2 Catches Fire Leaving Hangar at San Antonio, Texas.

San Antonio, Texx.—The army dirigible C-2, which recently completed a trans-continental flight and had reached San Antonia on its way back to Washington, was burned while being taken from its hanger at Brooks field preparatory to a flight over the city.

The dirigible caught in the framework of the hangar as it was being taken out. The bag split and the gas ignited. In the car of the dirigible at the time were members of the crew and several passengers. They escaped death, but first reports said several were burned seriously and one had an arm broken. The big dirigible was completely destroyed by the flames.

Soft Coal Fixed at $6.

Washington—By agreement with the operators of bituminous coal mines in the "smokeless" fields of West Virginia, it was announced, Federal Fuel Distributor Spens has fixed a maximum price of $6 per ton

Filipinos Launch Klan Terrorism.

Honolulu—The Filipinos in outlying districts of Oahu are being terrorized by a Filipino Ku Klux Klan formed six months ago, according to information given Claus Roberts, deputy city and county attorney.

FORMER PREMIER TO CAMPAIGN

Lloyd George Given Ovation at Banquet for Prince of Wales.

London—It is generally conceded here that Lloyd George is preparing to launch a drive for reelection. In a characterstic speech at Kettering he said, "I invite your support in a battle for national interests."

London—Andrew Bonar Law appears to be making rapid progress in forming a cabinet to replace the fallen coalition government. Marquis Curzon and the Earl of Derby, experienced cabinet ministers, have agreed to serve under him in any capacity.

Whatever fate might have in store, it was certain Mr. Lloyd George was entering a stage of his career which would call for all his skill and craft. It was equally certain that he would prove to be a difficult opponent in the coming battles as there are admittedly few men in the country who possess such mastery of the art of politics.

Mr. Lloyd George received one of the most remarkable ovations ever witnessed in the Guild hall when he rose to propose the health of the Prince of Wales. For several minutes it was impossible for Mr. Lloyd George to proceed and he was visibly affected.

The Unionists, the Liberals and the Laborites alike were conferring and working intensely in an attempt to solve the problem confronting them. Former Premier Asquith, who was in the country, rushed back to town to confer with his colleagues as to what line the Liberals should adopt, and other conferences were proceeding among the various party leaders.

Mr. Bonar Law cannot officially announce the formation of his ministry until he is elected head of the Unionist party to succeed Austen Chamberlain, but it is generally conceded that this election will be only a formality.

"My sword is in my hand," was the keynote of the farewell of Prime Minister Lloyd George to the great throng which gathered at St. Pancras station.

"I thank you from the bottom of my heart that you have come here, this great assemblage to cheer me on my pilgrimage," he said. "I am a free man. The burden is off my shoulders, but my sword is in my hand."

U. S. MARINES ON GUARD

Landed to Protect Consulate as Jap Troops Clash With Reds.

Vladivostok—American and British marines were landed here to guard the consulates of the two nations.

Tokio—Terror reigns in Vladivostok as the completion of Japanese evacuation approaches, according to dispatches received here.

The city is plunged in darkness by the failure of the lighting plant. White guards roamed the streets in the darkness, pillaging business houses and residences and holding up pedestrians.

In the outskirts of the town Japanese troops and Red forces of the advancing Far Eastern republic army are reported to have clashed.

The original plan of the Japanese was to turn over the administration of Vladivostok to the municipal government and to hold the Reds outside the neutral zone until evacuation was completed.

Then the municipal authorities refused to take possession of the war munitions left behind by the Japanese and the latter sought to open negotiations with the Reds to give the Republican troops control and thus avoid an interim of disorder.

The Chita commanders refused to negotiate and the clash between the Japanese and Reds is reported to have followed.

TEXAN IS TO HEAD LEGION

New Orleans Convention Greets New Commander With Acclaim.

New Orleans—A report of the Legion convention resolutions committee, urging congress to act on proposals before it for sale and operation of the Musle Shoals nitrate plant was tabled after Mayor George Leach of Minneapolis, speaking from the floor, charged that it was "Ford propaganda."

On motion of J. Fred Johnson of Alabama the Muscle Shoals resolution was taken from the table and debate reopened. Mr. Johnson pleaded for a hearing, declaring the resolution was not Ford propaganda, but a move to get congress to act on all measures before it.

Alvin M. Owsley of Texas, was elected national commander of the American Legion at the close of its fourth annual convention here. The vote was overwhelming.

Owsley was carried on the shoulders of Texas Legionnaires to a place on the platform beside the retiring commander, MacNider, who grasped his hand and then turned to the assembly. The Texas band broke loose.

War-Weary Turks Have Mutinied.

FORMAL DEMAND MADE ON CHINA

U. S. Demands Guard for Families in Honan Province.

Peking—America has made a direct telegraphic demand of General Wu Pei Gu and General Feng Juh Siang to send troops to the rescue of Rev. Anton Lundeen, formerly of Minnesota, who has been captured by brigands, and also for a guard for women and children in Augustana synod mission at Hsuchow, Honan province.

A telegram from Consul General Heintzleman revealed where Mr. Lundeen's home was. The Swedish-American branch of the Evangelictl Lutheran church, supported this and the Honan Fu mission. It comprises churches of Minnesota, North Dakota, northern Iowa and Nebraska.

Rev. Anton Lundeen is a graduate of Gustavus Adolphus college, St. Peter, and of the Augustana Theological seminary of Rock Island, Ill. and soon after went to China, accompanied by his wife.

Mrs. Lundeen is a former resident of Minnesota also. She is a daughter of Rev. A. S. Becklund, Bock, Minn.

OPPOSED, STRAITS CONTROL

Bolsheviki Demand Participation in Near East Peace Parley.

Moscow—Concerning Mudania, Russia has taken no stand whatever, because it was a military armistice concluded by nations participating in a war that included England. Russia took no military steps whatever, said Mr. Tchitcherin, and therefore it could not participate in the armistice.

Russia supports all the Turkish claims for the nationalist frontiers as contained in the nationalist pact which was drawn up in Constantinople before the last adjournment of the Turkish parliament and which has zeen confirmed by the Angora government.

Russia supports the Turks' sovereign rights on the coasts of the straits, which must not be diminished.

Russia opposes the maintenance of the present, or the creation of any new neutral or international zones.

Russia opposes any mandate or other control by a foreign country over the Dardanelles or other Turkish territory.

BUY POTATOES NOW—HUGHES

Action by Housewives Would Increase Market Facilities.

Minneapolis—A concerted movement by Minnesota housewives to "buy potatoes now" not only will give relief to farmers who face the prospect of losing their crop through lack of a market, but also offers the average family an opportunity to lower the cost of living, Hugh J. Hughes, director of markets for the state department of agriculture, said.

Because of overproduction, low prices, car shortage and the expense of digging, grading and hauling, hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes are lying undug in Minnesota and North Dakota, and are likely to be a total loss unless a buying movement stiumlates demand and starts the crop moving to market.

"Not only can the housewife relieve the terrible situation that confronts a great number of potato growers, but she can drive a good bargain by buying now," Mr. Hughes said. "Furthermore, let the housewife lay in an unusually large supply. When potatoes are from 75 to 90 cents a bushel they are dirt cheap.

350 PORTLAND I. W. W. JAILED

Report That 25,000 "Wobblies" Are Moving On City to Stage Strike.

Portland, Ore.—With the declaration that Portland was threatened by invasion of thousands of members of the industrial workers of the world, coming here to participate in the waterfront strike, Mayor George L. Baker, by orders to the police, caused the arrest of 350 men for investigation.

William Ford, said to be head of the Portland I. W. W. organization, was among those arrested. He was later released on $500 bail.

Reports in the hands of the officials went to show that I. W. W. papers in various parts of the country have adopted the slogan "on to Portland" and that plans calls for the immediate march of more than 25,000 members of the organization to Portland and other points on the Pacific.

An ordinance appropriating $10,0 for the immediate hire of 74 special officers to aid in combatting the I. W. W. was passed as an emergency act.

Naval Pact Lacks Time.

Rome—Upon inquiry at both the marine and ofreign ministeries here, the correspondent was told that the only reason the Washington treaty on naval limitations has not been ratified was because of the lack of time.

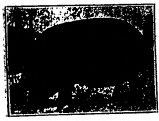
GRAND CHAMPION OF NORTH DAKOTA

"Challenger's Bess," Daughter of Big Challenger, Is Holder.

After winning the grand championship at the North Dakota state fair in 1921 and 1922 and also at the Crookston midwinter show in 1922, Challenger's Bess, a daughter of Big Challenger, was first in the aged sow class and was the grand champion Duroc Jersey at the Minnesota State Fair in September, 1922. She is now owned and was shown at the fair by the University of Minnesota. She is three years old and weighed 855 pounds while at the fair, being heavier than any other sow exhibited.



CHALLENGER'S BESS
Owned by the University of Minnesota

Challenger's Bess was bred by F. A. Green & Sons of Stephen, Minn., and was sold by them to the university last summer. A writer in the Duroc Digest of Minneapolis says that outside of the National Swine show the aged sows shown at the Minnesota fair were the best he had ever seen.

"I doubt if there are a half dozen sows of the Duroc breed anywhere that are better than Challenger's Bess," he writes. The university is to be congratulated on owning her. She is the kind that should be at the university station."

CHOLERA LOSSES NOT HEAVY

Contrary to forecasts made last spring by veterinarians over the country, losses from hog cholera in Minnesota in 1922 have not been very heavy. Scattered outbreaks on a small scale have been reported by county agents, but nothing like a general epidemic has been experienced.

Hog cholera generally breaks out and begins to spread during the late spring and early summer, which means that by fall it is causing many deaths. While there is yet time this year for the disease to gather headway, university veterinarians are hopeful that losses for the year will be light all along the line. It is not improbable, they say, that the settled dry weather of later months has had something to do with checking the normal spread of cholera in the state.

"Not much hog cholera serum, comparatively speaking, has been used in the state this year," says Dr. H. C. H. Kernkamp of the veterinary division at University Farm. "Orders filed with the university have been very light. Cholera developed to some extent in Houston county this year, although not a single case of the disease had been reported from that county to the university in the four years previous.

"The chief losses among swine herds this year have been largely among small pigs. The mortality among the litters was especially heavy early in the season. Large numbers of these deaths were probably caused by worms."

Barberry Campaign Closes.

When the barberry eradication campaign for 1922 is brought to a close the original survey or "once over" for the hunted bush will have been completed in 66 of the 86 counties in the state, according to L. W. Melander of University Farm, state leader of barberry eradication.

The season's drive this year was in southeast and east central counties of the state. Every property in the two sections was visited and the barberry will have been cleaned up in 24 counties this year

Approximately 20,000 barberry bushes on about 700 properties were found and destroyed this year. Fully one-half of these were wild or escaped plantings. The government and state men improved every opportunity to educate the people concerning the barberry. Exhibits of barberry bushes and demonstrations of the relation which the barberry bears to the spread of black stem rust in wheat were featured at most of the county fairs in Minnesota this season.

BOYS AND GIRLS FEEDING STOCK

Youthful Farmers Make a Big Success in Stock.

More than 2,200 club boys and girls in Minnesota are feeding young livestock, the pick of which will be entered in competitions at the annual Junior Livestock show to be held at South St. Paul November 15, 16, and 17. Aside from cash prizes, trophies, and receipts from auction sales of their fat animals, at least three juniors will win free trips to the National Livestock show in Chicago in December. The boys or girls exhibiting the best baby beef, market barrow, and fat lamb will win these trips.

Eight hundred juniors on the farms are grooming three classes of baby beef for the South St. Paul show. One class is for grade junior yearlings, another for calves, and a third for purebred steers. The last named was organized this year to take the place of the dairy calf class competition which was transferred to the state fair. What was lost by this transfer will be more than made up by the new steer contest.

Eleven hundred boys and girls have been fitting pigs for entry in the preliminary elimination contests in the various counties. Only market barrows are eligible for the South St. Paul show. Either grades or purebreds can be entered. Grade or purebred ewe and wether lambs are eligible for entry in the lamb show which will be larger this year than ever before.

Three hundred fifty boys and girls entered this contest early in the season and the champions in the preliminaries will have their animals at South St. Paul.

Dean W. C. Coffey of the university department of agriculture has been selected to judge the lambs. Professor E. F. Ferrin, in charge of the swine section at University Farm, will judge the hogs and H. W. Vaugh, formerly connected with the division of animal husbandry of the university, will judge the calves.

Business men of South St. Paul plan to raise $3,000 as extra money for prizes for and expenses of the boy and girl club exhibitors. This will be in addition to the regular sums set aside for the juniors by the Minnesota Livestock Breeders association and numerous other agencies co-operating in holding this annual junior classic. C. W. Glotfelter of Waterville is chairman of the finance committee and leading business men of South St. Paul are members.

POTATO SPRAYING PAYS.

That it pays to use the best methods and facilities obtainable in spraying potatoes against insects and diseases was demonstrated with great clearness this season on the farm of Cyrus Engberg, a potato grower of Chisago county. In the spring of 1922 Mr. Engberg purchased a high pressure sprayer and used it in applying a combination of paris green and bordeaux mixture to all his potatoes except eight rows which were sprayed with paris green only, using a common low pressure machine. In both cases the field was sprayed four times during the season.

When the crop was dug, it was found that the part of the field sprayed with paris green applied with a low pressure sprayer yielded 74 bushels an acre. The remainder of the field, sprayed with poison and bordeaux mixture applied with a high pressure sprayer, yielded 138 bushels an acre, or an increase of 64 bushels an acre.

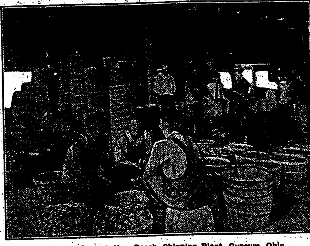
"The reason for this difference in yield is quite evident," says R. C. Rose of the agricultural extension service, University Farm. "The field sprayed with poison was protected from the common potato beetle only, while the field sprayed with poison and bordeaux mixture was protected from the common potato beetle and also leaf hoppers, flea beetles, and blight. The latter field remained green two weeks longer than the former, and it was during this period that the difference in yield was made."

Farmers and Homemakers Course.

Farm people of Minnesota should begin making plans to attend the ninth annual Farmers and Homemakers short course to be held at University Farm January 1 to 6, 1923.

Facultymen of the university department of agriculture will bend every energy to make this the most instructive and successful short course of the kind ever held by the university. Dr. A. V. Storm, director of short courses, is arranging for an address from Henry C. Wallace, [illegible]

American Farm Bureau



Interior of Co-operative Peach Shipping Plant, Gypsum, Ohio.

Fruit growers of Ohio, joined together in a state-wide organization, marketed apples and peaches co-operatively on an extensive scale this year. The organization, the Ohio Fruit Growers' Co-operative association, adopted the "Buckeye" brand as their sales standard. Both apples and peaches went to market under this brand.

In the Catawba Island district of northern Ohio a local marketing unit sent out more than 20,000 bushels of peaches. Shipments were made as far south as Alabama, and entered the markets of a large number of eastern cities. The fruit was packed and graded and the co-operative organizations stand back of their standards of quality. They are also receiving federal certification.

At the same time that peaches were moving from the northern district of the state, apples were being shipped by two or three locals in southern Ohio. Two large mechanical graders were used in this section, and the apples sold according to quality, with the producer getting the full returns minus the expenses of handling. They were handled in the same manner as the peaches and under the same brand name.

START PORK EATING SCHEME IN MISSOURI

Farm Bureau in Livingston County Inaugurates Plan to Encourage Consumption.

An interesting and effective method of increasing the consumption of meat locally is outlined by D. R. Forrester, county agent in Livingston county, Missouri.

"Livingston county tried out something last year which I believe should be commended to every county in the United States. The farm bureau, through the live stock shippers' association, established a retail meat market to deliver large pieces, such as hams, sides and shoulders of pork, to consumers at a low price. The farm bureau loaned a revolving fund of $200. They hired a farmer living north of town to kill hogs for $1 each, and make the delivery at the same price. If no hogs were killed and delivered there was no overhead expense. Seven cents per hundredweight was paid to the manager of the Chillicothe Shipping association to locate and keep these hogs supplied to the butcher. This pork was furnished to the consumers at from one-half to two-thirds of the price it was being sold at local butcher shops in the same-sized pieces. However, after this market was established the local butchers came down to the same price. An advertisement giving the price of meats and phone number was put in three local papers and run for the four winter months. Killing and delivering was three times per week.

"The Farm Bureau Live Stock Shipping association meat market handled 25,000 pounds of dressed pork. This did not reduce the sales of the local butcher shops. In fact, the butcher shops' records show that they sold more meats during December and January than they had during those months in any previous year. The point here is that the main way to stimulate the consumption of an article is to reduce the cost to the consumers. The farmers were paid from 40 to 60 cents per hundredweight more for delivering their hogs to the association than they would receive by shipping out on the market.

"It was not our intention to make money in our operations here. On the other hand there was practically no chance for loss. One of the local butchers was quite panicky when we started this market, and made the threat that he would break the concern. We sent him word it was broke to start with, and there was no chance for loss in the operation. After the first month of operation the local butcher got it out of his head that his business was going to be hurt, and some of the more fair-minded men could see that the fact that meat was being advertised all the time really increased their sales. We asked the county agents of two adjoining counties which had towns about the size of Chillicothe, to make an investigation to ascertain whether their butchers sold more meat than in previous years. From all information obtainable both the county agents reported less sales in the winter of 1921 and 1922 than in previous years. Our butchers increased their sales.

Tobacco Growers to Unite.

The uniting of the tobacco growing members of West Virginia farm bureau with the Burley Tobacco Growers' association is considered the most important marketing project ever carried out in the mountain state. Already several of the important tobacco growing counties have turned in large numbers of members, with strong prospects that more than 75 per cent of the 8,000,000 pounds of tobacco produced yearly in West Virginia will be handled through the association of tobacco growers. The association and the state farm bureau federation have worked together soliciting members in the various counties.

DWINDLING FORESTS ARE FORCING MUCH DECREASED USE OF LUMBER

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If the food consumed by each man, woman, and child were reduced by one-third, the pinch of hunger would soon be felt and the cry of famine undoubtedly raised.

Yet substitute the word "wood" for "food" and you have exactly what has happened in the use of lumber. The per capita consumption has dropped from 500 board feet in 1900 to 316 board feet in 1920, says the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture.

This decreasing use of a fundamental commodity, according to forest experts, is not a result of decreasing needs but a result of forest exhaustion. It is not being accomplished without economic hardship or without curtailment of industrial expansion. It is not temporary condition that will automatically adjust itself, for even at this reduced rate of consumption we are still cutting our forests more than four times as fast as they grow. The situation proclaims, according to the forest service, that if we are to remain a nation of timber users, we must become a nation of timber growers.

Reached Highest Point in 1906.

In 1906, when American lumber production reached its highest point, the average per capita consumption of lumber in the United States was approximately 500 board feet. Since that time the per capita consumption has rapidly and consistently decreased until in 1920 the average citizen used approximately 316 board feet. This is a reduction of 37 per cent in 13 years, or nearly 3 per cent a year. Should this decrease continue at its present rate, by 1940 the downward sweep of consumption would approach zero. This, of course, will not happen. The average consumption will ultimately reach a fairly stable level, which will depend mainly upon the extent to which our devastated forests are made again productive.

The consumption of lumber is not evenly distributed. Previous studies indicated that the states of the Pacific Northwest, now the last great stronghold of big lumbering operations, had a much higher per capita consumption than those of other regions, but the present figures are the first to give information for all states upon the same basis. Naturally the greatest per capita consumption occurs where wood is plentiful and the population is relatively small. In Washington and Oregon the consumption appears to be between 900 and 1,000 board feet annually per person.

Next come California, Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, where the rate of consumption is from 500 to 800 feet per person annually. In these states timber is relatively plentiful as compared with the density of the population, and a very considerable expansion has been taking place in the development of farms and other natural resources.

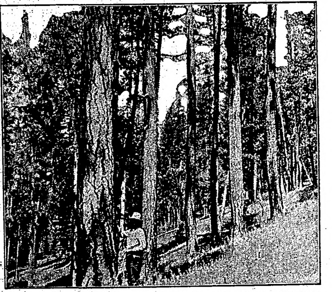
The group next lower in per capita consumption includes the Lake states, and sweeps southwesterly across the prairie states through Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona. In this group the annual consumption is between 300 and 500 feet, board measure.

Use Less Than 300 Feet.

Practically all the remaining states fall into a class in which the annual consumption is 200 to 300 feet. This group extends in a broad belt from Texas along the southern and eastern Atlantic coast to Cape Cod, Mass. It also includes North Dakota, Iowa, Utah, and Nevada.

The lowest consumption of all is in Rhode Island, the District of Columbia, South Carolina, and Georgia, in which the average consumption is rated between 100 and 200 feet per year. In the District of Columbia there is an extreme situation in density of population. No lumber is produced, there is little farming or manufacturing, and the entire population consists of urban dwellers in the city of Washington who live mainly in houses of brick and stone and require relatively little lumber. All the lumber used in the District of Columbia is imported from other states, just as it is in some of the non-timbered prairie states.

In general, the older and more densely settled states show the lowest average consumption. The states characterized by heavy agricultural operations come next, and the greatest use per individual is indicated in those states where there is still considerable timber and where the extension of home building is proceeding at a rapid rate, using the abundant material provided by the forests. The states are going through an evolutionary process, building first of lumber and later of more costly materials as the forests recede before fire and axe.



The Exhaustion of Our Timber Supply Is Coming About Because We Have Failed to Use Our Timber-Growing Land.

Attention to Garden.

The garden should be cleaned of all trash, manured and plowed if possible this fall. All rubbish from it should be burned.

MATERIAL FOR ROAD MAKING

First Shipment of Surplus Army Equipment Used in Germany Arrives at Brooklyn.

The first shipment of surplus war material used by the American army of occupation in Germany and now to be distributed among the states for use in road construction arrived at Brooklyn, N. Y., July 1. The equipment consisting of 30 trucks, 7 tractors, 4 concrete mixers, and 8 road rollers, will be distributed by the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture in the same way as was several million dollars' worth of material from France and the arsenals and camps in this country. Additional material for road making to be shipped from Germany will consist of several hundred trucks, a number of tractors, and about 2,000,000 pounds of spare parts for trucks.

PUREBRED MAKES BEST GAIN

Puts on Weight Faster on Same Feed Than Either Grade or Scrub—Brings Higher Price.

The grade hog is more profitable for the farmer than the scrub or razorback and the purebred is more profitable than the grade. The purebred gains weight faster on the same feed than either the grade or the scrub and finishes so much better for market that it invariably commands a much better price.

Parsnips of High Quality.

Parsnips of the highest quality are those which have been frozen. They can be left in the ground until all other crops are harvested. Then they should be dug out and stored in an out-door pit or placed in sand in the cellar.

The rule for figuring the value of skim milk is to count one-half the price of a bushel of corn as the value of 100 pounds of milk.

ST. HILAIRE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

A FOX AND GOOSE CHASE

The Freshman enjoyed a Fox and Goose chase after school last Friday. One division of the class, called geese started out first, scattering paper in their tracks as they went. When the Geese were out of sight, the rest of the class pursued the geese. The scattered paper furnished the fox with a trail through pastures, woods and barnyards. Soon after five o'clock, the fox reached the place where the geese had prepared a fire for a wiener roast. After the wiener roast, the fox and geese wended their way toward home, all uniting in the opinion that the first freshmen picnic was a success.

A NEW PROJECT

Miss Moen has introduced the project method into the English class for the next six weeks. The class is divided into two groups. The Irving group will write a project entitle Washington Irving; The Hawthorne group will write a project entitled Nathanial Hawthorne. These books will be put on exhibition at the exhibit which will be held shortly before the Christmas holidays. A simular plan has been introduced into the English 1 class where the two groups will write projects entitled Silas Marner.

Spelling tests have been conducted in the various English classes by the instructor, Miss Moen. By these tests the studens will get an idea as to their readiness in spelling. It is surprising to learn that certain familiar words as:—all right, immediately, and buried are mispelled most frequently.

Arthur Peterson, formerly of the Plummer High school, has been enrolled in the Sophomore class of the local High school.

Hazel and Florence Dann, Mabel Johnson, Edna Anderson, Peter Larson, Esther and Alice Grandbois spent last week-end at their homes.

Euretta Leaver was absent last week because of her mother's illness.

Vivienne Novak, '22, visited school last Friday.

To the Voters of the 65th District

Being under the impression that a short statement regarding the senatorial campaign by me at this time may be due the voters, I am submitting this through the columnes of the local newspapers, hoping that the same will be received by the voters in the same spirit as it is written.

I have tried my very best to bring Mr. Hanson's candidacy before the voters in such a manner that there would be no reason in any way to bring personalities into the campaign. I defy anybody to prove that there ever has been a word of personal criticism except as to the opposition's record in the state senate, ever uttered by me or Mr. Hansen. We are sorry to state that this cannot be said regarding Mr. Hansen's opponents.

There has been considerable mudslinging, even Mr. Hansen's friends being subjected to accusations and villifications for which there absolutely was no foundation. We are not going into details about those things as we consider it to ridiculous to even mention, but we want to go on record right here that we know every statement made by the opposition regarding the personal character and Mr. Hansen's method of conducting the campaign to be absolutely false and deliberate, outright lies. I have known Mr. Hansen for the past 27 years. Have also been a resident of this community myself for about 40 years and I know the district and the conditions of the same as well as anybody. My reason for favoring Mr. Hansen for state senator is because in my opinion he can accomplish more for the benefit of the agricultural interests of the district than any other man that could be pursuaded to run for this office. The fact that he is engaged in the banking business is no crime and there is no question in my mind that a banker at the present time will work harder than anybody else to bring about conditions favorable to the farmer. Bankers in this section and in every agricultural section of the state are dependent on the prosperity of the man engaged in agriculture. Mr. Hansen has influence and if he is elected he will represent the people of the 65th District, not a certain clique or political organization. His hands are not tied and he is responsible only to the people at home. This is my opinion in the matter and we know it is to be a positive fact that the same opinion is held by a large number of men and women throughout the District. Many of these people are devoting their time and going out of their way to bring Mr. Hansen's candidacy before the public, and they would not do this unless they were sincere in their opinion that he is the logical man for the office.

I am submitting this statement to the kind consideration of the voters. Although unfortunately I am no writer but I hope I have made my stand in the matter clear.

Thanking you, I remain, Yours for the best interest of the 65th District,

To the People of the 65th Legislative District:

THE ELECTION is now comparatively only a few days off, and I find that it will be impossible for me to call personally on as many people as I would like to do. I am asking your kind consideration and good will in regard to my candidacy for state senator from the 65th Legislative District. I stand squarely on a platform which favors any legislation which is of benefit to the agricultural interests of the district. I favor progressive legislation; economy in the expenditure of public moneys, with a view of lessening the burden of taxation; good roads from farm to market; a lower interest rate; state loans to farmers at cost; guaranty of bank deposits; adequate compensation laws; and justice to all the people of the district. I am opposed to a state constabulary.

Thanking you, I remain
Yours respectfully,

Mrs. Thora Anderson Answers Last Summons

Mrs. Thora Anderson, a pioneer resident of this section, passed away after a short illness at her home northwest of here, Monday. Mrs. Anderson, who was 88 years, 4 months and 30 days of age at time of death, was born in Norway, and came to this country in 1881. She and her husband, who died here twenty years ago, first made their home at St. Thomas, N. D., before moving to the farm here. After death of Mr. Anderson she made her home with her son, Ole Anderson. Mrs. Anderson is survived by three sons and four daughters who are: Andrew, of St. Thomas, Anton, of Wylie, and Ole, of St. Hilaire, Mrs. Sam Thompson, Jewel, Iowa, Mrs. Henry Swanson, Watford City, N. D., Mrs. Alex Johnston Crookston, and Mrs. Ole Johnson of Holt. "Grandma" Anderson, as she was commonly known, was blessed with a rare and beautiful nature. Adversity could not cloud her sunny disposition, and she was always ready to comfort and give aid to others in their time of need. In spite of her advanced age, she was active, and nothing pleased her more than to be able to attend to her duties about the farm home. After the death of her son Ole's wife a number of years ago, when he was left with seven little children to rear, it was "Grandma" who stepped in to take the place of mother which task was hers until they all grew to womanhood and manhood, and well she succeeded. She entered upon her last, long rest secure in the knowledge that her duty on earth was well done, and that she richly deserved the reward that is certain to be hers.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud from the Norwegian Lutheran church here yesterday afternoon, and interment was made in the family burial plot in the Swedish cemetery east of town.

Sheriff W. J. LaBree was down Monday from Thief River attending to business matters in this locality.

Election Draws Near

Next Tuesday the voters will have the opportunity to express their wishes as to choice of men and women who will guide in state, district and county affairs for the next two, and in some cases four years.

In election of state officials there is indication that the republican ticket will sweep the field. In district and county there will be some changes, but not many.

To express preference for any candidate for county office at this time by this or other newspaper, would be unfair in that practically all candidates have spent liberally with the newspapers and are therefore etitled to the same consideration. Voting for the person whom the voter thinks will serve the public best is the safest and best course.

TRADE BOARD HITS GRAIN LAW

Injunction Asked to Test Constitutionality of New Grain Futures Act.

EFFECTIVE NOV. FIRST

Board Claims Trade Is State and Not Interstate—Suit Was Anticipated by U. S.—Ready for Court Action.

Chicago—The Chicago Board of Trade made its first move to test the constitutionality of the grain futures act when it filed in federal district court here a petition for injunction restraining the government from enforcing the provisions of the act.

The law, enacted to take the place of the former Capper-Tincher act, which was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court, was passed to become effective November 1.

Hold Trade Wholly State.

The bill of complaint, filed by Henry S. Robbins, counsel for the board, charges that the law seeks to regulate as interstate commerce trade that is wholly state; that it interferes with state rights to govern exchanges, and that it seeks to deprive board members of their property by admitting representatives of co-operative bodies and permitting them to rebate commissions in violation of rules observed by other members.

Further charges of unconstitutionality are made on the ground that the law makes violations of its provisions a crime—"and constitutes the secretary of agriculture, the secretary of commerce, and the attorney general, a commission with power to deprive offenders of their rights to thereafter pursue a lawful avocation; whereas, such criminal laws are, under the constitution, enforceable only in courts," with a jury trial.

Other Parts Held Unsound.

Other sections granting wide powers of control to the secretary of agriculture, who is given authority to designate what exchanges shall or shall not be contract markets, are attacked as unsound.

Fear of what might result from the drastic provisions of the law, the complaint says, may bring on "a serious disturbance of the grain markets of the country."

"Many owners of grain, it states, "will be deprived of the privilege of insuring themselves against price fluctuations through 'hedging' contracts, and irreparable loss to members and others would result.

Preparations have been under way for some time to combat any such action by the grain exchanges and the government is prepared to go forward immediately with its defense of the law. The federal district attorney at Chicago, with representatives of the solicitor of the department of agriculture, will conduct the government's defense.

STATE MILL IN OPERATION

Grand Forks, N. D.—When Governor R. A. Nestos pressed the button which started the machinery at the state mill and elevator, over a mile away, on the outskirts of Grand Forks, he put in motion one of the three flour grinding units at the state mill. There are two other units which are not yet completely assembled, although most of the machinery for these other units is installed.

Each of the three units is capable of grinding 1,000 barrels of flour a day, or 3,000 barrels a day all told. Two of these units are made for grinding North Dakota's hard spring wheat into first patent flour. The third unit is exclusively for grinding durum wheat into seminola flour, out of which is manufactured macaroni, spaghetti, and other seminola products.

Each of these units is a distinct and separate mill in itself, so far as operation is concerned, although all are housed under the same roof. Each has its own big electric generator, and its own separate electric system. All machinery is electrically driven. The mill has its own power plant, and is also connected with the city power plant of Grand Forks, so that in case of breakdown in the mill power plant, power can be secured from the Grand Forks plant.

The plant is planned for efficient operation, therefore, at full capacity of 3,000 barrels a day, at 2,000 barrels a day, or at 1,000 barrels a day. It can grind 2,000 barrels a day of hard spring wheat and 1,000 barrels a day of durum.

Family Poisoned by Cake.

Philadelphia—Mystery continues to baffle authorities in the case of a poisoned cake which killed W. W. Sterret, expert accountant of Devon, and left his wife battling for life in the Bryn Mawr hospital. The cake had ben sent to Mrs. Sterrett through the mails. Physicians at the hospital are still unable to say what the poison was. An autopsy was performed on Mr. Sterrett's body but no announcement has yet been made. The cake was mailed from Philadelphia.

FOREIGN MONEY IS LOW

Heavy Purchases of U. S. Dollars to Establish Credit.

New York—Further depreciation of French and Italian exchanges has taken place, both francs and lire being quoted at new low records.

French francs sold at 6.83 cents each as compared with a high of 7.02½, previous day, and Italian lire were quoted at 3.84½ cents, as compared with a high of 4.01½c.

The par for both exchanges is 19.3 cents.

Heavy purchases of American dollars with continental funds, presumably to establish credits for purchases of grains, cottons and other raw materials, are responsible in part for the further slump.

British and Belgian rates were virtually unchanged, demand sterling being quoted around 4.44 and Belgian francs at 6.36 cents each.

The franc was weaker following the reports of the big deficit in the French budget. The rate opened 1 franc 23¼ centimes lower at 64 francs 27½ centimes to the pound sterling. Brussels exchange weakened in sympathy, being quoted at 69 francs 42½ centimes, against 68 francs 2 centimes, previous day,

LOWRY HILL CHURCH BURNS

Hard Fight Saves Wall of Congregational Landmark.

Minneapolis — Fire wrecked the Lowry Hill Congregational church, Dupont and Franklin avenues S., and damaged adjoining residences, causing a loss estimated at $20,000.

As the flames broke out through the roof, the spectacular blaze attracted hundreds of spectators. Firemen made a remarkable fight to save the church, one of the city's landmarks. Quick work confined the flames to rear part of the building and prevented its total loss.

Robert Ferris, 2114 Fremont avenue S., a trustee, said that the loss on the interior of the church from fire and water would reach 100 per cent.

"It will have to be completely rebuilt and redecorated to be put in a serviceable condition," he said.

Mexican Consulate Closed as Protest.

New York—The Mexican consulate general here was closed upon receipt of an order from the Mexican charge d'affaires at Washington, quoting instructions from the home government, as a protest against a ruling by New York courts against Mexico in a suit brought by the Oliver American Trading company.

Rafael E. Muzquiz, the consul general, announcing the closing, said it was ordered as a protest against the action of the New York Supreme court which recently allowed a writ of attachment against Mexican funds on deposit here in connection with an action for $1,250,000 damages against the Mexican government by the Oliver company.

U. S. Wanted in Arms Parley.

Paris—France, Italy and Great Britain have agreed to invite the United States to participate officially in the near east peace conference at Lausanne, Switzerland, Nov. 13.

The suggestion that the United States be invited came from Lord Curzon, the British secretary for foreign affairs.

Eleven invitations will be issued in all—to the United States, Turkey, Greece, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania for the peace conference, and to the soviet Russian and Bulgarian governments to take part in the discussion of the question of the Dardanelles.

Greek Prince Imprisoned.

Athens—The newspapers announce that Prince Andrew, brother of former King Constantine, was arrested at Corfu, on the charge that he contributed to the disaster suffered by the Greek army in Asia Minor.

He will be brought to Athens on a destroyer and interned in the palace. General Stratigos' arrest followed the publication of the revolution committee's decree establishing a tribunal to try political and military prisoners in connection with the defeat of the Greek forces in Asia Minor.

LAUNCH JOINT BANDIT WAR

Tommy O'Connor Believed Head of Bank Robber Gang Masking as Rum Runner.

Winnipeg—Canada's redcoated royal mounted police and the United States secret service have joined forces to wage war on the most daring criminal band in northwest history, which is terrorizing Canadian provinces with murder, holdup and bank robbery.

The Ottawa government, acting on a plea from Winnipeg, has appealed to the United States department of justice for help to smash the border raiders, and the department has ordered its agents to co-operate with the dominion forces, a dispatch from the Washington bureau reported.

"Terrible Tommy" O'Connor, Chicago murderer who broke jail to escape the hangman's noose, is reported to be the leader of the gang, which has become so bold that it opeartes as a rum runing band to disguise its real identity as a gang of robbers.

M. A. Hildreth, United States district attorney for North Dakota, at Fargo, asked for a federal grand jury to investigate a "hue and cry" being raised about Minot as a rendezvous of the bandit gang. Minot officials said the charge was a "dream" and added that Canadian authorities were trying to "shift the blame to cover up inefficiencies in Dominion police circles."

Murders, bank robberies and holdups remarkable for their coldbloodedness and daring have been charged to the outlaws.

FASCISTI WIN ITALY CONTROL

King Yields to Supernationalists and Rejects Siege Edict.

Rome—The Italian government has yielded to the fascisti and thereby averted a civil war.

Benito Mussolini, leader of the fascisti, was hurrying to Rome for a conference with King Victor Emmanuel. The king summoned the fascisti leader.

Latest information is to the effect that a cabinet headde by Salandra, who is a friend and choice of the Fascisti, will be formed at once. All danger is now past, as it developed from official sources that fascisti demonstrations and concentrations at these and other points had led to alarmist rumors of revolution. So far as can be learned the followers of Mussolini have no desire to revolt, now that the government has been overthrown and their chief is to participate in forming a new one.

The only revolution that could occur, would be against the king, and the Fascisti, to the last man, are loyalists.

AMERICAN ARMS PACT SEEN

United States Invites Five to Send Delegates to Washington.

Washington—The call just issued through the Department of State by the American Government for a limitation of armament conference between the five central American states, to meet in Washington on Dec 4, grew out of the meeting of the presidents of Nicaragua, Honduras, and San Salvador, which took place, Aug. 20, on board the U. S. S. Tacoma, in Fonesca Bay, looking to the establishment of more peaceful relations and the adoption of measures for putting down border revolutionary activities.

The American Government placed the Tacoma at the disposal of the three Presidents upon the request of the Government of Nicaragua, and the result of the meeting was the signing of an agreement acknowledging the general treaty of peace and friendship signed at Washington by the five Central American States as being in force between them, and stipulating that the Governments of Guatemala and Costa Rica would be invited to adhere.

RUMANIA TO FUND DEBT

To Turn Into Long-Term Obligations Total of $41,000,000.

Washington — Announcement is made by the Rumanian Legation here that the Rumanian Government has appointed a commission to come to the United States and negotiate terms of funding into a long-term obligation the Rumanian war debt to this country, aggregating about $41,000,000, including interest. It also is said that the Rumanian Government has arranged with international bankers for conversion of $175,000,000 of its short-term Treasury notes. In a formal statement, the legation declared:

Concerning the Rumanian debts to the Government of the United States, we are informed that the Rumanian Government has designated two of its leading financial experts, Mr. Eftimie Antonesco and Mr. Antoniade, to conduct the necessary negotiations with the Government of the United States.

Greeks Sack, Fire Turk Town.

Sofia—Katrankeuy, a Turkish village in Thrace, has been sacked and burned by Greek troops. The town lies within the zone of British protection. Greek troops were evacuating it, in accordance with the armistice agreement signed at Mudania. Two Greek soldiers were found shot. The rest of the Greeks surrounded the village, setting it on fire. They then massacred Turkish men, women and children, few of the population escaping. They are reported as continuing [illegible]

SAFETY FIRST SAYS BONAR LAW

King Dissolves Parliament—Set Nov. 15 as Balloting Date.

Sandringham, England—King George has signed a proclamation here dissolving parliament.

The general election, which will be the showdown between Premier Bonar Law and Lloyd George, was set for Nov. 15.

Bonar Law's friends, to use the diction of the American campaigner, point with pride to his qualities as a blessed relief from the dizzy crisis through which David Lloyd George had been accused at frequent intervals of taking a restless nation longing for repose.

Prime Minister Bonar Law arrived at Glasgow to open his campaign in the geenral election with speeches to his own constituency. He is the member of parliament for the central division of Glasgow.

He said: "My strong belief is that this nation needs, above everything else, rest and tranquility, and my policy will be a negative one in this sense."

Bonar Law, as leader of the unionist party, declared one of the tasks of that party if it is returned to power, will be to make good the Anglo-Irish treaty both in letter and spirit.

It will be the government's earnest aim, if returned, to give wholehearted and practical support to the League of Nations, to fulfill the obligations Great Britain has undertaken abroad and to maintain friendship and good understanding with the United States.

ANGORA AND MOSCOW "COLD"

Failure of Kemal in Soviet Interests Brings Russian Protests.

Constantinople—Relations between Angora and Moscow are becoming strained owing to the failure of Mustapha Kemal to insist vigorously on the bolsheviki's participation in the near east conference. Although the rumor that the soviet ambassador at Angora demanded his passports for his return to Moscow is not true and Russian troops concentrated in the Caucasus are not advancing toward Trebizond, it is not denied that the reds fear the Turks may sell them out to the Allies.

Leon Trotzky, the red war minister, is enroute to Tiflis. The reds already have protested at the Turks' feebleness in championing the soviet interests.

The red troops massing in the Caucasus reminds the nationalists of their debt to the reds for aid against the Greeks.

The Kemalists are confident that with the aid of France and Italy in the forthcoming conference, the nationalist pact will be fulfilled. This is reflected in the demobilization of 40,000 men.

MURDER LAID TO MRS. HALL

And Brother in Double Slaying Mystery.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, widow of the slain rector of the Protestant Episcopal church of St. John, the Evangelist, and her brother, Henry Stevens, are the man and woman named in the sworn statement of Mrs. Jane Gibson, self-styled eye witness of the double slaying of the Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Reinhardt Mills on the night of September 14, last.

This announcement was not made by the authorities, but became known through the issuance of a statement by Mrs. Hall's attorney, Timothy N. Pfeiffer, denying the allegations in Mrs. Gibson's account, and declaring that neither the rector's widow nor her brother were on the Phillips' farm on the night of the double slaying.

MISSING GIRL IS BACK AGAIN

Wilma Schlecker, Mankato, Found in Iowa on Description from WLAG.

Minneapolis—Radio, newest arm of the law, brought Wilma Schlecker, 15 year old school girl, back to her home in Mankato.

She disappeared a week ago, and a search by police throughout Minnesota had failed to reveal any trace of her.

Then Mrs. Adelaide Sigler, policewoman of the Mankato police force, wrote to WLAG, the Minneapolis broadcasting station, asking that the station broadcast information concerning the girl's disappearance and her description. The station complied, and a radio hunt over the middle west began.

At Bancroft, Iowa, a fan who was listening in jotted down the information and gave it to the Bancroft police. An hour later a girl answering the description was seen on the streets, and Mankato authorities were notified.

Kansas Hot, Snow on Coast.

San Francisco—The Pacific coast got its first winter storm. Portland, Ore., reported some damage from hail and lightning, and Ellensburg, Wash., reported the first snow of the year in the Cascade mountains. Friday was the warmest October 27 on the Kansas weather record which dates back nearly two score years, according to the weather bureau report. The previous high record for the day was 80 degrees. Dodge City reported 88 degrees, the highest temperature in the [illegible]

FARM LIVE STOCK

AREA PLAN IS RECOMMENDED

Whole Townships and Counties Should Be Cleaned Up in Eradicating Tuberculosis.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The general sentiment of breeders of cattle regarding tuberculosis eradication, expressed in reports received by the United States Department of Agriculture, is that efforts should be directed toward wiping out the disease from grade as well as from purebred herds. The live stock men feel that animals used for beef production, as well as those kept for dairy purposes, and single cows owned by families, as well are large herds, should be included in the clean-up.

There is always a chance that one diseased animal in a community may contaminate others. It may come in contact with them at fence lines and by going to other farms; or the disease may be spread by its drinking at running streams passing through neighboring pastures. The feeling expressed also is that the disease cannot be kept under control, much less eradicated, if these animals are omitted in the clean-up of any territory. Whole areas, therefore, like townships and counties, should be cleaned up rather than scattered herds, if the work is to be of permanent value and handled in the most economical way. By this plan and constant vigilance on the part of stock owners to keep the areas free from further contamination, tuberculosis-free territories can gradually be extended and the disease not only controlled but progress made in the war to exterminate it.

CHECK BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS

Use of Modern Scientific Methods Have Made It Possible to Clean Up Rapidly.

Less than ten years ago, says the United States Department of Agriculture, the eradication of bovine tuberculosis seemed a staggering undertaking. One reason that rapid progress seemed impossible was that the subcutaneous-test method ordinarily used was slow. But since that time the use of other methods that are much more rapid, the ophthalmic and the intradermic, has made it possible to clean up areas as large as counties in a few weeks with a relatively small force. The only possible way to eradicate tuberculosis in the light of our present knowledge is to find the diseased animals and properly dispose of them more rapidly than the disease can be spread; that is the big problem, and it means testing great numbers of animals.

SORE EYES IRRITATE LAMBS

Complaint More Common Than Formerly and Caused by Breeders Putting Wool on Faces.

Complaint of sore eyes in young lambs is more common than it used to be. This is because breeders have put more wool on the faces of the sheep. When a young lamb manifests sore eyes the first thing to be looked for is the mechanical irritation of hairs due to an inturned eyelid. If this condition is not found then it is time enough to put on boric acid.

American Farm Bureau

Winners in the Animal and Crop Project Division at the Interstate Fair.

Iowa's poultry demonstration team at the Interstate fair won the championship in the animal and crop project division with competition among ten states.

Reading from left to right they are Agnes Hendrickson, Lura Beath and Floyd Vanpelt, all of Corning, Ia. Miss Beath also won the health contest among the girls, scoring 98.8.

The Kansas trio shown here won the championship in the home economics division at Sioux City with ten states competing. They also won the grand championship of all the club demonstration teams. They are Mary Hassitt and Mary and Katheryn Uhlrich, all of McLouth, Kan. Their demonstration showed by contrast proper dress for girls. Both models wore the same type of dress, one being tastily arranged with proper cuffs and collar and a touch of color, a girlish hat to match and approved shoes, while the other wore a broad-brimmed hat of deep red, jade beads, ear drops, bar pin, several rings, rubber-tired spectacles, high-heeled shoes, and a drug store complexion, all of which the girls claimed were not good taste.

Winners in the Home Economics Division.

HULL PAULIN IS BIG WINNER

Kingsley (Iowa) Boy Wins First Prize in Baby Beef Show Held at Sioux City.

Here is Hull Paulin of Kingsley, Iowa, and his Angus steer, Toby, which won first prize in the baby beef show at the Interstate fair at Sioux City, with competition of 103 head. He won, besides $25 in cash, a silver cup offered by the veteran Hereford breeders, E. M. Cassady & Sons of Whiting, Iowa, for the boy who would show the champion baby beef.

Hull Paulin and His Angus Steer Toby.

This calf brought the highest price ever paid to a club boy for baby beef—50 cents a pound. Weighing up at 1,050 pounds, he brought his proud owner $525.00, which is a good start on his fortune.

FARM LEADERSHIP IN FAVOR

Data Shows More Than 10,000 Leaders in Community Organizations in State of Ohio.

Local farm leadership is being developed by the Farm Bureau organization, according to figures recently compiled by the extension department of Ohio State university on the number of local people leading in farm bureau work in their home communities [illegible] township or community organizations over the state.

On subject matter the list made up by the extension department shows 1,343 farm men and women leading poultry demonstration projects; 1,103 leading crops projects; 1,700 volunteers at the head of boys' and girls' club work in their communities; 562 leading soils projects; 1,214 heading livestock improvement projects; 848 are leading dairy projects; 429 are heading up work in farm management; 1,361 women are leaders in home demonstration projects, and 1,287 men and women are working on projects of various sorts that do not come under any of these headings.

Two counties, Auglaize and Belmont, lead the list with 402 people definitely working in project leadership. The lowest number reported in any county is 42. The local township organization is being stressed by the organization department of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation.

ALABAMA SELLING HAY CROP

Five to Ten Cars Disposed of Each Day to Points in Georgia and South Carolina.

The Alabama Farm Bureau Hay association is now selling co-operatively an average of five to ten cars of Johnson and alfalfa hay each day. Most of it is going to points in Georgia and South Carolina. This association was ready for business several weeks ago, but the price of hay was so low, due to "dumping" by independent growers, that the officials decided not to sell. At that time No. 1 Johnson hay was selling for $9 a ton, but the association, by holding its hay off the market, has been influential in raising the price to $18 and $14 per ton.

SAVE SHIPPERS MUCH MONEY

Reduction of 40 Cents Per Hundred Pounds on Eggs Is of Big Benefit to Shippers.

A reduction of 40 cents per hundred pounds in the transportation rate on eggs shipped over transcontinental lines from California to New York, which will save approximately $100,000 to the shippers of California, becomes effective October 16.

Information that such a reduction was being considered caused the transportation department of the American Farm Bureau federation to petition the [illegible]

Pertinent Pointers for Practical Farmers

FARM DRAINAGE PROJECTS LAG

Can Best be Done in Dry Weather, Says Expert.

Farm drainage projects generally lag in seasons of dry weather and drouth. But H. B. Roe, associate professor of drainage, University of Minnesota, contends that, contrary to general belief and practice, a dry season is the best time to install drainage systems. This is true, he says, for three reasons.

(1) The work is done with greater ease and more cheaply because the practice of neglecting drainage in dry weather minimizes the demand for tilers at such times and lowers wage scales for this class of work.

H. B. ROE

Assistant Professor of Drainage University of Minnesota.

(2) Better work can be done in dry weather because the tiler can see what he is doing and is not hampered by bad weather conditions.

(3) Most important of all is the preparation in advance for the removal of excess moisture in the wet seasons so sure to follow.

"Tile drainage is a permanent improvement," says Professor Roe. "The cost may and should be immediately added to the value of the land.

"Contrary to common belief, experience shows that everywhere the cost of installation of good tile drainage is much lower than the purchase price of new or partly developed, undrained farm land, only 40 to 94 per cent or a true average of about 75 per cent of which is tillable until drained.

"Drainage is a progressive improvement. Its installation need not be hurried to completion, but it can be done a little at a time if this little is done according to a definite, complete plan. The progressive farmer or his boy can readily learn to tile, but he should work to a plan."

In summing up Professor Roe says: "Farm drainage prevents drouth and is a means of resisting its effects; a dry season is the best time to install drainage; tile drainage is a permanent improvement which can be done a little at a time if a definite plan is followed; careful design and a complete plan are essential to good results in drainage which, if installed under these conditions, is an inexpensive and permanent insurance of crops against drouth as well as against excessive rainfall."

Potatoes Make Good Silage.

Potatoes left over on the farms this year can be converted into silage by the use of ordinary barrels for silos, says M. J. Thompson, superintendent of the Northeast Experiment Station at Duluth.

When it is possible, says Mr. Thompson, the potatoes should be cut or broken up into pieces for the reason that exposure of the white starchy portion hastens fermentation. A six inch layer of the potatoes should be placed at the bottom of the barrel or cask. This should be covered with a light layer of cornmeal. The two layers should be alternated until the barrel is full. Then cover and weight down.

Mr. Thompson advises the use of about 2 per cent cornmeal which, he says, stimulates the process of fermentation. The barrel may be opened in a few weeks and feeding commenced on a basis of about one gallon per feed [illegible]

POTATO RAISING COSTS ARE HIGH

If Crop Is Not Dug Seed and Labor Are Loss.

Will it pay to dig all potatoes in view of the low priced market and the high priced labor cost? Hugh J. Hughes, director of markets of the Minnesota State Department of Agriculture, answers the question in the affirmative.

"One hundred bushels per acre crop, delivered at the warehouse, costs the grower from $35 to $40," Mr. Hughes says. "Most of this is expense for labor which has already been invested in the crop, also the expense for seed and spraying.

"The digging, picking, and hauling cost per bushel amounts to around 10 to 12 cents out of the 35 to 40 cents per bushel total. If the crop is not dug, the balance of the cost, or from 25 to 28 cents per bushel, becomes a dead loss.

"But if the grower digs, hauls, and sells at anything above the labor cost of digging, picking, and delivery, he reduces the loss already incurred. For instance, using the above figures, a 20 cents a bushel sale price, while far below the cost of production, would not only pay the costs of digging and hauling, but would leave the farmer eight to ten cents a bushel to cover at least a part of his production losses.

"Consequently this department urges upon the grower the advisability of staying with the crop clear through to the marketing end as a plain matter of good business for himself.

"And there still remains a chance—a very fair chance—that prices may be sufficient to reduce the losses to a narrow margin, or to wipe them out altogether—perhaps, in cases of good yields well graded to a U. S. No. 1 standard, to allow a small profit over all the costs of production.

"In order to be ready for such a possible turn in the situation the digging and safe pitting of the crop is the first step in order."

MAY CLEAN UP ON PICRIC ACID

War Stocks Are Being Distributed to Farmers.

Indications are that the government supply of picric acid will be exhausted in the course of the next few months. The United States department of agriculture has notified the agricultural engineering division men of the University of Minnesota that it "hopes to clean up the picric acid situation this fall." In some of the states information is being given out that the distribution of picric acid will cease after December 1. All information obtainable is to the effect that picric acid supplies must be obtained within the next few months or not at all.

Persons who plan land clearing campaigns in 1923 are advised by the university men to lay in their picric acid now. Temperature has no effect upon it whatever, and it will keep indefinitely if stored in a dry place. This seems the accepted time to get cheap explosives.

It is worthy of repetition that this explosive material is given free of charge by the United States government. All the farmer pays is the cost of cartridging and shipping, which amounts to about a fraction more than four cents per stick.

"Flushing" Brings Large Increase.

"Liberal feeding of brood sows for two or three weeks prior to the breeding season increases the chances of getting large litters," says Prof. E. F. Ferrin of the animal husbandry division of the University of Minnesota.

"Sheep breeders have long practiced flushing—the feeding of more generous rations just before and during the mating season, with a resulting increase in the twin lambs produced. Hog breeders have tried the plan and find that the same principle applies to sows. By feeding stimulating rations, the health of the animal is bettered, and more ova are liberated at a heat period than if no change in feed is made. Consequently, if the sow is bred, the chances of getting a large litter are increased.

"Fresh green pasture is a splendid feed to have available for sows at the breeding season. Heavier feeding of grain, and especially the use of rations rich in protein, helps to accomplish the process of flushing. Other desired results follow the practice of having the sows in good gaining condition when they are bred. They seem [illegible]

GUINEAS GROWING IN FAVOR

Raising of Fowls Becoming More Profitable Because of Gamey Flavor—Market in Fall.

Guinea fowl are growing in favor as a substitute for game birds, with the result that guinea raising is becoming more profitable.

They are raised usually in small flocks on general farms, and need a large range for best results.

Domesticated guinea fowls are of three varieties, Pearl, White and Lavender, of which the Pearl is by far the most popular.

Guinea fowls have a tendency to mate in pairs, but one male may be mated successfully with three or four females.

Guinea hens usually begin to lay in April or May, and will lay 20 to 30 eggs before becoming broody. If not allowed to sit they will continue to lay throughout the summer, laying from 40 to 60 or more eggs.

Eggs may be removed from the nest when the guinea hen is not sitting, but two or more eggs should be left in the nest.

Guinea Fowls Gain Favor as Substitute for Game Birds.

Ordinary hens are used commonly to hatch and rear guinea chicks, but guinea hens and turkey hens both may be employed successfully, although they are more difficult to manage.

Guineas are marketed late in the summer, when they weigh from one to one and one-half pounds at about two and one-half months of age, and also throughout the fall, when the demand is for heavier birds.

RATS ARE GREAT ANNOYANCE

Best Time to Take Precautions Against Rodents Is in Building of Poultry House.

Rats are often a source of much annoyance and loss in the poultry yard. Perhaps the best time to take proper precautions is in the building of a new poultry house, through the use of cement and fine mesh wire netting under the floor and around the bottom of the side walls to make it rat proof.

The next best thing is to have the poultry house or houses erected by themselves at a little distance from the other farm buildings, and so constructed as to make it hard for the rats to find lodgment there. In this case the rats will have to travel some little distance before entering and therefore run more risk of being caught by the family dog or cat.

TRAP NEST HAS ADVANTAGES

Mighty Useful for Breeder Seeking Higher-Producing Hens—Necessary for Pedigreeing.

Trapnesting is usually not practical on general farms where chickens are kept largely for eggs and meat, though it pays well to head the farm flock with cockerels out of high-producing trapnested hens. Trapnesting is tremendously practical for the constructive breeder and absolutely necessary for pedigreeing, unless birds are mated in pairs only and each pair separately penned. Pen matings, as compared with pair matings, make it impossible to identify the eggs laid by individual hens unless trapnests are used.

POULTRY NOTES

Stale water is not good for any animal, much less for a laying hen.

INTO A TRAP

SYNOPSIS.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance. Natalie, Coolidge and West plan a visit of charity. Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie for a purpose. Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but leaves. On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He thinks Coolidge was murdered.

"Where was it the three of you went on Sunday in the runabout, Captain West?" asked Sexton.

"To a house over in the factory district; some charity case that Coolidge was interested in—the widow of one of his employees, I believe.

"Did you see the people?"

"No, I didn't go in; waited outside in the car; it was no affair of mine. Why?" he asked in surprise.

"Because, sir, Miss Natalie seemed like a different person when she got back. Not in looks, or nothing like that, I don't mean, but in the way she talked and acted. Nothing suited her all the rest of the day. You know how she was to you, sir. Well she was just that snappy with all of us, even after we brought the body back to the house. And she wouldn't look at him, sir, not even after he was dressed proper and laid out."

"I hardly believe," said West thoughtfully, "you can attribute her state of mind to anything that occurred on that trip. Indeed she was in high spirits all the way home."

"I can't help that, sir," Sexton insisted blindly. "It was something that happened yesterday what set her wrong, an' if I was you, sir, I'd find out what happened in that house first of all. Could you find the place?"

"Yes, I think so. I'll look it up, although I don't have much faith in your theory." He glanced at his watch. "I'll go out there now. You come back here about five, and we will talk over any discoveries I may make."

"And what shall I do, sir?"

Both were standing, West with hand on the knob of the door. The light in his eyes hardened.

"Nothing occurs to me now, Sexton, unless you can find an excuse to return to Fairlawn, after something you have forgotten, let us say. If we can learn what Miss Natalie proposes doing it might furnish a clue."

"Very well, sir, and I am to be here at five o'clock?"

"Yes, at five; I will leave word with the doorman to show you in at once."

West picked up a taxi-cab for the trip, bidding the chauffeur to drive to a certain section of the city, and then up and down the various streets until told to stop. His conversation with Sexton had greatly strengthened his conviction that this was a murder, and he had determined to ferret out the truth if possible. Yet, thus far there was nothing to build upon, no clue, no motive, no suspicion as to who had perpetrated the deed. He simply faced a blank wall, in which no entrance was apparent, yet there must be one, if he was only fortunate enough to stumble upon it. Deep down in his heart West was conscious that he possessed a motive in this search far more worthy than mere curiosity. That motive was Natalie Coolidge. He smiled at the thought, yet confessed it true. In spite of her curt dismissal, his memory of the girl centered about those earlier hours of their acquaintance. Something mysterious had occurred to make her change so quickly, and he was unwilling to condemn her before learning the real reason.

The chauffeur drove slowly up and down obscure streets for half an hour before West recognized familiar surroundings, and motioned for him to draw up against the curb. He had discovered the place sought, but from the street it exhibited no signs of occupancy, nor did any knocking at the front door bring response from within. He circled the building. Every door was locked, but, as he passed along the other side to regain the taxi, a man emerged from the next house, and hailed him.

"Say, what're yer snoopin' round there for? Lookin' for somebody?"

"Yes, the parties who were here Sunday. What's become of them?"

"Hobart, you mean?"

"Is that his name? I met him downtown, and he told me to come here," West explained rapidly. "We had a deal on."

"Oh, yer did, hey," leaning his arms on the fence. "Well, Jim Hobart was the name he giv' me. That's my house, which is why I happen to know what his name was. Something queer about that fellar, I reckon, but 'tain't none o' my business. You ain't a detective, or nothin' like that, are yer?"

"Nothing at all like that," West laughed, although interested. "Why? Did you think the police might be after him?"

"Not for enything I know about, only he skipped out mighty sudden. Paid me a month's rent, and only stayed there three days. That looks sorter queer. Then, Sunday that fellar what committed suicide out south—I read about it in the papers—came to see him in a car. I got a boy workin' in his factory, that's how I come to know who the guy was. The next night Hobart, an' them with him, just naturally skipped out."

"Who did he have with him here—a family?"

"A woman 'bout his age, I should say, an' a younger one. I didn't see 'em only from the window; didn't get no sight o' the girl's face at all, but could tell the way she walked she was young. They didn't have nothin' with 'em; that's all my stuff in the house there."

Feeling the uselessness of trying to learn anything more, West thanked him, and returned to the taxi.

"Back to the club," he ordered briefly, and settled into his seat to think.

The information thus gained had been small enough, yet sufficient to stimulate his belief that he was at least upon the right trail. The sudden departure of this man Hobart, and the fact that no young children were in the family, were important items to consider. Coolidge, then, had not visited this cottage to aid a widow and orphans. There had been some other object in his call. The girl must have known and understood the real purpose; that was why they both acquiesced so readily to his remaining outside in the car. It was part of their mutual plan to thus leave him in ignorance. Yet they had made a mistake in taking him along at all. This error alone gave him now an opportunity to unravel the riddle. But did it? What did he know? Merely that Coolidge had not gone to this house on an errand of charity; that the occupant called himself, temporarily, perhaps, Jim Hobart; that his family consisted of two women, undescribed except as to age; and that all three had mysteriously disappeared together. He might take it for granted that this disappearance was caused by the death of Coolidge, but they had left no trail, no inkling as to where they had gone. He might suspect this sudden vanishing had direct connection with the crime he was endeavoring to solve, but he possessed absolutely no proof, and, apparently, any further movement on his part was completely blocked.

More puzzled than ever, although now fully convinced that murder had been committed, West could do nothing but wait the reappearance of Sexton. The latter arrived promptly on time, and West told his story. His listener seemed to sense the situation clearly.

"It wasn't no mistake, your goin' out there, sir," he said confidently. "What we know now gives us something to work on anyhow, an' it's just what I thought—that trip Sunday led up to this killin', an' something happened while they was in there to stir Miss Natalie all up. Now we got to find this fellow—what did you say his name was, sir?"

"Hobart—Jim Hobart; that is, he was known by that name there."

"And did you say he has simply dropped out o' sight?"

"That's true; never left a clue behind him."

"Well, sir, I'm not quite so sure about that. You listen to me, sir. This afternoon I walked out to Fairlawn from the car line, an' come in across the fields to the house. I didn't have no good excuse for goin' back there, sir, an' was sorter afraid to meet up with Miss Natalie. She might have thought I was just spyin' 'round. But I didn't have no need for being afraid, for it seems she'd driven into town about noon, an' hadn't got back. There wasn't nobody but the servant around the place, sir. Do you remember Lizzie, the second maid—sorter full face, an' light hair?"

West nodded, wondering what all this might be leading to.

"Well, she an' I always hit it off together, an' I talked with her quite a bit. She told me, sir, that Miss Natalie had a telephone call this morning that took her into the city. Lizzie she went to the 'phone when it rang, an' it was a man's voice. He wouldn't leave no message, but insisted on speaking to Miss Natalie. Lizize had to call her down from upstairs."

"Did the girl overhear the conversation?"

"Not so as to make much out of it, sir. She was sorter interested, the man's voice being strange, and hung around in the hall listening, but about all she could make out was what Miss Natalie said. It seemed like he was givin' her some kind of address, which she didn't exactly understand, an' so she repeated it after him two or three times to be sure."

"What was the address?"

"238 Ray street, sir, an' then about an hour later, Miss Natalie ordered her car, an' drove into town."

"Alone?"

"Yes, sir; it was the electric she took."

West remained silent, tapping with his knife on the table. This might prove important, and he could not afford to ignore the information. While to his mind it was hardly likely Hobart had called the girl, yet the possibility remained.

"I never heard of a Ray street," he said at length, "but of course, there may be one. Oh, Charlie," he stopped a waiter passing. "Bring me up a city directory, will you?"

The man returned with the book, placing it on a chair next West, who immediately began to inspect the volume.

"Ray street," he said doubtfully, fingering the pages. "There is no such street here, Sexton. Are you sure you got that right?"

"That's what she said, sir; I made her say it over twice."

"Ray Street; wonder if it could be spelled with a W? By jove, it is—Wray! Here we have it, only five blocks long, extending from Conway to Grogan. Rather tough section I should judge. It wouldn't do any harm to take a look around there. Perhaps that is where Hobart went; he might have been the one calling Natalie. Rather a wild guess, but it will give us something to do. Are you game, Sexton?"

"Quite so, sir."

West hardly took the adventure seriously, being more influenced by curiosity than any other motive, but Sexton was deeply in earnest, in full faith they were upon the right trail. Doubtful as he was, West had neglected no precautions. The map assured him that they were invading a disorderly section of the city, where to be well-dressed would only invite suspicion, and might lead to trouble. To avoid this possibility, he had donned his most shabby suit, and wore a cap largely concealing his face. In one pocket of his jacket within easy reach lay hidden his service revolver loaded, and he had induced Sexton to accept a smaller weapon in case of emergency.

The street was not inviting, the saloon on the corner being flanked by several small factories. The brick sidewalk was in bad condition, and littered with junk of all kinds, while the roadway was entirely uncared for, and deeply rutted from heavy traffic. Half way down the block was a tannery, closed now for the night, but with its odor yet permeating the entire atmosphere. Altogether, the scene was desolate and disagreeable enough, but the street was deserted of pedestrians, the factory doors tightly closed for the night.

"Well, What Is It You Fellers Want?"

The two men pressed their way through along a narrow passage, finding less obstruction as they advanced, the second block being composed entirely of houses, largely of the tenement type, and apparently principally populated by children.

Wray street was lined with homes, usually humble enough outwardly, yet the thoroughfare was clean, and the small yards had generally an appearance of neatness; 238 was a three-story brick, on the corner, the second story evidently utilized for living purposes, and the ground floor occupied as a saloon. The upper story exhibited no signs of occupancy, the windows unwashed, and two of them boarded up. The two lingered in uncertainty opposite the house. Standing there idly, however, did not appeal to West.

"Well, let's go over," he said impatiently. "There is nothing to be learned here."

It was an ordinary bar-room and, their entrance apparently aroused no special interest. Besides the man behind the bar, a rather rough-looking foreigner, a Pole, in West's judgment, three customers were in the place, two with feet upon the rail talking with the drink dispenser, and one at a small table moodily contemplating a half emptied stein of beer. There were three other tables in the room, and the captain, with a swift glance about, [illegible] bartender came forward around the end of the bar, while the man nearest shifted his position slightly so as to look them over, conversation instantly ceasing. Something indefinable in the fellow's attitude, and steady stare, gave West a feeling of hostility, which was not dispelled by the gruff greeting of the bartender.

"Well, what is it you fellers want?"

"A stein apiece, and a sandwich—you serve them, don't you?"

"Sure; ham or beef?"

"Ham."

There was no cordiality, no welcome in either manner or speech. It was plainly the proprietor of the saloon felt no enthusiasm over his unknown customers. He came back with the beer and sandwiches, pausing this time to wipe off the table, as an excuse for speech.

"You guys live 'round here?" he asked gruffly. "Don't remember ever seein' yer in here before."

"No," returned West indifferently, looking directly into the hard face. "I'm a smoke inspector, an' we just dropped in on our way back to the office. Why?"

"Oh, nothin'; only we don't get much trade outside the neighborhood."

He walked back toward the bar, pausing an instant to whisper a word to the taller man who still stood there staring moodily at the table. What he said apparently determined action, for the fellow addressed crossed the room to where West and Sexton sat, deliberately pulled up a vacant chair and joined them.

"Bring me another, Mike," he ordered. "That is, if these gents don't object to my joining 'em awhile."

CHAPTER VIII

Trapped.

West smiled pleasantly, glad the man had taken the initiative, thus naturally opening up a way for asking certain questions. Whatever his own immediate object might be in thus scraping an acquaintance made no difference. It would doubtless develop in time, but meanwhile here was the opportunity sought to discuss the affairs of the neighborhood. Yet the subject must be approached with due caution. The very indifference of the bartender, coupled with the evident desire of this hanger-on to form an acquaintance, served to reveal the real nature of the place. Plainly enough strangers were viewed with suspicion, and this was no ordinary saloon, catering to whatever trade drifted within its doors. More than likely it was rather a thieves' hang-out, ever suspicious of the activity of the police.

Yet this fellow bore no outward semblance to the common conception of the underworld. He was well dressed, easy of manner, with an exceptionally intelligent face, blue eyes meeting West's gaze frankly, a carefully trimmed mustache, with white teeth good humoredly showing when he smiled, and threads of gray in his hair. His very appearance invited confidence and comradeship, while his outspoken words increased this impression.

"Excuse my butting in," he explained genially. "But it's d—n dull around here tonight. Nobody to talk with but a couple o' bums. You see I don't belong around here; just dropped in for a bit of business with Mike."

"I see," admitted West, puzzled, and wondering how far he dared venture. "You can get lonelier in a big city than anywhere else."

"You bet you can. You see I run a broker's office down town, an' it's pretty blame slow around a dump like this—you get me?"

"Sure; this seems to be a pretty quiet place."

"Quiet! H—l! It isn't always so quiet. I've dropped in here when it was lively enough, believe me. But tonight it's the limit. Fact is I come up for a little excitement, as much as anything else, but must have struck an off night. You're a smoke inspector, Mike says?"

West nodded.

"Know Fred Karvan, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes; friend of yours?"

"Used to be; we were kids together down on the South side. He's got a pretty soft job now; stands in strong with the City hall, they tell me. Mean to drop in and see him some of these days."

"You'll find him a mighty good fellow," asserted West, to whom the name was entirely unfamiliar.

"Well, I'm not so sure about that. He's got pretty stiff the last few years, they tell me. But then you work under him, and ought to know. Head of your department, isn't he?"

"Yes, but I only meet him in a business way, of course."

> "And the ex-soldier went down as though hit with a pole-ax."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Business Woman.

My father, an old doctor, has had many strange experiences in his career. I have often heard him tell this one: He had been called to see a man who had been severely hurt in a runaway. After examining the patient's injured limb, he was summoned into the next room by the patient's wife. She wished to inquire of the doctor which would be cheaper—to save the leg or amputate it.—Chicago Journal.

NEGLIGEES ARE CHARMING; DRESS HATS ARE LOVELY

FROM everywhere and from nowhere but the brain of the designer, come the fall styles in negligees. There is no uniformity in them, except that they may be classed as either graceful or piquant; for their sources of inspiration are found anywhere and everywhere. With fancies untrammeled, the creators of negligees, it seems, allow their thoughts to wander in all quarters of the world, lingering where they are most attracted. Worth has given us interpretations of the kimono from fair Japan, Molyneux has found Persia fascinating and has reproduced the Persian jacket (to be worn with a wrapped turban) among other of his lovely negligees.

Unusual and Lovely Negligee.

The vogue for drapery in outer apparel has influenced the designers of tea gowns and therefore there are many draped models among them. Every display reveals that attention has been given to trousered styles in negligees, to be worn as lounging garments and pajamas, for both sleeping and lounging, grow in popularity; but these are intended for wear in the privacy of one's own quarters. All negligees for usual wear are roomy, graceful and comfortable.

An unusual and lovely negligee, shown in the illustration, is of crepe-satin, with deep fringes (that carry with them a hint of Spain) used for decoration. It fastens at one side, under a little nosegay of ribbon flowers, and is at once dignified and pretty. Lively color has always been the prerogative of the negligee and it appears in all the long list of fabrics used this season. They include velvet, satin, faille, taffeta, chiffon, canton and georgette crepe, crepe de chine and novel weaves in silks, and in other mediums, corduroy, albatross, silk and cotton mixtures are in the lead.

It must be that the creators of dress hats have made a pact with beauty this season and have agreed to favor every type of face with something to enhance its charms. Certainly there is no excuse for unbecoming millinery, and women, pretty or plain, are justified in demanding hats that flatter. The early promise of the season is fulfilled—hats are rich, refined, adorable.

In fabrics for dress hats velvet dominates, with metallic tissues, laces and brocades its inseparable allies. Embroideries, feathers, metallic and other ornaments, flowers of many sorts, lend their allurements, in trimmings well placed against these splendid backgrounds. Lines are spirited and, taken all together, the shopping tour that has a new dress hat as its object, is likely to prove exhilarating—hats can do so much for faces.

The five lovely hats pictured in the group shown here give some idea of the variety in shapes and styles that invite experiment. It leads off with a spirited helmet shape, in silver and black brocade with an odd, upturned visor and a monture of uncurled ostrich, mounted across the top. To the right is a pretty poke shape, of silver and blue tissue, silver lace and velvet drapery. Just below this soft, velvet shape reveals a droopy and subtle brim, ornamented with embroidery on the facing—a hat that is the delight of artists. To the left a soft-crowned velvet hat has a dashing brim, sharply upturned off the face and decorated with lace and bead embroidery. A handsome pin is thrust through the brim and crown where they meet at the front. A very wide-brimmed, black hat of lace and velvet has a fascinating curtain-edge of lace about the brim and a round crown from which an airy, sweeping brush of feathers trails to right side, giving the brim additional width.

Hats Fulfill Early Season's Promise.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Lloyd George Starts Campaign and Bonar Law Forms New British Ministry.

GERMANY IS TOPPLING AGAIN

Threatens Voluntary Bankruptcy and Reparations Body Hurries to Berlin—Daugherty's Dry Ship Ruling Is Upheld—News From the Near East.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, forced out of the British prime ministership by the attitude of the Conservative party, seeks re-election to parliament and return to power. He opposes the radical demands of labor, and advocates the fostering of friendly relations with the United States and with Russia. In this instance especially British politics affects the world at large. Is it your opinion that Britain would be wise again to put the helm of the ship of state in Lloyd George's hands?

THOUGH he has not fulfilled prophecy by trying to form a new party, David Lloyd George is making a pretty fight for return to parliament and to power. He declares his object is to secure the dominance of a party or group that will keep the government in a middle course of safety and moderation. Addressing a gathering of the National Liberal party, he took a firm stand against recent radical demands of the Labor party, and also made it clear that one of his chief claims for support was his friendly relations with the United States. He asserted all reasonable concessions must be made to induce this country to enter the League of Nations, which would be crippled without it. And he said Britain must pay her war debt to the United States in full. "Working with the United States," declared he, "ought to be one of the chief purposes of the government. If these two nations would work together, it would be the surest guarantee for a just peace, and a just peace is the only lasting peace."

The ex-premier's quarrel with the Labor party is in a way international, for that party, in a manifesto issued last week, not only demands the creation of a "war debt redemption fund by a special graduated levy on fortunes exceeding £5,000," but also declares for the revision of the peace treaty and German reparations, for an international conference to arrange the freedom of the straits, for independence in Egypt and self-government in India.

Andrew Bonar Law, having been elected head of the Conservative party, accepted the post of prime minister and on Tuesday announced his cabinet. It is a respectable list of names, with quite a number from the peerage, but most of the new ministers are considered rather nonentities. The mainstay of the cabinet is Marquis Curzon, secretary for foreign affairs. Lord Cave, the lord chancellor, and Stanley Baldwin, the chancellor of the exchequer, are men of proved ability. It is taken for granted that Bonar Law will make many changes in the ministry if he is returned to power at the general election, which is set for November 15. He is a candidate for Glasgow, and is opposed by a Labor candidate and also by Sir George Paish, noted economist.

The last named gentleman is now in the United States and, addressing the convention of the American Manufacturers Export association, gave a lot of economic advice concerning production and trade. He scolded our government for hoarding gold, and urged that the tariff barriers and [illegible] as the first step in the restoration of foreign exchange. Sir George also wants America to throw open her doors to unrestricted immigration—an unwelcome suggestion in view of our experience with certain classes of immigrants in recent years.

BEING refused the cabinet positions they demanded, the Italian Fascisti in convention in Naples made preparation for militant action that threatened to become revolutionary. Thereupon Premier Facta and his cabinet resigned. Former Premier Giolitti conferred with Benito Mussolini, chief of the Fascisti, and it was believed he would be called on to form a new ministry. The Fascisti are now the strongest organization in Italy and have announced that they will assume control of the government, legally or otherwise.

GERMANY, whose mark made a new low record of 2⅛ cents a hundred last week, is again threatening to go into voluntary bankruptcy by defaulting in her reparations payments in material as well as in cash. Chancellor Wirth, whose political life is in great danger, has begun hedging and now has adopted the slogan of "First bread, then reparations," and has put the problem up to the cabinet. The Socialists are calling for more drastic measures, including confiscation of foreign money in the hands of private persons, and on the other hand the bourgeoisie demand the suppression of the decree against speculation and the agriculturists insist on higher official prices for German wheat and corn. The allied reparations commission went to Berlin to consult with the government. The British commissioner, Sir John Bradbury, said he would vote to declare Germany in voluntary default of its agreement if it should refuse to carry out within a reasonable time requests for internal reforms. This was a considerable concession to the French demands. It may be that in return France will agree to the indefinite postponement of the Brussels financial conference, leaving the entire reparations matter in the hands of the commission.

French, Belgian and Italian exchange rates dropped sharply last week, going to the lowest prices of the year on the New York exchange.

FEDERAL JUDGE HAND in New York upheld the ruling of the attorney general prohibiting the carrying of liquors on vessels entering American waters, and the case brought by a number of steamship companies is now to go before the Supreme court, which probably will not hand down a decision for six or eight weeks. Meantime Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has informally instructed his agents not to enforce the order against foreign vessels whose supplies of liquor are sealed when they enter our ports. American ships, however, must obey the ruling. The French government has indicated that it will not comply with the request, presented unofficially by Ambassador Herrick, that it cooperate in preventing liquor smuggling from the St. Pierre et Miquelon islands off the southern coast of Newfoundland. According to French officials, the islanders trade French liquor for food at Newfoundland and Prince Edward island ports, and do not themselves smuggle the booze into the United States. It is said this liquor trading is essential to the fishermen of the islands.

SAMUEL GOMPERS, Frank Morrison and James O'Connell, the executive committee for the national non-partisan campaign of the American Federation of Labor, have issued a manifesto denouncing the present congress as reactionary and calling on the voters to "put progress in" at the November election. The appeal says the congress has performed no service for the people, but has "tried by every trick and device to serve predatory interests." Its action in removing the excess profits tax and reducing the surtaxes, and concerning the soldiers' bonus is especially condemned.

TEN members of the I. W. W. are on trial in Sacramento for violation of the California criminal syndicalism law and last week the state produced a witness [illegible] tling story of "wobblies" plots during the war. He is W. E. Townsend and says he was the right-hand man of W. D. Haywood, head of the organization. He testified that he and several hundred other wobblies were employed in the Chicago packing houses and, under orders from the I. W. W., conspired to send to our troops spoiled and poisonous canned foods. He also told of sabotage plots on railroads and in harvest fields.

NAVY DAY was celebrated throughout the United States on Friday—which also was the anniversary of the birth of Col. Theodore Roosevelt. The occasion brought forth many appeals for the maintenance of the efficiency of the navy personnel, which, according to Rear Admiral Rogers, should number not fewer than 120,000 men. To maintain our ratio under the Washington treaty, said the admiral, we should build fifteen or twenty cruisers of 10,000 tons each in the course of the next few years, besides large submarines. President Harding in a letter to Secretary Denby said: "It is well for us to have in mind that under a program of lessening navy armaments there is a greater reason for maintaining the highest efficiency, fitness, and morale in this branch of the national defensive service. I know how earnestly the navy personnel is devoted to this ideal, and want you to be assured of my hearty concurrence.".

PREMIER POINCARE is to send out invitations to the Near East peace conference, which is to be held in Lausanne, Switzerland, but at this writing the date of the meeting is uncertain. Lord Curzon, British foreign minister, insists that the United States should participate. Italy says that Russia must be permitted to sit in the conference and also to sign the treaty, and France may consent to this in view of her improved relations with the soviet government. Evacuation of Thrace by the Greek civilians continues amid considerable disorder though the allied forces are doing their best to prevent trouble. The Greeks carry off all they can and often destroy the rest of their possessions, including crops. The American Red Cross has announced that it will care for 800,000 of the refugees. The press of Athens complains bitterly that the United States is the only nation that is giving aid. George Horton, American consul general at Smyrna, is on his way home to report on the destruction of that city and the attending circumstances. His statement as to the origin of the conflagration is awaited eagerly as the payment of insurance may depend upon it. Mr. Horton gave no advance information as to his report, but in his conversation there was an indication that he would tell the State department that the Smyrna fire was started by looters and not by Turkish soldiers.

TEN big transports steamed out of the port of Vladivostok last Wednesday, bearing all the Japanese troops that have held that city and most of the Japanese civilians as well. The forces of the Far Eastern Republic—the Chita government—at once entered the place and took control. The commander of the Red army is said to have ordered the British and American marines to leave Vladivostok and all foreign warships to leave the harbor.

THE constitution of the Irish Free State was adopted by the provisional parliament Wednesday and was taken to London for approval by the new British cabinet, which certainly will not be withheld as no changes that could be offensive to the English government have been made in the draft as approved in June by the Lloyd George ministry. Eamon de Valera is in Dublin again but is suffering from a serious nervous disorder and the authorities therefore will not molest him. His condition is so serious that a priest is in constant attendance.

ONE noted American died last week—Dr. Lyman Abbott, the venerable editor of Outlook. For many years he has been prominent as a preacher, editor, author and lecturer and he was the associate and friend of [illegible] greatest Americans of his time.

CANDIDATE FOR THE LEGISLATURE

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES:

To the Voters of the 65th Legislative District:

Owing to the great amount of work on the farm at this time of the year, I find it will be physically impossible for me to meet any considerable number of the voters, hence I shall have to depend on the public press to bring my message to the voters.

If elected to the Legislature it will be my purpose to oppose all measures giving privileges to the special interests of the state, including the so-called, "Constabulary Law." Giving such added political machinery into the hands of any one man is to my mind dangerous and should be defeated.

If the Rural Credits Amendments is adopted, which I earnestly hope it will, I will give my assistance to the inactment of suitable laws which will give the farmers of the state the privilege of making long time real estate loans at the lowest possible rate of interest.

It will be my aim and purpose to vote for the repeal of the present vicious pre-primary law and to uphold in every respect the old-time primary under which the voters may express their own choice of candidates.

The departments of the state government should be combined and co-related in such manner as to effect the greatest possible saving to tax payers, and I believe furthur that the automobile tax is badly in need of revision and equalization.

All co-operative marketing measures of merit will have my aid and support; the time may not be ripe for state controlled terminal elevators and warehouses, but if such a law should be attempted it will have my vote and support.

I want to make it plain that I stand unequivocally for the agricultural interests of the state, believing the men and women who labor have not been treated with entire fairness in the past.

Believing I can be of service to the people of this district, as well as to the state in general, I respectfully solicit the aid and support of all voters at the coming election.

To the People of the 65th Legislative District:

THE ELECTION is now comparatively only a few days off, and I find that it will be impossible for me to call personally on as many people as I would like to do. I am asking your kind consideration and good will in regard to my candidacy for state senator from the 65th Legislative District. I stand squarely on a platform which favors any legislation which is of benefit to the agricultural interests of the district. I favor progressive legislation; economy in the expenditure of public moneys, with a view of lessening the burden of taxation; good roads from farm to market; a lower interest rate; state loans to farmers at cost; guaranty of bank deposits; adequate compensation laws, and justice to all the people of the district. I am opposed to a state constabulary.

HANSEN WINS SENATORSHIP

Carries Red Lake County By Big Majority. Makes Good Run In District

With practically all precincts in Red Lake, Pennington and Clearwater counties reporting, C. L. Hansen of Thief River is winner for state senator from the 65th district. While a few remote precincts are still to be heard from, their total vote would not change the result. Mr. Hansen carried this village by a vote of 122 to 75 for Senator Naplin. Surrounding townships gave Naplin small majorities, but they were to small to offset the count at Thief River and St. Hilaire. Mr. Hansen carried Red Lake county by a margin of over 500 votes, and Clearwater by a smaller amount according to late returns. If late reports are substantially correct, Mr. Hansen will have a majority of between 800 and 1000 in the district.

Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Burkee delightfully entertained a large gathering of their friends last Thursday evening in honor of Dr. and Mrs. F. N. Bjerken who are to leave in a short time for Chicago. Contests and cards were the diversions, after which a delicious lunch was served.

Old Resident Dies

Edward Flamme, an old resident of this village, died last Friday noon at his home supposedly from strangulation caused by a piece of potato becoming lodged in his throat. When first noticed, he was gasping for breath, and died within a couple minutes.

Mr. Flamme, who was 85 years and 7 months of age, was born in Hainout Province in Belgium in 1837. In 1885 he went to South America where he lived for eight years. After that time he resided in Canada until he and his family moved to this village in 1901. A quiet, retiring man, he made but few acquaintances here, and spent his last years peacefully looking after his garden and attending to small duties about his home. He leaves a family of three children, who are: Emile Joseph Flamme, Marie Adrienne Flamme and Mrs. L. Cathelineau all of this village. Mrs. Flamme preceeded her husband in death 13 years ago

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. E. Halter from the family home Monday afternoon, and interment was made in the family plot at the cemetery east of town.

The District Judges

Last minute report on the district judge contest in this district indicates that Grindeland and Watts have been re-elected with comfortable majorities.

Last report from the contest for county commissioner in the third commissioner district is that Emil Larson is elected by a majority of something like 60 votes. The vote was very close and the result was in doubt until the whole district had reported.

Attorney Chas. Boughton, Jr., made a clean sweep down in Red Lake County for the position of County Attorney, defeating Fred Farley by a large majority.

HIGH LIGHTS ON STATE ELECTION

Farmer - Labor Candidates Giving Old Guard A Merry Chase

Henrik Shipstad, candidate for U. S Senator on the Farm-Labor ticket, carried both Hennepin and Ramsey counties. A heavy vote from northern part of the state and range country is expected will put him over the top with a safe lead. Late count shows Shipstad leading Kellogg by over ten thousand votes. While indications are that the Republican state ticket will be winner, the result will not be known until all the rural districts have been heard from. All northwest counties are polling a heavy vote for the Farmer-Labor candidates on the ticket.

Steenerson Defeated?

One of the big surprises in this district is the unexpected strength shown by Knut Wefald, Farmer-Labor opponent of Congressman Halvor Steenerson. Only an isolated precinct here and there from those reporting thus far, have returned majorities from Steenerson, and there is indication that he is defeated.

Ihle Elected Sheriff

O. L. Ihle made a clean sweep in this county in his campaign for Sheriff, winning in nearly every township. He also carried this village and Thief River. As predicted before election, there are but few changes in county officers in Pennington County, one being Ihle for Sheriff, and the other, Lorentson for Register of Deeds.

While attempting to extract a jamed shell from his 22 rifle while out hunting Tuesday, Vernon Hagglund was shot thru the left thumb when the gun was accidentaly discharged. Fortunately, the wound was thru the fleshy part of the thumb so no serious injury was sustained. Dr. Bjerken dressed the wound and the boy is getting along in good shape.

An improvement in shipping conditions has been noticed here lately, and several carlots of spuds have been shipped.

TAKEN BY SURPRISE

SYNOPSIS—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiancé. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman whom he takes to be Natalie. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiancé. Natalie, Coolidge and West plan a visit of charity. Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie for a purpose. Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but leaves. On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He thinks Coolidge was murdered. Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West, his suspicions of things not being right strengthened by his learning that Coolidge had lied about the reason for the trip to the cottage, visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon.

—7—

"Sure; but that is the way you get to know them best. Been a soldier, haven't you?"

"Yes, but what made you think that?" in some surprise at the unexpected query. The man laughed, lighting a cigar carelessly.

"Oh, it has not been so long since, that the evidence is obliterated. I've got a habit of noticing things. The way you sit, and square your shoulders told me you'd been in uniform; besides, you're the right age. Get across to France?"

"Had over a year there," wondering what the fellow could be angling after. "You didn't get in?"

"No; I was over the limit. I was thinking you might be interested in looking over a collection of war relics Mike has got stowed away here somewhere. He had two boys over there, and I reckon they must have put in most of their time gathering up souvenirs. Anyhow they brought back the greatest collection of war junk I've ever seen. Say, Mike, what did you do with those war relics the boys sent home?"

The fellow addressed leaned over the bar, his face glowing with sudden interest.

"They vas in the back-room, all spread out. Why you ask? The gentlemen would see them, what?"

"Yes; this one was a soldier himself. How is it? You fellows like to see the things?"

West hesitated for just an instant, his eyes turning unconsciously toward Sexton, who had not spoken. He felt no suspicion, merely a vague doubt as to what this invitation might conceal. Yet it had all been natural enough, and promised an opportunity for him to learn something more of the place. Besides, there could be no danger; both he and Sexton were armed, and apparently the invitation was innocently extended. To refuse to accept would be churlish.

"Certainly," he said at last, quaffing the last of his beer and rising to his feet. "It will be nothing new to me, I imagine, but we'll have a look."

The other man, who had been leaning against the bar, had disappeared, while the fellow at the table had seemingly fallen asleep. Mike came forward with a bunch of keys in his hand.

"I keep dot room locked," he exclaimed gruffly, "for some beoples run off with all dings they get their fingers on. Hey, you, Carl," and he roughly shook the sleeper into semi-consciousness, "wake up, and see to the bar awhile. I've got some business. Whoever comes, you keep them here—understand. All right, gents."

The three stood close behind him as Mike inserted the key, and opened the door. The tightly closed room, with shades drawn at the single window, was so dark that West could scarcely discern its shape and contents. Mike, without hesitation, stepped within, his great bulk blotting out whatever view there was.

"Come right in, gents," he insisted. "Von minute, an' I turn on the light."

West never understood why he responded so recklessly to this invitation, and advanced without hesitation. He had no suspicion of any trick, no conception of being in any danger. He stepped in directly behind the leader, and Sexton followed. An instant later the door closed, with the [illegible] flashed on the light. As he did so, he wheeled about, and shot one mighty clenched fist straight into West's face. This was done so suddenly, so unexpectedly, the man attacked found no opportunity to even throw up a hand in self-defense. The giant Pole flung his whole weight into the crashing blow, and the ex-soldier went down as though struck by a pole-ax. For an instant, he realized that Sexton was in a fierce struggle; that his assailant stood poised above him ready to land again if he moved; then consciousness left him entirely.

He woke up, sitting in a chair, his hands bound to the arms with strips of cloth. For a moment everything about seemed tinged with yellow, the various objects in sight vague and shapeless. It hurt him to move his head, and his mind functioned dully. He could not think, or bring back to memory a recollection of what had occurred. Yet slowly the mist cleared and the objects about him assumed natural form. He was in a room of some size—not the one in which he had been attacked, he felt sure—fitted up with a long table, and a number of chairs. There was no other furniture; the walls were bare, and only a small rag rug partially covered the floor. At first he perceived no other occupants; only as, painfully, he finally twisted his head to the right, his eyes distinguished two men seated against the wall. The sight of their faces restored instantly his memory of what had occurred. The Pole rested back, with feet on the table and eyes closed, but the other—the younger man—was watching him closely, an unlighted cigar gripped in his teeth.

"So, you've come out of it," the latter said unpleasantly. "I'd begun to think Mike had handed you a real knock-out that time. Ready to answer a few questions?"

West, his brain clearing rapidly, sat up straighter in the chair, determined to play out his part the best he could.

"Perfectly ready," he replied struggling to control his voice. "Only I should like to know what all this means? Why attack me?"

"You'll find that out soon enough, Captain; but first I'll do the questioning."

"Not until I know one thing, at least—what has become of the man who was with me?"

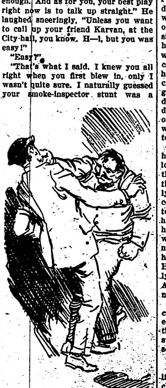
"Well, I might as well tell you," carelessly. "He got hurt; the fool compelled me to hit him with a gat; so he's out of it, and you might as well come through clean—that guy isn't going to help you any."

"You mean you killed him?"

"Well, he's out of the game; that's enough. And as for you, your best play right now is to talk up straight." He laughed sneeringly. "Unless you want to call up your friend Karvan, at the City-hall, you know. H—l, but you was easy!"

"Easy?"

"That's what I said. I knew you all right when you first blew in, only I wasn't quite sure. I naturally guessed your smoke-inspector stunt was a sham. So I ran that Fred Karvan stuff in on you. You ate it up, which gave you clean away, for I never knew any guy of that name. Do you see the point, Captain West?"



The Giant Pole Flung His Whole Weight Into the Crashing Blow.

"Yes, I see all that plainly, but it does not explain the attack on me. You evidently knew my name, and this assault has been deliberately made. Why? What have you against me?"

"Perhaps I'll tell you when you explain. What brought you into this neighborhood. Hunting some one, wasn't you?"

"Not exactly."

"Oh, don't lie; that will bring you nothing, West. You were sticking your nose into a private matter which does not concern you in any way; that's right, isn't it? Very well, you [illegible] take another. It's up to you how far we go. Now listen. I believe it was merely curiosity that brought you here. That's true, isn't it?"

"Largely, yes."

"You suspected something, and wanted to find out if it was so. Well, you came into a bad neighborhood. We are not nice to your kind around here. What really caused your seeking me?"

"I do not know that I did," West answered honestly. "In fact I haven't the slightest idea who you are."

The other laughed.

"So you are as green as that. Then I'll give you the information. My name is Hobart, Jim Hobart. I am the guy you were looking for?"

"Yes," West admitted, seeing no reason to refuse an answer.

"I thought so, although darned if I know how you ever located me here. However, the sooner we come to some understanding, the better. What do you know about me?"

"Nothing."

"Is that so! You knew my name when I spoke it. It was the Coolidge matter that sent you hunting me. You thought the girl was here, didn't you?"

"I had reason to believe she came here."

"I see; how did you gain that news?"

"A conversation by telephone was overheard."

"Now we are getting down to facts. And this comprises your entire information, doesn't it? Let's check up. You connected me with the case because you were with the uncle and her on their call Sunday. You discovered in some way that I had since disappeared from that neighborhood. Then you accidentally got on to this telephone call, and decided to run me down. Some cute little detective, I'll say. But what's the object? What is it you are trying to connect me up with. What possible cause can you have for butting in on this affair?"

"I told you before; merely curiosity."

"And who was the guy with you?"

"An old servant of the Coolidge family."

"It was mere curiosity in his case also, I presume?"

"So far as I know, yes."

Hobart smiled, showing his teeth cruelly.

"West," he said slowly, "you are a d—d good liar, but I am about to spike your gun. Go on out, Mike, and send in the first witness."

The two sat silently watching each other, Hobart pretending a carelessness he was far from feeling, uncertain as to West's real purpose. The latter realized now the true seriousness of his position, yet this only increased his belief in the reality of the crime. Previously his mind had harbored doubts, but the very fact that Hobart would resort to such desperate methods was ample proof of his apprehension of danger. If Percival Coolidge had committed suicide, this fellow would surely have nothing to fear; he could safely ignore any efforts to trap him; indeed would possess no suspicions along that line. It was his own guilty conscience which drove him to desperation. Coolidge had been murdered, and this man was either guilty of the crime, or else knew the one who was, and had personal reasons for protecting the party.

These thoughts took possession of his mind and were convincing. He no longer questioned but that he was on the track of crime, yet his thought at that moment concentrated more vividly on his own personal peril. How could he escape? What was he about to be confronted with? Nothing around him afforded inspiration. He was bound helplessly; Sexton had disappeared, whether dead or a prisoner, he did not know; the walls of the room exhibited no signs of weakness, while Hobart eyed his every movement coldly, evidently enjoying his predicament. Apparently the man comprehended the nature of his thought.

"Perfectly useless, West," he said carelessly. "This place was constructed for the purpose, and you are not the only one who has tested its strength. You will get out when I say so, and not before."

"Do you intend to say so?"

"Well, that depends," shrewdly. "Not if your release means my taking any chances. But frankly, I do not believe it will. So far as I can see you possess no particular interest in this matter—only the attraction a young fellow always feels in a pretty woman. Have I got that doped out right?"

"To an extent, at least."

"Yes, to a very large extent. Of course, curiosity also played a part, while everybody possesses a sneaking desire to do a detective act. Miss Coolidge filled you up with a lot of bunk; she was good looking, and you fell for it. Certain things happened that you failed to understand, so you rather naturally jumped to the conclusion that some crime was being concocted. That was what brought you here. Now, I take it that, ordinarily, you are a man of some sense. Consequently I mean to try to get you to drop the whole affair, as being none of your business. If you agree to this, I accept your pledge and the door opens, and [illegible]

"I will see that you are removed from all temptation; my plans are too important to be interfered with by a meddlesome fool."

"But you can scarcely expect me to give such a promise."

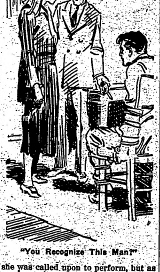
"Well, I don't know about that. It doesn't pay to be too obstinate. You have been in the army, I understand; then you are aware there is a harsh side to life, a way to make or break men. All right, now I've got the power; I can keep you locked up here; I could even kill you if necessary. You are utterly helpless. There is an argument worth your consideration. But I will give you yet another which may have even more weight."

"What?"

The door opened quietly, and then closed, leaving Natalie Coolidge standing there in the light, her eyes slightly frowning as she looked silently at the two men.

"The lady, of course," explained Hobart, rising to his feet, "you will, at least, be gentleman enough to accept her word!"

She waited, seemingly unable to grasp the situation, or realize the part she was called upon to perform, but as West failed to respond, finally asked a question.



"You Recognize This Man?"

"What is it, Jim? You sent for me?"

"Yes, as a last resort. You recognize this man?"

"Of course," indifferently; "what is he doing here?"

Hobart laughed.

"It seems the fellow hasn't taken his dismissal very seriously, Natalie," he explained, "and remains very much interested in your affairs."

"You mean he followed me here?"

"He was on the trail, but just for what particular purpose I have failed to learn; the lad is a bit close mouthed, but it looks to me as though he was in love with you."

The girl smiled, tossing her head as she stepped forward.

"In love with me," she echoed. "That is a joke, yet I had some such suspicion when I told him to quit the job. He acted like a fool then, and began to question me as though he had a right. It was that being engaged business, most likely."

"Sure; he thought he had you copped, fortune and all, and it looks to me like he needs another jolt to put the idea entirely out of his head. That is what I brought you in for. I'll explain first just how it happened. This army guy blew in here before dark, along with another fellow, Sexton.

"I was standing by the bar talking with Issy, and I was sure I knew this lad's face. I was stumped a bit at first where I had seen him; then all at once it came to me—he was the guy sitting out there alone in the automobile over on Arch street. I knew then what he was over here for, and got to talking with him. He give himself away the first thing, and that is why we got him up in this dump."

"How did he know I was here?"

"Some of your precious help out there heard you talk to me over the 'phone, and passed it on."

"And what does he want? What do these men want?"

"Well Sexton don't want much of anything—he's knocked out; the fool made a fight, and had to be hit; and, as to this bird, I rather think he was just naturally nosing around out of curiosity, and because he was stuck on you. I don't figure he is anything to be afraid of, but I am not going to have the fellow gum-shoeing around. I'll take his word to get out and stay out; otherwise he and I are going to have a little seance of our own. That's all there is about it."

West makes his choice. Watch for next installment.

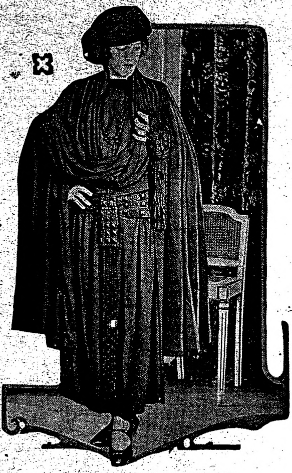
Pigeon-Flying Great Belgian Sport.

Pigeon-flying is the great sport of the working classes of Belgium. The high value set upon well-trained racing pigeons among Belgian amateurs was made evident some years ago in a case in the law courts, where the plaintiff, whose house had been taken from him for public purposes, sued for damages on account of the reduction in value of his pigeons due to the fact that they had been trained to return to the old pigeons' cote and would now have to be trained to "home" to [illegible]

COSTUMES FOR MOURNING; STYLES IN STREET DRESS

Any observer who has been conversant with fashions in America for a period of years has noted a change in the attitude of women toward the wearing of mourning. It would be interesting to analyze the motives which have led so many of them away from the use of deep mourning apparel to that which is as inconspicuous as it can be made—but this change in costumes and customs reveals a progress during which women have learned to be governed by judgment rather than to be led by sentiment.



Mourning Costume by Poiret.

In America the matter of wearing mourning, or not, is left to the judgment of the individual, without criticism of the decision one way or the other. Usually black is worn for brief periods and American mourning apparel is distinctive and elegant. It is unobtrusive and tasteful, following the most conservative lines of mode.

French mourning appears to be more dramatic than ours, if one may judge by the costume made by Poiret, as pictured here. It is designed for a widow and reveals a straight-line dress, with full skirt. The vogue for beaded girdles is appropriated and a wide one ornamented with square beads and ending in a long bead fringe, makes a wonderful point of interest in the gown. The beads are dull black. There is a full cape and long, ample scarf of the dull silk crepe used in the dress and the scarf is trimmed with bead ornaments and fringe.

The coat dress has made a permanent place for itself, apparently, re[illegible] wear on the street, with each new season to find devotees waiting to welcome it. It arrived this season made of the same materials as suits and cut on lines suggestive of coats, with those of the Russian blouse held in especially high regard. As in all street dresses, its lines are simple.

Poiret twill, tricotine, men's-wear serge, velours, gerona, marvella and other suede-like cloths share favor for street dress. Brown, in many shades, gray, taupe, castor, navy blue and black are the dominant colors. The coat-frock becomes more coatlike when it appropriates a wide fur collar and the becomingness of fur causes this to happen very often. An example appears in the handsome model illustrated here, made of gray velours. Its plain, flat belt with sash ends is a point one finds frequently repeated in suits and coat-frocks—but occasionally sash ends are omitted and a handsome metal clasp replaces them, or a silk ornament with long fringe terminates a belt of plaited silk braid.

One of the latest arrivals in street dresses is a model with a smart military cape which falls only over one shoulder, leaving the long sleeve, on the right arm, uncovered. The model has been developed in duvetine with the cape and lower portion of the skirt made of the duvetine and the bodice and sleeves of matelasse.

Fascisti in Complete Control of Italian Government With Mussolini as Premier.

JUGO-SLAVIA TALKS OF WAR

America Declines to Participate in Near East Conference but Names Her Interests—Turkish Nationalists Dethrone Sultan—Marriage of Former Kaiser Wilhelm.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE United States has declined the invitation to participate in the Near East peace conference at Lausanne, Switzerland, but will be represented by observers who will keep tab on "certain subjects of particular American concern." Do you think the United States could or should do anything more than this in the settling of the tangled affairs of the Near East?

NO VICTORY could be more complete than that won by the Fascisti in their peaceful revolution in Italy. They are now in absolute control of the government and their chief, Benito Mussolini, is premier and minister of foreign affairs and of the interior. Giolitti declined the premiership, so Mussolini at the invitation of the king took the place and promptly announced the new cabinet. Most of its members belong to the Fascisti, but several places are given to the Nationalists, one to the Democrats and one to the Catholic party. From all over the country the Black Shirts flocked to Rome where 100,000 of them paraded before the king and premier, and then, at the order of their leaders, they dispersed to their homes to resume their vocations.

Italy seems to have supreme confidence in Mussolini, believing that he will put an end to the conflicts of political factions that have sadly hindered its development during the last three years and that under his rule economic prosperity will be restored. He is young, vigorous and unpretentious and already has buckled down to hard work. Once he was a revolutionary Socialist and was expelled from Switzerland and from what was then the Austrian Tyrol. But he broke with his old associates when in his paper, Popolo Italia, he urged Italy to enter the war on the side of the allies. To the world at large the victory of Mussolini and his Fascisti is most important because it was a victory over the Communists, radical Socialists and "Reds" generally. These forces of disruption and disorder were so badly whipped that the Communist party in Italy has announced its own dissolution, which presumably means that the Communist deputies will resign from the chamber.

Mussolini, denying that his program has any chauvinistic plans, said: "Italy needs peace at home as well as abroad. I never believed in a bellicose attitude, and therefore no clash is possible between Italy and Jugo-Slavia or any other power. We want to prove that our sole ambition is to make the country a true friend toward friends and of a people strong, fair and laborious, a people worthy to live alongside the greatest nations."

Nevertheless Jugo-Slavia was greatly excited by Mussolini's triumph and talked wildly of mobilization and war. Her frontier guards were re-enforced and some fighting was reported. In Rome it was said the alarm of the Serbs was groundless.

WHEN envoys of the nations most concerned gather in Lausanne, Switzerland, on November 13, for the Near East peace conference, the United States will be represented only by "observers." We were invited to full participation, but Secretary Hughes declined, stating:

"The conference proposed for the purpose of drawing up a treaty of peace with Turkey will have primarily to deal with the problems resulting from the state of billigerency between the allied powers, Turkey, and Greece. The United States was neither at war with Turkey nor a party to the armistice of 1918, and does not desire to participate in the final peace negotiations or to assume responsibility for the political and territorial adjustments which may be effected."

At the same time Mr. Hughes said his observers would keep watch over the disposition of "certain subjects of particular American concern."

Soviet Russia was invited to take part in that portion of the conference which has to do with the Dardanelles, and while she is indignant at the limitation, she probably will accept.

THE Angora national assembly has declared the sultan of Turkey dethroned and also has condemned to death the Turkish signatories of the treaty of Sevres and the members of the cabinet of former Premier Damad Ferid Pasha. Thme sovereignty of the nation is declared to rest in the hands of the people, and the name Ottoman Empire is changed to the State of Turkey. This is virtually the proclamation of a republic, but another sultan may be elected later.

EXCEPT among the German monarchists, the marriage of the former kaiser and Princess Hermione of Reuss on November 5 has caused only amusement. Really, it is entirely unimportant, but Wilhelm spread himself so far as he could, with ludicrous pomp and proclamations in which all his lost titles appear. The ceremony was performed at Doorn and was attended by a considerable number of the faithful, including George Sylvester Viereck, the notorious pro-German American publicist. Wilhelm wanted to take his bride for a honeymoon trip outside of Holland, but the allies and the Dutch government wouldn't permit that. The "queen of Prussia," as Hermione now styles herself, seems to be a determined lady and she has announced that she will spend several months each year away from Doorn which would be too dull for continuous residence. But hubby must remain there.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY, who has been attacked repeatedly because of his alleged slowness in prosecuting the "war swindlers," has announced that preliminary investigation into 425 wartime contracts has disclosed evidence on which the government will take action. In every one of these cases, he says, either civil or criminal suits or both must be brought by the government. "Legal civil action will be taken in every case in which it has been discovered that fraud, collusion, or dishonesty was practiced," said the attorney general. "While great numbers of cases indicate on their face the worst kind of fraud and thievery, the government cannot, of course, go into court until it has established absolutely on the face of records in its possession that its case will stand the acid test. The government must be fair to itself, and fair even to those whom it would brand as crooks and profiteers, yet, every single individual, firm, or corporation involved in the cases now in the possession of the department, must satisfy the government's claims to the last penny."

PRESIDENT HARDING celebrated his fifty-seventh birthday last Thursday by going through with his usual round of official duties. The day was not forgotten, however, for telegraphic greetings came from many rulers and leaders of other countries and from innumerable friends in America. The President spent the evening quietly with Mrs. Harding, who, though recovering from her recent severe illness, is still confined to her bed.

FINAL ballyhooing for the elections this week demanded much attention from Americans during the week just closing. To predict results would be foolish. Down in Texas there was a seemingly inextricable tangle that, it was believed, would leave both major parties without any candidate for the United States senate on the ballot. The Democrats had G. E. B. Peddy, fusion candidate, barred from the ticket because he participated in the Democratic primary. This affected the 150,000 Texans who voted for Harding. Then charges were brought against E. B. Mayfield, Democratic candidate, because he was said to have been a member of the Ku Klux Klan. This has resulted in a legal complication which at this writing seems likely to keep Mayfield's name off the ballot. The fight may be carried to the senate.

MUNICIPAL elections in England, which were taken as indication of the results in the coming general elections, turned out very badly for the laborites, usually classed there as Socialists. They lost 149 seats which they had held in London and about 160 seats they had held in 80 boroughs outside the capital.

Cuba also had elections and the Liberal party scored a sweeping victory, increasing their representation in the lower house of congress so much that the administration majority is imperiled. It is worthy of note that no disturbances were reported.

PRESIDENT OBREGON of Mexico got rid of one of his most dangerous enemies last week. General Murguia, leader of the latest revolt, was caught asleep in a church at Tepehuantes and within a few hours had been court-martialed, condemned and executed by a firing squad. The haste was explained by the fact that he was seeking legal restraints to prevent an immediate trial. It was felt in Mexico City that Murguia's death brought appreciably nearer the general pacification of the country.

THREE notable men died last week. Father Bernard Vaughan, famous Jesuit preacher and brother of Cardinal Vaughan, passed away in England. Thomas Nelson Page, well-known American author and former ambassador to Italy, died in Virginia. Thomas DeWitt Cuyler of the Pennsylvania Railroad company and chairman of the Railroad Executives' association, was found dead in a private car at Philadelphia.

THE mixed claims commission, named to adjudicate war claims between the United States and Germany, is now busy in Washington. At the first sessions, with Justice Day presiding as umpire, the working system for presenting the claims was settled. The American commissioner is Judge Edwin B. Parker and the German commissioner, Dr. Wilhelm Kiesselbach.

RECENTLY the federal railway labor board rendered a majority opinion rejecting "the living wage" theory advanced by spokesmen for railway unions. If given strict application, it would give common laborers a minimum wage of about 72 cents an hour, and as a step toward this the maintenance of way men asked a 48-cent minimum. The labor board, increasing the prevailing rate 2 cents an hour, granted a minimum ranging from 25 to 37 cents an hour. It was in connection with this decision that the living wage opinion was given, the board asserting that the wage theory of labor if given application "would wreck every road, and if extended to other industries, would carry them into communistic ruin." Samuel Gompers, Edsel Ford and William Randolph Hearst all assailed this view. Their attacks rolled Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the board, and he retaliated with a stinging statement. He gave Mr. Gompers credit for sincerity, marveled at the attitude of the Hearst papers and poked fun at young Ford. He continued:

"One of the expert economists who presented the matter to the board for the employees stated that this would 'throw a monkey wrench into the industrial machinery' and that the theoretical living wage should not be established all at once, but the minimum should be made 48 cents per hour. This would likewise create a deficit of several hundred million dollars.

"The swelling tide of prosperity in our country cannot be hastened by methods of this kind."

ZOO BIRDS

"Some of the birds in the zoo," said Daddy, "decided that they would each tell something of themselves, so they would all be better acquainted.

"And so, one day, they called a meeting and each of the different birds called upon leaned forward on his perch and told something about himself.

"One of the Parrots called the meeting to order and in turn each bird told his story.

"'I,' said the Mexican Rice Grackle, 'come from the southern portions of Mexico. I have the habits of a cow bird and am fond of letting others do my work for me.

"'I am black and blue in color. Now I do not mean for a minute that I look as though I had fallen down and bruised myself.

"'No, not for a minute do I mean that. Nor do I mean it for several moments or even hours or days or weeks or months or years.

"'I do not mean it. That is all for that.

"'I have handsome black feathers and blue feathers which are so mixed together that it makes me look very fine, very fine indeed.

"'It is our custom, just as it is with the Cow Birds, to lay our eggs in others' nests.

"'We do so as a rule in the nests of the large Caciques.'

"'Yes, they do,' said a large Cacique. A Cacique is a large bird, in case you don't know," Daddy smiled. "I didn't know until I saw one in the zoo.

"Well the next speaker was a Giant Cacique, known as the Montezuma Giant Cacique.

"'I travel,' he said, 'from the southeastern parts of Mexico to Panama. Of course at present I am not taking any journeys.

"'No, I am not taking any journeys,' he repeated.

"'I can be recognized or known because I look like a very big and very enormous oriole.

"'We live in colonies. We build handsome hanging nests. Often they are four feet in length, and that is a good length.

"'We colonies of birds live in very high trees. Our beaks are reddish pink and we have some lovely brown and yellow feathers, you will notice. We two birds you see here are about the only ones of our kind in a zoo or bird house.

"'And that is all the time I am given for my story, I believe. Not having a watch, I cannot look at it and see as I've been told lecturers do.

"'I couldn't tell the time if I had a watch, though I can tell the time by the sun, and his clock!'

"'It is my turn now,' said the Double Banded Giant Cacique. 'I come from the northeastern part of Brazil. I am a very, very rare bird.

"'And I want to remain like that, mysterious and interesting. I do not tell of my ways in the wild and as I am so seldom seen people do not know of my ways nor of the family ways.

"A Bower of Twigs."

"'For when I speak of myself I mean my family too. But you know of my home and you know my name and you know that I am here.'

"'I am the Bower Bird from the eastern part of Australia,' began another bird.

"'You will notice how dark and blue my eyes are. I have a greenish yellow beak. You will notice that I am fond of pretty colors.

"'I wear an inky blue sort of suit in color. I think it's a lovely shade. One would almost feel that by touching me one would get ink over one. But not at all. It is just my color and a lovely color it really is.

"'I am named the Bower Bird because of a habit we have in our family of building a bower of twigs arranged in two upstanding opposite lines, and the tops lean toward each other.

"'It is very bower-like and lovely. Here in the zoo I only use my bower as a playground; my nest, you will see, is built in the tree.

"'But my bower is lovely,' the Bower Bird ended, and all the others agreed."

Head of the Class.

"Stan," explained the teacher, "means the place of! Afghanistan is the place of the Afghans—where they are located, you see. Hindustan is the place of the Hindus. Can anyone give me another example? How about you, James?"

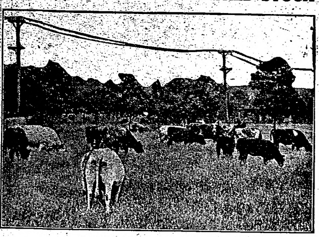
DEFINITE STATEMENT SHOWING IT PAYS TO RAISE PUREBRED STOCK



Purebred Cattle on Pasture in Virginia.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A certain number of farmers have long recognized the superiority of purebred animals over scrubs and grades. By them no exact figures were needed. There are many men, however, who demand definite statements of facts showing that it pays to raise animals of known blood lines. The United States Department of Agriculture now has statements from a large number of farmers which go to show that the experience of nearly all of more than 500 of these raisers of purebreds is in favor of these animals as profit makers.

Purebreds Far Superior.

An analysis of the large number of estimates made by these men shows that they consider purebreds of all kinds more than one-third better or more efficient than common stock. The difference seems to be most marked in the case of dairy cattle, the average dairy farmer in the list questioned considering that the cow of pure breeding was 47.8 per cent better than the common cow. The superiority of other kinds of farm stock, according to the investigation, was as follows: Poultry, 40.7 per cent; swine, 38.3; sheep, 37.8; horses, 37.2; beef cattle, 36.8, and goats, 36.8 per cent. The average superiority of all kinds of purebred stock over common stock was given as 40.4 per cent.

Cows and hens show up better than other kinds of farm animals probably because it is easier to measure their production and consequently easier to improve them. A New England dairyman attributes his increased returns from purebred dairy cows to the fact that "more attention is paid to testing and feeding. Consequently there is more weeding out of the poorer cows, which results in building up a better herd." A Florida poultryman described how by trapnesting his flock he increased the annual egg production per hen from 80 to 150. This was accomplished by selection and feeding without introducing new blood.

How do purebreds excel ordinary stock? Here are the different points in the order of their importance as listed by the Department of Agriculture: Better conformation and quality, better selling price of animals, increased production, stock more salable, more product for the feed, interest and price (results in greater returns), uniformity (factor in making sales), early maturity, ease of fattening and finishing, better prices of products, increased vigor and docility and ease of handling.

"My purebred stock," says one farmer "weigh as much at 15 months as my scrubs did at three years—a saving of 21 months in feed and labor, besides getting a better price. They are early maturing, easy keepers and good producers." A dairyman says: "My cows have more than doubled in milk production. Scrub and grade cows used to give me about 4,000 pounds of milk a year, while my purebreds average more than 8,000 pounds."

Worthy of High Price.

There appears to be a determination among experienced breeders to get sires of the desired type and breeding even at great trouble and high price, because of their faith in ultimate results. "They come high," says one breeder, "but are worth what they cost. I saw the need of better cattle and sold my scrubs and bought registered Herefords. They have more than paid for themselves." For the most part, users of purebred sires are reasonably well satisfied with them as individuals. Of 450 users, 380 report general satisfaction, 71 are satisfied except for the desire for still better, and eight are dissatisfied. In general, about 98 per cent of the owners appear to have obtained satisfactory purebreds as sires. The average estimated increase in financial returns "traceable to the use of purebred sires" was 48 per cent. The profitable results are due largely to the fact that such a sire gradually improves an entire herd or flock. Especially in the case of poultry and hogs, which multiply rapidly, a few animals of pure breeding may in a few years become the ancestors of hundreds of purebreds.

Men change their ways of doing things for various reasons. The farmers questioned by the department changed to purebred animals as a result of various influences, but principally as a result of reading, observation, talks with county agents, lessons learned at meetings and institutes, sales, fairs, shows, home influence, college instruction, natural liking for good animals, live-stock club work, and various other reasons. "As a boy," said one stockman, "I saw that my father never would make a success with scrubs."

NEW LIGHT SHED ON CAUSES OF CORN ROT

Diseases Found Distributed Throughout the Corn Belt.

Diseases Can Be Greatly Reduced by Properly Balancing Fertilizing Elements in Soil and by Using Selected Seed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The severity of the root, stalk, and ear rots of corn, diseases found to be more or less widely distributed throughout the corn belt, can be greatly reduced by properly balancing the fertilizing elements in the soil and by planting selected strains of corn.

These conclusions are the result of investigations carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with a number of state experiment stations.

In the past it was not thought that the corn plant was particularly sensitive to the balance of the various elements in the soil, but now the damage caused by these rots is believed to depend largely upon these conditions and upon climatic factors. Also the nature of the plant itself—what plant breeders call the genetic composition—has much to do with its susceptibility or resistance to these rots. In the experimental fields self-fertilized strains of corn of many different varieties are showing peculiarities formerly regarded as symptoms of root, stalk, and ear rots, and many strains are being isolated which, even though self-fertilized for many generations, show resistance to the organisms associated with the rots.

Reducing the losses from these rots is a complex problem, requiring much more investigation. At present the department can go little farther than to say that primarily it involves a careful consideration of environment, soil fertility, and the nature of the particular strains of corn.

MOST DAMAGE TO MACHINERY

Water Seeping Into Bearings and Forming Coat of Rust Around Journals Is Harmful.

The greatest damage to any machine standing in the weather is caused by water seeping into the bearings and forming a coat of rust around the journals. This rust must be broken when the machine starts operating, and causes much heavier draft and rapid wear because the journal will not become entirely smooth and bright until the metal has worn down to the depth of rusting.

Take a large nozzled oil can, draw some of the heavy oil, 600 W Steam Cylinder, from the gearcase of the automobile and fill each harvester bearing full and around the ends. This coats the journal so that it will scarcely rust at all. Then paint the knives and wooden parts, also knotter bills, sprockets, latches and other bright parts with asphaltum. Next year all you need to do is squirt kerosene into the bearings and over the wearing parts to cut out the grease and asphaltum, wipe clean with cotton waste or old rags, oil well and the machine will start off smoothly and easily. Be sure and oil well after using kerosene, as kerosene is the greatest destroyer of lubricants readily available, and the journals will run dry enough to cut in a very short time if the operator is not careful.

ALFALFA PASTURE FOR HOGS

There Is No Form of Grass That Produces Gain at Such Low Cost as Does This Legume.

Alfalfa pasture should be found on every farm where hogs are kept. There is no form of pasture that produces the gain at such a low cost as does alfalfa. One acre of alfalfa will produce, when fed with grain equaling 1 per cent to 2 per cent of the live weight, between five and six hundred pounds of pork with very little or no labor cost outside of the first cost of seeding. Mature sows thin in flesh have often gained as high as one-half pound per day on alfalfa alone.

Electrical Fixtures

We handle a variety of electrical globes and fixtures. Anything not in stock can be procured in short order. Electric irons in all well known makes, also other appliances.

Get a few electric lamps and a couple fuse plugs to have on hand in case of emergency. The cost is small, and the convenience is great.

Extra iron cord, lamp cord in both silk and cotton cover, also black insulated wire on hand.

NEW SOURCE OF PAPER PULP

East African Bamboo, of Which Immense Supplies Are Available, Said to Answer Purpose.

East African bamboo, one of the latest sources from which it has been found that paper pulp may be obtained, grows on the plateaus and mountains of the colony of Kenya, at an altitude of 7,500 to 11,000 feet. These forests cover large areas, in some cases many square miles in extent. The largest of these are located in the Kikuyu and Mau escarpments, the Aberdare mountains, the slopes of Mount Kenya and Mount Elgon.

The distance of these forests from the railroads is one of the difficulties which must be overcome, if they are to be thoroughly developed, the nearest of them being three miles from transportation facilities. They are well supplied, however, by many streams of sufficient depth and power to float logs down to central points.

Native labor is plentiful, but because of the high altitude at which the forests are located the Africans who live in the warmer parts of the country have difficulty in acclimating themselves to the cooler temperature. Once accustomed to the change of climate, however, the natives do not object to working in the cold districts. For Europeans, of course, the climate is ideal.

How Aluminum Occurs.

Aluminum is not found in a pure form, but in combination, chiefly as an oxide in the mineral corundum (ruby, sapphire and emery); hydrated oxide in bauxite, hydrargillite and diaspore; hydrated phosphate in wavellite; hydrous sulphate in combination with potash in alunite and in combination with oxygen and metals as aluminates, as in spinel, chrysoberyl and gahnite. It also is found as a silicate in various clays. Its chief ore is bauxite.

ODD IDEA ABOUT LIGHTNING

In Olden Times Death From Stroke Was Considered a Direct Favor From Gods.

Although thunderstorms have been numerous this summer and lightning severe, the reported number of persons struck has been comparatively small. However, deaths due to lightning are more numerous than is thought by most persons. In one recent year, for which reports were gathered and published by the United States weather bureau, 563 persons were killed by sky bolts.

In the olden days, when superstition held greater sway, it was believed that death by lightning was an especial mark of favor from the gods. In the rare cases when lightning struck without fatal effects the survivors were held in high honor as having been touched directly by supernatural powers. Of those who died it was said their bodies were preserved forever.

But, naturally, there was no lively yearning among the ancients for such honors, enjoyed in the flesh or post-humously. Charms against lightning were in demand, although it must have puzzled the logical Greek or Roman to reconcile the wearing of such fetiches with the belief that lightning-struck persons were beloved of Jupiter and his lesser lights. Images of the eagle and the sea calf and pictures of the laurel were held in high esteem as preservatives against lightning.

REALLY HAD GRIEVANCE

Heavily laden with bundles and intent on further incumbering herself before ending a shopping tour on F street, a lady of avoirdupois strolled by the store windows at a leisurely pace, blissfully ignorant that a diminutive newsboy impatiently was awaiting a chance to pass her in the same direction and hurry on to make a sale.

Suddenly the portly lady halted before a display of millinery or something so abruptly that the newsie collided with her forcibly, jarring loose from her grasp one of the packages.

Chivalry, harking back to the days when knighthood was in flower, prompted the young American immediately to exclaim, "Excuse me, lady," the while picking up the fallen bundle. The Twentieth century sense of right was not to be downed, however, and the urchin added, not insulently:

"But y' oughter 've given me the stop signal sooner!"—Washington Star.

ABOUT FRAN

By MOLLIE MATHER

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

The village street baked in the sunshine. Phyllis sighed impatiently, as she looked up at her husband.

"I just can't stand it," she said. "I wish that you had not accepted the call to teach in this desolate spot. The discouraging thing for me is that you have learned to love your school, Bob."

Bob Edmunds leaned forward eagerly. "Yet, before we were married you agreed that it would be best to grow with a place, Phyl. My opportunity is here in Boliver. As the place grows we shall be successful and happy."

Phyllis touched his hand placatingly. "Poor old Bobs," she said, "I am a disappointment. If I only had one pleasing woman companion with whom to 'invite my soul,' I'd try to be resigned."

"I suggested Fran—" Bob began. His wife interrupted. "Will you never be content until your favorite sister is one of our household?"

"At present, I am thinking of you, Phyl," he patiently replied. "Fran is such merry company. Why, she'd find pleasure for herself and make happiness for others too in a barren desert. She has sympathy and understanding."

"Enough," laughed Phyllis, "Fran's sympathy and propensity for making others happy has often led to disaster. You know that she has willfully flirted all her life. My own brother was one victim. And I believe he has not yet recovered from his attachment. And does Fran care? Not a bit. Out for new worlds to conquer."

"You wrong my sister, always," Bob Edmonds objected. "It is her very lack of conceit which makes her blind to men's admiration."

Phyllis considered. "Of course," she admitted, "I like Fran."

"David," Phyllis went on, "is quite the best man I have ever known. Not barring you, Bob."

Up the garden path toward them came a young woman. Breathlessly she deposited a traveling bag on the porch steps.

"Welcome me, brother and sister," remarked Fran the invincible, "I have arrived."

They questioned, even as they obediently welcomed. "How ever did you happen to come—this long distance and unexpected?"

"I," returned Fran calmly, "am always unexpected." She smiled. Immediately she was at home.

David came as was his custom, just as the stars were showing and Phyllis had finished her supper work. Then the three could sit on the little porch —Phyllis, her husband, and his friend. David was very silent on this particular evening, when Phyllis presented a rosily fresh and smiling sister-in-law. Fran, as usual, was quite at ease.

"How nice," she remarked, "to have you here to make a party of four."

They did frequently make a party of four. At least, that is how it began. Later, the party decreased to two.

"David is falling in love," wailed Phyllis, "I know the symptoms."

Fran came into the room. Perplexedly she regarded each troubled face. "Has the school principal been removed?" she questioned, "or has Phyl's teacake fallen?"

"Fran," Phyllis asked, "are you playing with David, or are you in love with him? We want to know."

Fran sank into the wicker chair. "Since you put it thus frankly," she returned with her engaging smile, "I am in love with David."

Phyllis was hugging her while Bob wrung her hand.

"And you will stay with us forever," rejoiced Phyllis. From their embrace Fran wriggled and a diamond ring dropped to the floor. Phyllis picked it up. Blushing, Fran slipped the ring to the engagement finger.

"Now, that the cat—or rather the ring—is out of the bag, I may as well wear it," she remarked.

Phyllis stared. "How long have you had the ring, Fran?"

"Oh," she stammered, "I—I've had it about a year. You see, I've been engaged for a year. But I could not make up my mind to marry."

"Do you mean to tell us," her sister-in-law accused, "that all the time you have allowed David Bronson to take you around, that all the time you have acted as though you cared for him, you have been engaged, debating as to whether you would marry the man who gave you that ring, or whether—"

"I shall marry the man who gave me the ring," Fran announced with sudden decision.

"What," said Bob sternly, "am I to tell David my friend?"

That young man entering the room of distress, Fran signaled him. The signal was given with the flashing ring.

"David," she replied, "will, perhaps, tell you."

"Fran would not allow me to announce our engagement before," David explained with a smile. "She wanted to be doubly sure of the state of her heart. We came to know each other the summer she spent with her aunt in a town I was trying out for practice. It was at Fran's suggestion that I sent for you to come here, Bob. Fran thought that she would like to keep you and Phyl as neighbors."

"Don't hug me again," cried Fran to her repentant relatives. "David can do that."

An Important Part Of Fall HOUSECLEANING

Clean your electric bulbs and fixtures thoroughly and carefully. This is an economic measure as well as a feature of good housekeeping. In order to get full value of the current you are useing, let the light gleam through clear, shinning glass.

TO CLEAN LAMP BULBS
Remove them from fixture. Wipe the glass part with a danp cloth and polish with dry cloth.

TO CLEAN FIXTURES
Remove glass shades and wash in warm, soapy water. It may be necessary to use a small brush. The inverted bowls of semi-inderect lights should be wiped with a hot, damp cloth and a little non-scratching cleaning powder.

Shirred silk shades can sometimes be cleaned by brushing well, first with a dry brush, then with a brush dipped in lukewarm suds, and drying at once with a soft towel. Delicate and expensive shades should be dry cleaned.

Polish brass and other metal parts, and wipe with a dry cloth the long, silk cords on floor and table lamps. Use a furniture polish on mahogany finished lamh bases.

THAT WORD "TREMENDOUS"

The idea of fear and trembling underlies the formation of the word "tremendous." The English word tremble is a close kin, by way of the French language, to the Low Latin word "tremulo."

The Latin word "tremendus" literally meant something that ought to cause trembling, that is to say, fear, either because of the size of the object so designated or because of size added to other fearful qualities.

At first applied to physical objects alone, the word was gradually extended to immaterial things, such as issues, movements, passions or other attributes of the workings of nature or of man. But the origin of the word is the primitive sense of fear at mere size.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

UNIQUE TREASURE HUNT

Otto Kiep, librarian of Ottendorf, found among his family archives many references to a treasure supposed to have been buried by Stortebecker, a notorious pirate. Herr Kiep examined the ecords of several medieval castles and, by deductive reasoning, pitched upon one near Neustadt.

Choosing a likely spot on this site, he secretly dug there, and actually found a chest of gold pieces. He reinterred the chest, and is seeking the promise of the owner of the estate that he shall receive the legal tariff in return for his disclosure of the hiding place. He now believes that this treasure was cached by another pirate, and is bending new efforts toward finding the Stortebecker hoard.—Scientific American.

60 LOSE LIVES IN PENN. MINE

Explosion Occurs in Pit Mine Soon After Men Start Work for Day.

BODIES ARE SCATTERED

Exact Number in Mine at Time of Tragedy Is Unknown—31 Rescued From Gas-Filled Mine Are Expected to Recover.

Spangler, Pa.—Between 50 and 60 miners were killed in the Reilly mine of the Reilly Coal company, near here, according to an official estimate made public by rescue workers and company officials.

This estimate was arrived at after rescue workers who had searched the explosion-wrecked mine for many hours reported they believed there were no more survivors in the workings.

31 Are Rescued.

Thirty-one rescued men are in the Spangler hospital.

Officials of the company are still uncertain as to the exact number of men who went to work just a short time before the blast.

They believe that the total was between 90 to 95.

Rescue men who had attempted to count the bodies they stumbled over declared they counted approximately 50, but said it is probable that a few more men perished in the unexplored chambers.

Rescued Mostly Young.

Thirty-one blanched survivors from the mine—most of them young men—lay on a double row of cots in the miners' hospital here, anxiously watching the entrance to the big room. They were the known survivors of the 94 miners who went into the mine a few minutes before a terrific explosion.

Their vigil began when the first eight were brought to the hospital. The entrance of stretcher bearers meant that another comrade had been dragged from an underground sea of gas.

Blast in Heart of Mine.

At 7:30 o'clock in the morning the explosion occurred in the heart of the mine. As soon as miners from the neighboring pits could reach the mine preliminary work of rescue began, and it was supplemented later in the day by trained engineers from the United States bureau of mines in Pittsburgh, and the rescue crews of neighboring mines.

The rescue men all told the same story as they came to the surface. They declared that bodies were scattered through the working for more than 500 feet.

"The sad part of it," said one sturdy miner, "is that at least 20 of the victims were within 100 feet of fresh air when they were overcome by the gas."

Kin Throng Scene.

Men, women and children by the score crowded the police lines near the shaft. Many of them had been there since they heard the explosion early in the day, and there was no indication they would leave their post until the last body had been brought out.

"On the cot of honor" at the hospital rests a youth of 22. His name is Abe Craig. His coolness saved at least a dozen lives.

ALLIES WANT TURK RESPECT

Paris—The French and British governments, in full accord, will insist that the Angora government respect the terms of the Mudania armistice, and instructions to the high commissioners in Constantinople have been drawn up in that spirit.

It is expected in French circles that the Angora authorities will accept the viewpoint of the allies.

This expectation was based upon the fact that the Turks, through excessive exactions, would risk the cooling of friendships that would be most valuable to them at Lausanne and, after Lausanne, when Turkey faces financial problems.

It is thought possible that a compromise may be effected under which the Kemalists would be allowed to send functionaries to Constantinople and perhaps some gendarmes to maintain order in the Turkish quarter.

Can't Send in Troops.

The allies, however, will refuse all requests of the Turks to send troops before the signing of peace.

Premier Poincare and Lord Curzon, the British foreign secretary, are exchanging views with regard to the Angora note respecting foreign warships and the railroads, and probably will agree upon an early reply.

MacSwiney's Sister Hunger Strikes.

Dublin—A bulletin issued by the Republicans states that Miss Mary MacSwiney, who was arrested by the Free State military, has been hunger-striking since she was taken into custody. A letter said to have been found after her arrest reads: "If imprisoned, I will hunger strike. I don't know whether they will let me die, but if they do, pray for me that I may be brave as those who have gone before me." Mary MacSwiney is a sister of the late Terrence MacSwiney, lord mayor of Cork.

MARCHIONESS CURZON

Another fair American may be added soon to the list of British duchesses. It will be the Marchioness Curzon, whose husband retains his place as foreign secretary under Premier Law. It is reported that Lord Curzon will be advanced to a dukedom by King George. Lady Curzon, a native of Alabama, is the daughter of the late J. Monroe Hinds, former American ambassador to Brazil.

MANY KILLED IN STORM

200 Ships Beached—Scores Wrecked at Sea.

Paris—More than 200 fishing boats were driven ashore and scores lost at sea in a terrific tempest sweeping the coasts of France, Spain and Portugal, according to a dispatch received here.

Heavy loss of life is certain. The heavy liners Manchuria, Majestic, George Washington and Minnedosa were reported riding the storm safely.

The Royal American wirelessed that it had saved the French sailing ship Cygne from being shipwrecked after the latter had been in distress 11 days.

The hurricane is one of the most severe that has struck France, Portugal and Spain in many years.

A year ago the Spanish steamer Isabel was wrecked in a southwest European hurricane near Villagarcia, Spain, on Jan. 1, 1921, with a loss of 214 lives.

TURKS BURY PRIESTS ALIVE

Wells Reported Filled With Bodies of Girls Who Drowned Selves.

Washington—The Greek metropolitan and 10 priests, captured by the Turks at Aivialy, were buried alive because they refused to embrace Islamism, according to a cablegram received from Athens by the Greek legation.

Word also has been received in Athens, the message said, that all Greeks who remained in Aivialy and on the islands of Moschenissia have been massacred, and that wells in the vicinity "are filled with the bodies of young girls" who drowned themselves to escape from the Turks.

Christians in Smyrna between the ages of 18 and 50, the legation was informed, have been deported and forced to hard labor, hundreds dying from hunger and fatigue.

CATTLE RUSTLERS ACTIVE

Deputy Sheriffs Sent to Round Up Thieves—Arrests Expected.

Minneapolis—Wild west days of cattle rustling and horse stealing, with a sheriff's posse galloping over the hill in pursuit of the thieves, all prepared for a neck-tie party, were reenacted with a few 1922 modifications when a half dozen Hennepin county deputy sheriffs started out in automobiles to round up a cattle rustling gang.

"Widespread cattle stealing has been reported by farmers in Hennepin, Wright, McLeod and Scott counties," Chief Deputy John P. Wall said, "and the present roundup is to be aimed at the principal gang.

"Warrants have been issued and at least six arrests are expected.

MOB BATTLES COAL GUARDS

Boy, 14, Shot When Detectives Open Fire After Coal Bombardment.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Several hundred men, women and children of Creektowaga battled with Lehigh Valley railroad detectives who were defending three carloads of anthracite coal which had been mysteriously dumped near the Williams street city line when a freight train came to a stop.

Fourteen year old John Disskowski was shot in the left leg when the detectives opened fire after they had been bombarded with coal thrown by persons engaged in carting off the fuel.

Five Rescued by Firemen.

Minneapolis—Trapped in the Odd Fellows hall here by smoke which cut off the only exit, five members of the lodge were rescued by firemen through a second story window.

E. R. Stedman, Joe Dypwick, J. W. Davis, George Helges and A. W. Markley were in the lodge meeting room when the fire was discovered. Both the telephones, in an adjoining room, and the stairway were cut off by thick smoke. The fire alarm was sent in by a pedestrian called from the window. The fire, believed by firemen to have [illegible]

TURK SULTANATE NOW ABOLISHED

Nationalist Assembly Assume All Executive and Legislative Powers.

Constantinople—New Turkey has abolished the sultan.

The nationalists assembly at Angora has passed a law suppressing the Turkish sultanate and the law of succession to the throne. The present sultan, descendant of a thousand absolute monarchs, is to be the last of his line.

A caliph who will take over the holy duties hitherto exercised by the sultan as prophet of the Moslem world, is to be elected periodically. His office is to be of the church, not the state.

The national assembly will hold all the power in Constantinople and throughout Turkey, according to the new law.

Two resolutions were unanimously adopted by the assembly. The first said that by virtue of organic statute and representation sovereign rights had been vested in an inalienable and indivisible manner on the moral person of the Angora assembly, which was the only emanation of the nation. The second resolution declared the caliphate was vested in the imperial family of the Osman dynasty, but that the Turkish government remains the keystone of the caliphate.

The selection of the caliphs is to be made by the grand national assembly of Turkey which will choose that member of the imperial family, the resolution provides, who is the best instructed, the best educated, the most honest and the wisest.

Salute of 100 guns roared out in celebration of the law's passing. Kaisim Kairabekir Pasha was immediately dispatched from Angora to Constantinople to give the sultan opportunity to resign, and to take over the city administration in the name of Mustapha Kemal's nationalists.

U. S. WANTS DEBTS PAID

President Flatfooted Against Any International Debt Confab.

Washington — President Harding made it clear that the United States is not going to be swerved from its position relative to the foreign war debt by propaganda which is active both in this country and abroad.

The president, it was learned, thinks that there is much buncombe being circulated here about forcing collection of the foreign debt. His advisers say that the president would be grateful to learn from men who are insisting on collection of the debt how they would go about executing their proposals.

The administration knows that the only possible way to force collection of the war debt would be to go to war and that the United States is not going to do.

"It would be a fine thing to know," said an administration spokesman, "what these very wise men who are insisting upon collection of the foreign debt would do to collect the debt.

"It is a difficult problem and one that requires patience. It must be a matter of negotiation and adjustment.

"Some powers believe that cancellation of the debts is the solution of the problem. This government does not hold that view. It does not regard the situation as distressing and intends to be as considerate and helpful as possible, clinging strenuously to the position that the debts of the various nations to the United States are national obligations that must be met whenever it is possible to meet them."

THANKSGIVING DAY IS SET

"Day Summons All America to Serve" —Harding.

Washington—President Harding in his annual Thanksgiving proclamation, calls upon the people of the country to continue "to make our own great fortune a means of helping and serving as best we can, the cause of all humanity."

"Let us in all humility acknowledge how great is our debt to the providence which has generously dealt with us and give devout assurance of unselfish purpose to play helpful and ennobling parts in human advancement," the proclamation read.

"In spite of the consequences of the recent war, our country," the president said, has been "at peace and has been able to contribute toward the maintenance and perpetuation of peace in the world."

The president ended his proclamation:

"Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, president of the United States of America, do designate Thursday, the 30th day of November, as a day of thanksgiving, supplication and devotion."

Demand Canadian Grain Embargo.

Washington—Western grain shipping interests, supported by American Farm Bureau Federation, demand an embargo on the shipment of Canadian grain through the United States during the present traffic congestion.

Coal Gas Kills One.

Minneapolis—Mrs. Vera Wilde is dead, her husband, Joseph, is critically ill, and their two small children are in a serious condition, victims of coal gas which filled their home while the family was sleeping.

TORNADO STRIKES THREE STATES

$1,000,000 Damage to Oklahoma Oil Fields and Many Killed.

Kansa City, Mo.—Between 12 an 15 persons are reported dead, score are injured and property loss, which it is estimated will run into the million as result of a tornado and windstorm which struck Oklahoma, Colorado and Kansas.

According to meager reports reaching here by way of private telegraph wires from Drumwright, Okla., a small town 60 miles from Tulsa, between 6 and 10 persons were killed there and in nearby towns when the tornado struck.

Many persons are reported to have been injured at Shamrock, Okla., 15 miles west of Tulsa, with heavy destruction of property. Owing to the scope and intensity of the storm which has disabled nearly all lines of communication, details of the extent of the daamge is lacking.

Near Cushing, Okla., the oil camp of the Roxana Oil company was blown away by the storm and four workers of the company were killed, according to officials of the company.

Destruction of a large number of buildings at Mannford, 50 miles west of Tulsa, with loss of life, by the storm was reported by the telegraph operator at Keystone, six miles from Mannford.

Two persons were killed and four others injured in a tornado and hail storm which struck Carr Crossing, north of Sugar City, Colo.

A storm hit at Oilton, about 18 miles from Cushing and took a number of lives. This storm came out of the southwest, and wrecking havoc here, struck at Olive also.

Reports reaching here from Olive were that the town was demolished. Unconfirmed reports said a number were dead and injured but no details were available. The damage at Olive and vicinity will reach $500,000.

Folowing the tornado a heavy snowstorm swept over portions of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona, tying up traffic and demoralizing wire communication.

TURKS TAKE CONSTANTINOPLE

Peace Pact Torn Up By Kemalists, Christians Fear Massacre.

Constantinople — The Nationalist government is in control of Constantinople. The representative of the Angora government, has ordered the Allied troops to evacuate.

An Allied extraordinary council has decided to refuse the Nationalist demand.

The Turks have torn up the Mudania armistice convention and are advancing into the Chanak area occupied by the British and other neutral zones.

Since the Nationalist administration is declared to have been established and in celebration of this, masses of excited Turks have been engaged in disorders. Students marched against the palace and riotous mobs engaged in such manifestation that it became necessary for the Allied police to fire on them, several of the Turks being killed or wounded.

The Christians in the Stamboul quarter are seeking shelter and protection from what they plainly feared—a Turkish massacre.

The landing of Allied or American sailors from the warships will not be permitted unless by special permission of the Angora government. This announcement is made in one of the additional notes which Hamid Bey handed to the Allied commissioners.

The new government authorities issued orders that all disturbances should be rigorously put down.

The Allied high commissioners accepted the new regime and there was nothing left for the Sultan's ministry but resignation from office.

PROBE DEATH OF GRID FAN

Companions on Trip to Witness Football Battle at U. of M.

Winona—While a party of University of Wisconsin students were witnessing the Minnesota-Wisconsin football game at Northrop field, Winona county authorities were endeavoring to clear up mysterious circumstances surrounding the finding of one of the members of their motor party on the railroad tracks near Stockton, his body so badly mangled that identification was difficult.

The dead man is George Butler Lilly, a fraternity brother. His companions who continued to Minneapolis said that their motor trip from Madison was interrupted at Utica, Minn., where their automobile broke down at midnight. While they were endeavoring to make repairs, Butler, they said, disappeared. Although they searched for four hours, no trace of him was found. A section hand found the mangled body on the Northwestern tracks at Stockton, 14 miles from Utica.

Windom—Citizens of Windom will have a special ballot to vote at the election on which they will be asked to give the city council the authority to purchase for $15,000 the waterpower rights on the Des Moines river at this point. It is proposed to establish a hydro plant to be operated in conjunction with a steam plant for furnishing electricity.

Austin—White Leghorn pullets from the Brookholm Farms, near here, will be used to establish a flock for the university farms at Morris. A representative of the state university was here to inspect poultry for the new university farm.

Duluth—Following an executive session, the board of St. Louis county commissioners reached a "gentleman's agreement" whereby the 1923 county tax rate will be increased about one mill.

Hibbing—A case in court here is of interest not alone to the village of Hibbing, but to the state at large, since on its results hinges an interpretation never before sought of the state veterans' preferment act. The case was filed in district court on behalf of Lester Atkinson, former weighmaster of the village, who was summarily dismissed last August. The village of Hibbing is made defendant and Atkinson claims $600 back salary on the ground he is still legally an employe of the village.

Red Wing—The fire department has raised funds to install a radio apparatus at central station, and special arrangements will be made to accommodate a large number of people at one time. "We want it understood," Chief Gross said, "that men, women and children of Red Wing will be welcome to 'listen in' at central station at all times."

Duluth—Increases in salary, retroactive to Oct. 1, and affecting about 12,000 employees of the Oliver Iron Mining company, were announced by Pentecost Mitchell, vicepresident of the corporation.

Minneapolis—With the appointment of a commission to appraise the land and assess the cost, the acquisition of Rice lake and the lands along Minnehaha creek from the lake to the falls for park purposes, is under way. This includes about 200 acres and cost of acquisition will be $250,000. The entire project, including the improvements will cost $1,000,000.

Duluth—Plans for a new $1,000,000 city hall are now in the hands of architects. Details of the new structure will be referred to the people of the city for suggestions.

Minneapolis—Munsingwear corporation is negotiating for the purchase of Wayne Knitting mills and the Thieme Brothers company silk mills of Fort Wayne, Ind., according to reports.

Appleton—The 12th annual Minnesota meeting of the Yellowstone Trail association was conducted here. This is the seventh in a series of 14 state conventions. Henry Orme of St. Paul, Minnesota member of the national executive committee for 1922 presided.

Hibbing—Canadian whisky is being brought into northern Minnesota by airplane and distributed to the numerous cities by automobile, according to Judge Thomas F. Brady. Police officials of several range towns have combined their efforts to halt the flood of illicit liquor into this district.

Minneapolis—The University farm school, department of botany, has been appointed an experiment station for the National Gladioli society, and some interesting exhibits will be entered from the department in the Twin City Flower show at the Kenwood Armory, Nov. 11-[illegible]

Eveleth—Safety measures at every mine in the county are responsible for bringing the number of accidents down to 19 for the fiscal year as against 26 in 1921.

Duluth—An urgent appeal for the shipment of 800,000 tons of hard coal to Duluth and the head of the lakes before the end of the navigation season to carry out the original pledge of this district was telegraphed to Washington authorities by Congressman O. J. Larson.

St. Paul—Dr. Elias J. Durand, professor of botany at the University of Minnesota and internationally known authority on botanical subjects, died at his home here after a long illness. An operation last summer failed to bring relief, and Dr. Durand had been failing since.

Minneapolis—Complete returns on Minneapolis registration brought the total up to 145,506 names or within 5,000 of the registration for the presidential election two years ago.

Duluth—The city fuel committee at its next meeting will make plans for the gathering and distribution of wood from forests near Duluth, it was announced by Major F. S. Snively.

Virginia—Organizaton of several purebred sire associations will soon be perfected throughout this district, according to plans announced by County Agent, August Neubauer.

Minneapolis—The Last Man's club of the 151st Field artillery held its annual meeting here. About 25 members are expected and letters will be read from members now scattered throughout the country.

Hibbing—For the first time in the history of the state at this time of the year there is no water in the swamps in the northern part of the state. The swamps are dry and fires in the low places burn stubbornly. Overdrainage of these lands is believed to be the cause.

Deer River—A virulent form of diphtheria is reported raging in the north settlement, and one child, died after a short illness. According to the investigations made by the state laboratory, the cases are those of black diphtheria.

Minneapolis—The Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., has installed 100,000 telephones in this city. This announcement was made by local officials. Minneapolis now ranks fifth in number of telephones in use in the U. S.

Canby—A number of farmers in this vicinity report that wolves have made raids on their sheep herds, killing a number of the animals.

Fergus Falls—The freight cars ordered to the West by the Interstate Commerce commission will arrive too late to save the potato crop as the shippers will not risk sending out potatoes in ordinary box cars so late in the season. This was the situation in the potato country as revealed to O. P. B. Jacobson, chairman of the Railroad and Warehouse commission, and N. J. Holmberg, commissioner of agriculture, on the first day of their tour in which they covered Alexandria, Carlos, Henning, Parkers Prairie and Fergus Falls.

Faribault — Minnesota's longest stretch of paved highway, reaching 175 miles from Faribault northward through St. Paul, Minneapolis, St. Cloud and Little Falls, is now completed. Road builders have poured the last batch of concrete on Trunk Highway No. 1 paving near Westcott. Celebrations will be held at various towns on the highway Nov. 9, 10, 11 and 12

St. Paul—A bid is being made by the Twin Cities to secure the proposed Brotherhood of American Yeomen community building for orphan children for this state. Minnesota has a good chance of securing this institution, according to officers of the association, providing the citizens of the state show proper interest. The Yeomen's plan includes building a town for the care of orphan children. The program provides that within 10 years the institution will have 150 houses accommodating 15 children in each home, together with their guardian or foster parents. The project will require an investment of $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 which will be provided by assessments on the 300,000 members throughout the country.

Crystal—Fire of unknown origin caused a $30,000 loss at the Elmhurst Dairy farm, Crystal village, bringing the total loss in mysterious dairy farm fires to approximately $240,000 in a year. Authorities have decided that firebugs are to blame for at least three of the five blazes.

MARKETS HOLD STRONG

Grains Climb to Profit Making Heights.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended Nov. 3, 1922.

DAIRY PRODUCTS: Butter markets firm at steady prices during the week. Production decreasing; supplies on market, especially on fancy garden, somewhat limited. High prices of top scores have turned more interest to medium and under grades. Withdrawals from storage heavy. Closing prices 92 score butter: New York 49½c; Chicago 43½c; Cheese markets barely steady, undertone unsettled. Prices do not show much change from week ago but trading is slow and mostly confined to small lots of goods for immediate needs. Prices at Wisconsin primary cheese markets Nov. 1: Twins 25⅝; Daisies 25¼, Double Daisies 24⅝, Young Americas 25½, Longhorns 25¼, Square Prints 25¼.

GRAIN: Grain prices had a higher tendency during the week, but the advances were not maintained due to liquidation and the close was only fractionally higher than a week ago. Bullish factors were removal of hedges against export sales, improved milling and flour demand, and bullish private reports on crops and world conditions. Wheat market narrow on the [illegible], with fluctuations rapid and close [illegible]gular. Flour demand northwest re[illegible]ted active but transportation conditions restricting business. Corn nervous and affected largely by action of wheat. Car situation reported somewhat improved. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.21; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.18; No. 3 white oats 43c. Average farm prices: No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa 58c; No. 2 hard winter wheat in central Kansas 98c; No. 2 dark northern wheat in central North Dakota 96c. Closing future prices: Chicago December wheat $1.15½; Chicago Dec. corn 68c; Minneapolis Dec. wheat $1.12⅛; Kansas City Dec. wheat $1.08; Winnipeg Dec. wheat 99½c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: At Chicago all classes of livestock showed declines for the week. Hog prices were 30 to 60c off; light weight hogs declining most. Beef steers declined 15 to 40c; butcher heifers were steady to 50c lower; cows 15 to 20c and feeders 25 to 50c off. Veal calves declined 75c net for the week. Fat lambs 50 to 65c; feeding lambs generally 50c and yearlings 25 to 65c lower. Ewes were practically unchanged. On Nov. 3 Chicago hog prices steady with Thursday's best time. Beef steers slow, weak; veal calves 25 to 50c lower; stockers and feeders weak to 25c off other classes steady. Nov. 3, Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $8.65; bulk, of sales $8 to $8.55; medium and good beef steers 8.85 to $11.65; butcher cows and heifers 3.50 to $10; feeder steers 5 to $7.75; light and medium weight veal calves 7.75 to $10.25; fat lambs 12.50 to $14; feeding lambs 12.25 to $13.85; yearlings 9.25 to $12.35; fat ewes 4.50 to $7.75. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Oct. 27th were: Cattle and calves 184,473; hogs 13,552; sheep 198,153. All classes of fresh meat in eastern wholesale markets declined during the week. Veal weak to $1 lower; veal and pork loins weak to $2 lower and mutton weak to $3 lower while lamb ranged from $2 to $4 down per 100 lbs. On Nov. 3, beef was 50c to $1 lower at New York, weak elsewhere; veal and mutton weak, barely steady; lamb $1 to $2 lower at New York, weak at Philadelphia and steady at Boston. Nov. 3rd prices good grade meats: Beef $15-17; veal $15-18; lamb $20-25; mutton $13-1[illegible]; light pork loins $22-26; heavy loins $17-22.

American Farm Bureau

W. R. Giles of Kimbolton Taking Home Improved Trumbull Seed Wheat.

Improvement of varieties of wheat grown by their members is a project of a number of county farm bureaus in Ohio. The standardization on a small number of these varieties which have proved superior in both yield and milling qualities, is also urged.

Working Together.

The Ohio Seed Improvement association and the Ohio Farm Bureau federation are working together in the increased production of improved wheats and in their marketing. A large number of counties were successful in increasing the acreage of improved varieties last year, and a number of counties have introduced them this fall. Reports now being compiled show a considerable increase in yield per acre of the improved varieties over common wheats in the state this year.

The two organizations have been of assistance, both in the marketing of the certified seed, and in sales of the improved varieties that did not qualify for certification for seed purposes. Mills in many sections of the state have aided in the wider distribution of better wheats. About three carloads have been distributed through mills in Athens county. Two mills in Ashtabula county have distributed about 22,000 bushels of improved seed.

The picture shows W. R. Giles of Guernsey county taking home his portion of the 2,500 bushels of Trumbull seed wheat brought into the county by the farm bureau. The seed was obtained from growers of Marion and Holmes counties.

Plans for a state co-operative pure-seed exchange are now being developed by the Ohio Farm Bureau federation.

AGRICULTURAL EVILS MENDED BY CONGRESS

Farm Bloc Given Credit for Great Amount of Legislation Favoring American Farmer.

The last congress, which closed in September, was a farm congress. That is, it passed more legislation of benefit to the farmers of the United States than possibly any preceding session.

Newspapers and men who watch proceedings at the nation's capitol say that the farm bloc is responsible for this amount of agricultural legislation. But in these statements the authors make it plain that emergency rather that sheer class legislation is the cause.

Commenting on the new tariff law and the farm bloc's part in representing the farmers of America in this legislation, Gray Silver, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau federation, says: "Agriculture has obtained duties on almost every commodity on which it desired a tariff, and the rates are in most instances as high as was requested."

The American Farm Bureau federation during the past session of congress interested itself in some 30 bills of great importance to American farmers. Many bills backed by the federation are now laws. The present congress has passed more legislation correcting agricultural evils than has any other congress in history. Congress required considerable help and not a little prodding. The farm bureau furnished both and got satisfactory results.

The farm bloc backed the following measures:

Agricultural Credit act, extending life of War Finance corporation and many farm loans.

Bill legalizing co-operative marketing. Removed legal uncertainties hampering co-operative marketing.

Bill regulating packers and stockyards. Producers' interests now protected.

Federal farm-to-markets road program.

Bill providing funds for tuberculosis eradication.

Put farmer on federal reserve board to protect farmers' interests.

Kept United States Department of Agriculture appropriation at efficiency point.

OHIO BUYING FEEDER STOCK

Orders for Cattle From Western Ranges Have Been Received From Thirteen Counties.

Orders for more than 2,000 head of feeder cattle to be purchased on the Western ranges and shipped directly to Ohio feedlots have been received at the office of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation. [illegible] federations are already reported from 13 counties.

The plan of bringing feeder cattle directly from the ranges was tried for the first time last year when 40 carloads were brought into the feedlots of Madison and Fayette counties. So successful did it prove last year that the territory covered was extended to include a number of counties, covering the greater part of the cattle-feeding territory of the state. A fresher and more uniform lot of cattle at a little less cost is the advantage claimed for the direct method of purchase. Scott O'Day, a large cattle feeder and breeder of Madison county, is the representative of the Ohio live stock men in the West.

Co-operative live stock shipments through organizations affiliated with the Ohio Farm Bureau federation, again went over the million-dollar mark in total value during a month's time. Figures as compiled show that 11,275,500 pounds of live stock were co-operatively marketed and netted at market $1,013,923.63. This figure was obtained on shipments made by 6,492 live stock shippers in Ohio.

PROFITABLE BEEF RUNS IN CYCLES

Seven Year Periods Followed By Like Period of Depression.

Better times are coming for the growers of beef cattle is the prediction of L. F. Garey, assistant professor of farm crops and farm management, University of Minnesota.

"Profitable beef production apparently runs in cycles of seven to eight years, followed by a similar period of depression," says Professor Garey. "The indications are that we are just emerging from one of the depression periods and entering on a profitable period of beef production which ought to last until 1930.

PROF. L. F. GAREY, University Farm.

"The opportunity for getting started in beef cattle production is very good at the present time, in fact there have been few times when one could get into this type of livestock production more economically. Good breeding stock has been low in price and in many cases purebred stock has sold for less than its real worth. It would not pay to use just any kind of stock for this type of livestock production, for it is the wellbred and well constituted animal that proves most profitable in the long run.

"The man who has good foundation stock coupled with a well organized and managed business has a good outlook for profitable beef production during the next few years."

Professor Garey does not believe there is any immediate danger of overproduction. "If all the farmers in the areas adapted to the beef production should suddenly turn their attention to that industry," he says, "it would be three or four years before their efforts would have any appreciable effect on the market. This is something, of course, that will not happen as many do not like that type of livestock production and many are not adapted to that sort of work."

Poultry Shows Promote Interest.

An excellent means of promoting interest in better poultry breeding, says Cora Cooke, poultry specialist in extension with the state university, is a plan which has just been put forward by A. R. Miesen, agent for Nobles county.

Last winter, during a series of poultry project meetings conducted in Nobles county by Miss Cooke, the Commercial club of Wilmont staged a successful utility poultry show and community day. So great was the interest that plans are being made this year to hold a series of such shows, in connection with a grain show, in several towns in the county immediately preceding the county poultry show. A utility class is also to be included in the county show, as well as classes for market eggs and dressed poultry.

Birds entered in utility classes must show no standard disqualifications, but are judged chiefly from the standpoint of vitality and capacity for production. Birds may be entered singly or in pens, pen entries being preferable where space and cooping capacity are limited.

It is to be expected that this series of shows will do much to increase the interest in standard bred flocks and at the same time serve as an immediate reminder of the county poultry show.

BUTCHER AND REDUCE LIVING EXPENSES

Failure to So Provide For Home Needs Cause of Rising Costs.

Too many farmers neglect to avail themselves of the opportunity to reduce the living expenses by home butchering of livestock and curing of meats, says A. L. Harvey of the animal husbandry division at University Farm. As soon as the temperature gets down around the freezing point, there is little danger of the meat spoiling. Hogs may be butchered earlier in the fall than either beef cattle or sheep, as a large percentage of the carcass can be cured. Following are some points to keep in mind in slaughtering hogs:

1. Select young healthy hogs, weighing around 200 pounds, as they are easier to handle, yield medium size cuts, and a reasonable amount of lard.
2. Keep off feed 24 to 30 hours before killing, but give the animals all the water they want.
3. Don't bruise or whip the animal before killing, or excite in any way, for a poor carcass will result.
4. Don't expect to do a good job with only the "old butcher knife." A sticking knife, a skinning knife, a saw, a scraper, a hook of some sort, and a gambrel are necessary.
5. Sticking without stunning or shooting produces the best carcass.
6. Scalding is best done when the water is about 150° F. Put some soap or lye in the water to remove the dirt and scurf.
7. If a barrel is used, scald the rear end of the hog first.
8. Use plenty of water.
9. Loosen the leaf lard.
10. Split the carcass and allow ample time for cooling before cutting up.

Efficient Methods Subject of Talk.

More efficient methods of conducting extension work and the value of a comprehensive plan that will permit of the actual measurement of results are outstanding subjects which will come before the tenth annual conference of the university's agricultural extension service at University Farm November 13, and 14. Two specialists from the federal offices in Washington, George E. Farrell and Miss Grace Frysinger, are on the program for addresses. President J. F. Reed of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation will also speak. F. E. Balmer, state leader of county agents, will review the achievements of the first decade of the county extension service in Minnesota. Director F. W. Peck will preside at the conference. An "institutional dinner" will be held the first evening in order that the field forces of the university may get into closer contact with experiment station men and the resident teachers. Dean W. C. Coffey of the university department of agriculture and Dr. R. R. Price, head of the general extension division, will deliver addresses. All county agents and home demonstration agents, county club leaders, and extension specialists are expected to attend the annual conference. Persons interested in county extension work are cordially invited to attend.

Kota Wheat Rust Resisting.

Kota wheat, a variety developed by the North Dakota Experiment Station and the United States Department of Agriculture, is being used to great advantage for breeding purposes by plant breeders at University Farm, St. Paul. In co-operative experiments Kota has been crossed with Marquis wheat, and numerous families which have the rust resistance of Kota and the strength of straw of Marquis are now available.

J. A. Clark, agronomist in charge of western wheat investigations for the United States Department of Agriculture, is now doing graduate work in plant breeding at University Farm. Mr. Clark says that data collected for five years show that Kota wheat rusted only 7 per cent while Marquis, under the same conditions, rusted 50 per cent. In field trials made in North Dakota Kota yielded from two to five bushels per acre more than Marquis. The milling qualities of Kota have also been demonstrated under rigid tests.

Mr. Clark believes that as Kota is especially adapted to semi-arid conditions it will eventually take the place of much of the durum wheat now grown. Unfortunately it is not well adapted to the humid sections of Min[illegible]

CARE FOR IDLE WORK HORSE

Roughages Furnish Large Amount of Energy and Are Cheaper Than Concentrates.

"Economical feeding," says J. G. Fuller of the animal husbandry department of the University of Wisconsin, "is the important thing in caring for the idle work horse during the winter months. Roughage such as hay, corn stover and straw, furnish a large amount of net energy. They are usually far cheaper feeds than the concentrates, and when they are of sufficiently good quality, the animals may be maintained on these feeds alone.

"Next to feeding, sufficient exercise and proper shelter are most important. The Arabs have a saying, 'Rest and fat are the greatest enemies of the horse.' The horse is par excellence the creature of motion, and in its feeding and management this fact should always be kept in mind. A mature horse should receive regular exercise, traveling not less than five or six miles per day to maintain health. Horses can be turned into the pasture until it snows or the ground becomes too soft, and then into the yard so that they may have exercise. Cool, well-ventilated quarters are far preferable to warm, close stables. In all cases horses must be protected from drafts and extreme weather.

A Well-Ventilated Stable.

"If good quality roughages are not available in sufficient amount, a small grain ration may be added. In any event," says Mr. Fuller, "no more than one-half a work ration should be given which ordinarily ranges from 5 to 8 pounds of grain a day. At the approach of spring, the grain ration must be gradually increased in proportion for spring's work. A good ration for a 1,400-pound horse in full work is 13 to 15 pounds of oats and 15 pounds good-quality mixed hay."

FAVOR FLUSHING EWE FLOCK

Big Advantage to Have Lambs Dropped Within Comparatively Short Period in Spring.

When the ewe flock is gaining in weight rather than losing at the breeding season, they will come in heat more nearly at the same time and should breed within three or four weeks. This is a big advantage in the spring for then the lambs will all be dropped within a comparatively short period and careful attention can profitably be given the flock at that time. When ewes are in a gaining condition they drop more twins. This has been proven time after time on the western range where the lamb crop is largely determined by conditions at the breeding season.

With the beginning of cool weather, healthy ewes will have a better appetite and if feed is provided will naturally gain in weight. Ten days before the ram is to be turned into the flock the ewes should be given a little grain—about half a pound a day—or else have the run of a good pasture. Chopped pumpkins and rape make excellent stimulating feeds at this season.

GROWING SWINE ON ALFALFA

No One but a Greenhorn Would Attempt to Raise Hogs on Corn Alone—Grass Needed.

The feeding of corn to hogs is a custom so old and well established that no Midwest farmer would think of raising swine without this greatest of all cereals. While corn is the best and cheapest grain for fattening hogs, no one but a greenhorn would attempt to raise pigs on corn exclusively.

A Diplomatic Courtship

By H. IRVING KING

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Harold Raymond had the reputation in Hillsborough of being a local Machiavelli—a very deep young man, the people called him—who attained his ends by diplomatic ways and wiles. He called persistently at the house of the Widow Halstead and was seen often in company with the widow's pretty daughter, Catherine. He frequently took along Kate's elder sister, Martha, on their outings and treated her with much deference at all times. For that was the regular thing to do when one was in love with Kate. Everybody knew that the matrimonial key, as far as the younger sister was concerned, was in the hands of the more austere and plainer elder daughter of the house of Halstead.

Kate was a pretty, fluffy, little thing with no end of admirers and always ready for a good time, while Martha, like her Scriptural namesake, was careful and troubled about many things. And that was of necessity, for Martha was really the head of the family, though the Widow Halstead posed as such with much ostentation. However, it was a pose only. Martha managed things—among other things managed to make both ends meet in a small family income.

Mrs. Halstead was a great stickler for the proprieties, and strong in what she called her "principles," among the most cherished of which was the doctrine that the younger daughter should not be married before the elder.

Harold Raymond was such a "deep one" that there were more than a few who prophesied that he would succeed where many before him had failed. As to Kate's feelings in the matter there could be little doubt on that score. The pretty manner in which she blushed and looked down when rallied about the marked attention Harold was paying her was delightful to see. At first, Martha took her pleasures rather sadly in the company of Kate and Harold.

Seemed Always to Manage to Sit With Thornton.

After a while Martha became unwontedly cheerful, and entered with actual gaiety into the companionship of Kate and Harold; gave up her custom of watching them intently when they were talking together as if she were trying to decide whether they really loved one another or not; seemed to have decided the point. And at this same time Harold, the diplomat, executed what all Hillsborough regarded as a master stroke of strategy. A college friend of his, Cyril Thornton, having just been graduated from a medical school, came to Hillsborough to "hang out his shingle" and become a "rising young doctor," just as Harold had started in as a "rising young lawyer." And the very first thing Harold did was to introduce the doctor to the Halstead girls, and thereafter what had been an inseparable trio became an inseparable quartet.

Martha received this accession to their little coterie with such evident pleasure that the gossips, male and female, were soon saying: "Deep fellow, Raymond—he has got the doctor and Martha hooked and now has plain sailing with Kate." No, not all the gossips said this. There were wise ones who replied: "Bosh! Martha Halstead is a predestined old maid. She'll never marry. The doctor is trying to cut out the lawyer and the doctor has got on the right side of Martha. It is easy enough to see that she favors the medicine man more than the man of law."

It was a fact when the four were out in the doctor's car, Martha somehow seemed always to manage to sit with Thornton. But what could you prove by that? Did it not leave Harold and Kate in a more advantageous [illegible] going along very agreeably in this way, when Mrs. Halstead took a hand, and in secret conference with her elder daughter said majestically: "Martha, I have noticed that that young lawyer, Raymond, has been coming here quite often of late"—considering that it was about six months since Harold had first begun calling at the house, Mrs. Halstead's discovery was not so very astonishing after all. "I presume that he is beginning to present himself in the guise of a suitor for the hand of your sister, Catherine. Now, you know my principles. I want you to speak to him and tell him that it cannot be. I, myself, am really not in a state of health which would permit of my stating the case to the young man. It might be disagreeable, and my nerves, as you know, will not stand anything of a disagreeable nature."

"But, mother," remonstrated Martha, "there is another young man who calls here, too—Dr. Thornton. Shall I speak to both of them?"

"Dr. Thornton," replied Mrs. Halstead, "is another matter entirely. His principal reason for calling here is the interest he takes in my case. It is a most interesting one. He told me so himself. He has been especially attentive to ME—and when I hinted at some pecuniary remuneration for his excellent professional advice he assured me that the knowledge he acquired from a study of my symptoms—and he was pleased to add the pleasure of my conversation—more than repaid him. No; we will eliminate Dr. Thornton from the discussion. You will speak to Mr. Raymond."

"But, mother," protested Martha, "would it not seem rather indelicate—my unmarried state, as I take it, being the reason for rejecting Mr. Thornton's suit for Kate—would it not appear rather indelicate in me to state your 'principles' in the matter to Mr. Raymond?"

"Not at all," replied Mrs. Halstead. "You will speak as from ME. There, there—don't argue the matter any more. Did any mother ever have so much trouble with her daughters as I have?" And then, pathetically, "I wouldn't have if you would only get a beau of your own."

"Oh, mother!" cried Martha, blushing, "I've—I've got one!" and ran from the room, leaving Mrs. Halstead dumb with amazement. That evening when Harold called Martha received him alone, and seating herself beside him on the sofa said calmly, even frigidly, "Mr. Raymond, I have a communication to you from my mother. She bids me tell you that it is against her principles that the younger daughter marry before the elder. Therefore, as I am still unmarried, and likely to remain so, you can't have Kate."

"But—but," stammered Harold, "I say, there's some mistake. It isn't Kate I want. I want you."

"You dear boy," replied Martha, as her hand stole into his. "You dear dilatory boy. Why didn't you say so before? Kate and I have known all along—and she has been waiting so impatiently to accept Dr. Thornton."

"GOLD" THAT HAS NO VALUE

Australians Disappointed When Told That Mint Has No Use for Material They Offer.

The jaws and teeth of Australian sheep are quite frequently taken to the mint in Sydney, Australia, and offered for sale, as many sheep get what appears to be a gold plating on their teeth. The mint, however, has no use for them, as the brilliant-looking "gold" is nothing more than a peculiar kind of tartar.

Some notable scientific men have recently been making investigations of the golden teeth of sheep, and it appears that the color is caused by excessively thin layers of phosphate of calcium, which gradually deposits as tartar, and can be removed with a knife.

The beautiful colors seen when a drop of oil spreads over water are due to the refraction of the light altered by what is known as interference, and Professor Liversedge states that the golden color of a sheep's teeth is due to the refraction of light from the overlapping of very thin films of tartar.

But in spite of scientific explanations, farmers continue to offer the discolored teeth, and are very hard to convince that the "gold" has no value.

Binding of Bibles an Art.

The hides of thousands of animals are used each year in Bible binding. Cattle, sheep, goats, pigs and seals are used, only the better portions of each skin being suitable for this purpose. The making of a divinity circuit (overlapping) cover requires great skill and accuracy. The cover is cut to the precise size from a part of the skin which is without blemish and the edge all around is carefully pared so that it may be neatly turned over the lining, which may be of paper, linen, or leather.

The trimmed and gilded sheets are securely glued to the back of the binding. Securing the sheets to the back in this manner by means of a special glue reinforces the back with the strength of the leather and gives that flexibility so desirable in a Bible.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Wary.

"See the oil gushing out!" exclaimed the promoter. "You can't lose by investing in this well."

"Maybe not," said the cautious citizen, "but I'll stick around a while and see how long the flow continues." [illegible]

RURAL CREDITS PLAN WINS OUT

Amendment No. 1 Favored By Voters With Majority Of 100,000 Votes

Amendment No. 1 providing for the establishment of a state system of long time loans for farmers, was adopted by voters at election last week by more than 100,000 majority.

The vote on this amendment, which was almost as heavy as that given the Good Roads proposal two years ago is credited to a state-wide campaign waged in its behalf by the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation who in turn give credit for its passage to efforts made in its behalf by the papers of the small towns and villages thruout the state.

The task of putting the provisions of the amendment into working form is one of the problems that will confront the next legislature when it meets in January.

Farmers organizations in the state are exceedingly thankful to all interests that stood so loyally behind this movement which has made possible a better credit system to the farmers of the North Star state.

Suffers Stroke

Martin McAndrews, Sr., of Thief River Falls, suffered a stroke of paralysis Monday afternoon, and very little hope is being entertained for his recovery. The old gentleman who is 92 years of age, has always enjoyed good health and has been able to attend to his affairs up to this time. His sons, Martin and Mike, of this place, were summoned to his bedside Monday evening. Other children have also been called as chances of recovery are considered few on account of his advanced age.

Lake Of The Woods Co.

A new county was born in Minnesota as a result of the election last week. The proposition of dividing Beltrami County was carried by a majority of about 400 votes. The new county will comprise the northern half of Beltrami with Baudette as the county seat. Official proclamation by the governor is all that remains before the new county will function. A proposition to divide Carlton County was defeated.

Bjerkens Leave

Mrs. F. Bjerken and baby son left Monday for an extended visit with her mother at Red Wing. After closing his office here, Dr. Bjerken left yesterday to spend a short time with his mother and brother at Page, N. D., after which he will visit a few days at Red Wing before going to Chicago to take up post graduate work in surgery. While they have not definately decided about returning to this section, it is possible they may locate elsewhere after Dr. Bjerken completes his studies. During their two years with us, they have made many friends who regret exceedingly to see them depart, but who wish them well wherever they may decide to cast their lot

Rebekahs Entertain

Members of Iris Rebekah lodge entertained members of the I. O. O. F. and their families as well as members of the local school faculty at a party given in the lodge rooms Tuesday evening. Progressive whist furnished the evening's diversion after which a dainty lunch was served by the Rebekahs.

Entertain Friends

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Hall entertained some over twenty friends at their home last Friday evening in honor of Dr. and Mrs. F. N. Bjerken who leave this week. Conversation contests, auction sale and other games furnished amusement and entertainment, after which a dainty luncheon was served.

LIVESTOCK CO. BREAKS RECORD

Farmer—Owned Association Has Banner Month At So. St. Paul

A new world's record for volume of business handled by a farmer-owned livestock terminal sales agency was established in October when the Central Co-operative Commission Co. at So. St. Paul marketed 1554 cars of animals of all kinds. The best previous month was 1320 cars sold in June this year.

The large volume of business in October was partly due to two train load shipments made by farmers in Perkins Co. South Dakota.

The company is now firmly established, and shippers are realizing to what extent it can be a factor in the market. Thus far the company has been able to stabalize prices by regulating the supply of animals on the market, and with greater volume it will be able to cut expenses and obtain still better pricse.

Many Needed to Save State.

To be a voice outside the state, speaking to mankind or to the future, perhaps shaking the actual state to pieces in doing so, one man will suffice. But to reform the state in order to save it, to preserve it by changing it, a body of workers is needed as well as a leader—a considerable body of workers, placed at many points, and operating in many directions.—Matthew Arnold.

MAKES HIS CHOICE

SYNOPSIS—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance. Natalie, Coolidge and West plan a visit of charity. Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie for a purpose. Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but leaves. On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He thinks Coolidge was murdered. Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West, his suspicions of things not being right strengthened by his learning that Coolidge had lied about the reason for the trip to the cottage, visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon. West is taken by surprise, knocked out, separated from Sexton, and comes to his senses to find himself bound and helpless, and confronted by a man named Hobart, whom West knows to be the man who had rented the house which Natalie visited. The man tells him he (West) is interfering with his plans and if he persists will be done away with.

West had said nothing, watching the others, and waiting to choose some course of action. His mind was confused, uncertain, yet he found encouragement in Hobart's statement of the case. The fellow felt no serious fear of him; had no suspicion as yet that anyone believed Percival Coolidge murdered. The probability was that not even the girl dreamed of such a thing. Whatever her connection might be with this man, she must be innocent of so foul a crime. If he could only speak to her alone; bring to her the truth; reveal to her the real character of this man Hobart, there would be no doubt of the result. In spite of the strange situation he yet retained faith in the girl; she had been deceived, led astray in some manner, but his first impression of her true nature still controlled his thought. He could only believe her a victim of scheming villains, driven by circumstances to play a part uterly foreign to her character. His only hope of learning the facts from her own lips, or of re-establishing her faith in him, lay in a moment's conversation alone. His mind instantly leaped to this conclusion, and his eyes met her own. They were wide open, full of curiosity yet not unkind. He spoke swiftly.

"That sounds fair enough, Hobart," he said quietly, taking the chance as though it was the most natural thing in the world. "I am not hunting trouble in any way, or seeking to butt in where I am not wanted. Your guess as to my purpose in coming here is about right. I had no other object but to be of some service to this young lady. If I can talk with her a moment alone, and thus assure myself as to her wishes, I'll give you any pledge you want, and forget all about the affair. Is that satisfactory?"

"Alone, you said? You want to see her alone?"

"Absolutely no other arrangement will answer. I want her to talk freely; to answer my questions with no interference."

Hobart glanced toward his companion inquiringly, evidently inclined to deny the request.

"H—l, you don't want much," he said rather gruffly. "What do you think about this proposition, Natalie?"

The girl smiled, her eyes still on West's face.

"Fair enough," she admitted as though the whole matter was a joke. "It looks like the easiest way out."

"All right, if you say so. It is my guess you are equal to the job. How much time do you want, West?"

"Ten or fifteen minutes. I want to get down to the bottom of this thing."

"Oh, you do, hey? Modest as ever, I see. Well, here's luck to you. You needn't be afraid of the guy, Natalie; we got his gat before we brought him up here, and if he makes any break, I'll be out in the hall ready to take a hand. You're still for it?"

"Yes," indifferently, seating herself on a convenient chair. "We might as well talk it out now as any time. You go on Jim, and leave it to me."

Hobart was not entirely satisfied, hesitating as he lit a fresh cigar, his keen eyes watchful of them both. However, it was plain to be seen the girl had made her decision, and he evidently knew her well enough to realize the uselessness of revolt.

"All right, then," he replied finally, turning to the door. "Suit yourself, only watch your step. Anyhow, I'll be within calling distance, if this guy gets gay."

"Don't worry about that," a flash of anger in her eyes. "I am no baby, Jim Hobart. Go on now, and leave Captain West to me."

He closed the door behind him, and the two were alone in the room. No sound reached them from without, not even an echo of Hobart's footsteps in the hall. West looked across at the girl, who sat motionless, her eyes shaded by long lashes, and ringless fingers clasped in her lap. She appeared indifferent, uninterested, scarcely aware of his presence. He wondered if Hobart was listening at the door; what had become of Mike, and whether Sexton was alive or dead. For the moment he could scarcely make himself realize the true situation. His silence served to arouse her interest, for she suddenly lifted her head and looked at him.

"Well," she said soberly. "You have something to ask?"

"Much—yes; but first, are we alone?"

"Certainly—why?"

"This man Hobart, you are sure he is not listening at the door?"

She glanced about; then laughed.

"Little good that would do him; there is no key-hole, no chance for sound to penetrate. We are quite alone, Captain, and you are perfectly free to say whatever you please."

"But even then, is this wholly fair?"

"What do you mean?"

"I came here," he explained earnestly, "with no bad intention; no desire to injure any one, Miss Coolidge; my only thought the possibility of being of some service to you."

"That is very interesting, I am sure. I am quite grateful.

"Then I am going to ask you a favor. Release my hands and feet! You need not be afraid; I give my pledge to make no attempt to escape while we are together. Will you do this?"

CHAPTER IX

West Makes His Choice.

The girl neither answered, nor hesitated, but crossed the room swiftly, her hands seeking the lashings about his wrists. Her movement thrilled him, and his blood leaped at the soft touch of her fingers.

"Really, I did not realize you were tied into the chair," she exclaimed indignantly. "Hobart is a fool to do such a thing. Why, what has caused him to become so frightened? Tell me, Captain West, how all this occurred?"

"Hobart Is a Fool to Do Such a Thing."

"You know nothing?"

"Only what has been said since I entered the room. Mike simply told me they had a man here who Hobart thought was a detective, and he wanted me to come in a moment. I came, and found you. Now, please, what does it all mean?"

She slipped back to her seat again, her eyes on his face, as he arose and stretched his limbs to restore circulation. To his quick glance her face expressed only sympathy, and innocent interest. Any doubt he may have felt as to the sincerity of the girl vanished instantly; whatever of crime was concealed here, she had no suspicion. He could tell her the whole story without fear.

"I'll try and explain, Miss Natalie," he began rather lamely, "although perhaps, you may not wholly understand the motives which have prompted me. This, of course, is really no business of mine, and the only thing that has involved me is the deep interest I have felt in you."

"In me! Why, that is rather interesting. It was to serve me you came here?"

"At least I thought so. Shall I make it more definite? No doubt you are aware that you are an unusually pretty woman. Well, at least, I think so for one, and our first meeting, with its subsequent adventures, was romantic enough to shake me out of a commonplace existence. In fact, I became quite deeply interested in you."

"Why, really, Captain," she interrupted, slightly puzzled. "I perhaps do not fully comprehend to what you refer. Do you mean there was something between us? Some special intimacy?"

"Oh, no; not that; probably no dream of what was occurring in your mind. Yet the circumstances of our meeting were peculiar; they rendered a very brief acquaintance into what promised to become a real friendship."

"How do you mean?"

"Surely you cannot have forgotten so soon," he explained in surprise at her attitude, seating himself once more and facing her determinedly. "I came to you in response to a strange advertisement; you trusted me so completely as to introduce me to your friends as your fiance, and later confided to me the special trouble you were in. I pledged you my assistance, and it was surely very natural that, under these circumstances, I as a young man, should have become rather deeply interested—"

"In both the case and the girl."

"Yes; so much so, indeed, that even when I was rather harshly dismissed, I could not accept it without a protest. I had grown to feel that this was not a mere business arrangement between us. Do you understand now?"

"I can see it from your standpoint. But nevertheless, I am surprised, Captain West. You—you mean you actually fell in love with me?"

"I felt a very, very deep interest in you," he admitted gravely, "a greater interest than I have ever felt in any other woman. That is my sole excuse for becoming involved in your affairs. I could not bear to see you make a mistake it might be in my power to prevent."

"What mistake?"

"Well, first of all, trusting in this man Hobart."

She laughed, her eyes glancing up quickly into his face.

"And why not, please? Remember your confession; I may think this only jealousy."

"You are not so silly as that," earnestly. "Moreover, I may as well be perfectly frank. I did confess an interest in you, and in a measure, I still feel eager to serve you in every possible way; but you have changed so greatly, Miss Natalie, that my confidence in you has been severely tried."

"You no longer believe?"

"I hardly know; I fail utterly to understand you of late; you seem an entirely different girl. For one thing, you have deliberately deceived me."

"Indeed! in what?"

"In your visit to Arch street with Percival Coolidge. That was no mission of charity to a poor widow and children."

"What then?"

"An arranged conference with this fellow Hobart. He rented that cottage for no other purpose, and left it the next day. You made a mistake when you took me along."

She straightened up slightly in the chair, yet spoke rather indifferently, her voice cold.

"No doubt I did," she said tersely. "Indeed I have already discovered, Captain West, that I made an even greater mistake when I first took you into my service. You have proven altogether too inquisitive. Now I will be plain with you. Whatever need I once supposed I had for your services ended with the explanation I received in that Arch street cottage. I told you so very distinctly after our return home. You recall that interview, no doubt?"

He bowed, waiting for her to go on.

"You were then and there dismissed from my service. That should have been sufficient. I knew nothing of your silly feeling of personal interest in me; nor did I realize any occasion for discussing with you the reasons causing me to change my plans. You were my employee, and I discharged you; that was all. It is true Percival Coolidge took me to that cottage to have certain mysterious things explained, and they were explained to my complete satisfaction."

"By Hobart?"

"Yes."

"You knew the fellow before?"

She hesitated slightly, although there was no perceptible change in the answering voice.

"For several years; he was in my father's employ; the—the whole trouble originated in a joke, and—and was quite amusing, once I understood. Of course, after that, I had no further need for you. Why did you persist in annoying me?"

West hesitated an instant, his mind struggling with the situation. Was she honest, truthful, in this statement? Could he say anything which would change her viewpoint? She must have been deceived by these men, yet how could he expose them so she would comprehend? He was so little certain of the facts himself, that he had nothing but suspicion to offer.

"Why do you not answer, Captain West?"

The girl's eyes were clear, insistent, a little amused; they somehow aroused his determination.

"I will endeavor to make you understand, Miss Natalie," he explained slowly. "I would not have you feel that I deliberately pushed myself into this affair. When I left Fairlawn after your dismissal, I had no thought of ever seeing you again. I have already told you the interest I had felt in you up to that time, but your abruptness during our last interview left me angry, and with no inclination to seek your presence again. You can scarcely blame me for such a feeling?"

"No," she confessed. "I—I was so excited and nervous I was not very nice."

"You certainly hurt me. I departed with a sense of wrong rankling, and no desire to come back. But fate intervened. You know, perhaps, that I overheard the shot which ended the life of Percival Coolidge, and I was the first to discover his dead body. I supposed it a case of suicide, and so bore witness at the inquest. The whole matter would have ended there; but the next day you discharged Sexton also, and the man sought me out at the club."

She leaned forward, her lips parted, a new light in her eyes.

"He told you something? He made you suspicious?" she asked breathlessly.

"He caused me to see the affair from a somewhat different point of view—a point of view which, I confess, revived my interest in you. I began to believe you had been deceived, and your treatment of me arose through a misunderstanding; I thought you a victim, and that I would be a cad if I failed to stand by you. We put this and that together, carried out some investigations quietly, and arrived at a definite conclusion."

"What investigations?"

"In the field where the body was found first," West went on steadily, but no longer looking at her, "tracing the different tracks through the clover. Then I looked up that cottage in Arch street, and thus learned about Hobart. Somehow he seemed to fit into the picture, and your mysterious visit there made me anxious to interview the man. He had left no address, however, just faded out of sight suddenly, which increased suspicion. Then, when we were completely baffled, Sexton learned about your conversation over the telephone."

"How? Was he at the house?"

"Yes; he went out at my suggestion."

"And heard me repeat this number?"

"It makes no difference how he got the information; we knew you were coming here this afternoon, and jumped at the conclusion that you were going to meet Hobart for some reason."

"Very bright, I am sure," and there was a tone of relief in her voice. "And that is your whole story, I suppose? What does it amount to?"

"Not very much, perhaps."

"And the two of you came out here seeking to learn my business, to pry into my personal affairs. That was not a very gentlemanly act, Captain West, and I hardly see how you can justify yourself."

"I had two purposes," he insisted, "either of which justify. I felt it a duty to locate this man Hobart; and also to warn you of the danger you were in."

"Warn me!" she laughed scornfully. "That is ridiculous enough surely. I have a perfectly good reason for being here, but I am not accountable to you in any way for my movements. A duty you say—a duty to locate this man? A duty to whom?"

"To the state, if no one else," he answered gravely. "Percival Coolidge did not commit suicide; he was murdered."

"Murdered!" she came to her feet with utterance of the word. "You cannot think that!"

"I know it, Miss Natalie; the evidence is beyond question; he was murdered in cold blood."

"But by whom? For what purpose?"

"These points are not yet determined; I am only sure of the crime."

"Yes, but—but you suspect Jim Hobart. Isn't that true? You came here seeking him—yes, and me. You even think I know how this death occurred. You—you connect it with my fortune."

"No, Miss Natalie," he protested stoutly, moved by her agitation. "The cause is a mystery, and who did it equally mysterious. The evidence thus far unearthed is all circumstantial."

"Then why did you come out here searching for Hobart?"

"Because of his strange meeting with Percival Coolidge the very day of his death; because his sudden disappearance furnished the only clue."

"And that is all the knowledge you possess, absolutely all?"

"Yes; I am no more than groping in the dark. My main object in coming was to put you on your guard."

"You have repeated these suspicions to no one else? The police?"

"To no one. Only Sexton and I have even talked the matter over. We are both too loyal to you to ever say a word which might be to your injury."

She suddenly held out her hand, and he took it, conscious of the firm clasp of her fingers.

"I thank you, Captain West," she said sincerely, "and believe your purpose was honorable. You have told me frankly all you suspect, and doubtless you have reasons. You have simply made a mistake, that is all. Percival Coolidge was not murdered; he killed himself because he had muddled my affairs, and knew he was about to be discovered. You have got upon a wrong trail. Will you accept my word for this, and drop the whole matter here?"

West was almost convinced, but not quite; the explanation had not been sufficiently explicit.

"This man Hobart—who is he? What connection does he have with your affairs?"

She hesitated slightly, yet her eyes did not fall, or her apparent cordiality change.

"Mr. Hobart," she explained, "I have known for years. I told you before he was once in my father's employ. Now he is a private detective, and was employed on my case before I advertised for you. I thought then he was not accomplishing anything, but at our interview Sunday, all was cleared up."

Some real thrills coming.

WHEAT TAKES SLUMP

Market Has Shown a Slow Holiday Tone.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., ofr week ended Nov. 10, 1922.

GRAIN: Market was strong during part of week on bullish private crop reports but uncertainty prevailed later and the close was irregular. Chicago December wheat lost 1⅝c; Chicago December corn up ¾c. Wheat averaged lower on the 9th on decline in Liverpool and absence of important support but short covering checked break. Later buying of Chicago December and selling of May by seaboard caused firm close. Country offerings not large; cash demand fair; exporters in market for durums. Government crop report showed larger corn crop than expected and prices declined. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.25; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.18; No. 2 mixed corn 71c; No. 2 yellow corn 72c; No. 3 white oats 43c. Average farm prices: No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa 57c; No. 2 hard winter in central Kansas $1; No. 1 dark northern wheat in central North Dakota 98c. Closing future prices: Chicago December wheat $1.15⅛; Chicago Dec. corn 69¼c; Minneapolis December wheat $1.14¼; Kansas City Dec. wheat $1.07⅞. Winnipeg Dec. wheat 99¾c.

DAIRY PRODUCTS: Butter markets reacted following long period of firmness and steady advances and were barely steady to weak at the close on the 9th. Movement slower and some price concessions have been made. Consumptive demand decreasing at prevailing high prices. Closing prices, 92 score: New York 49½; Chicago 48½c. Cheese markets barely steady following Monday's declines on Wisconsin cheese boards. Movement continues slow; heavy accumulations reported at country points. Buying and selling limited. Prices at Wisconsin primary cheese markets Nov. 9th: Twins 24c; Daisies 24¼c; Double Daisies 23¾c; Longhorns 24½c; Square Prints 25c.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: Compared with a week ago, the trend of hog prices at Chicago was slighty upward. Cattle and sheep prices also improved somewhat. Beef steers steady to 25c higher, butcher cows and heifers steady to 50c and veal calves 25 to 75c up. Feeder steers were weak to 25c lower for the week. Fat lambs ranged from 25c lower to $1 higher; feeding lambs 15 to 25c, and yearlings 50 to 75c higher. Fat ewes were steady to 25c up per 100 lbs. On Nov. 9th hogs were generally steady, light hogs about 5c lower. Cattle market fairly active, generally steady to strong on all classes, spots higher on desirable short fed steers and butcher heifers. Fat lambs 25c higher, sheep fully steady. Nov. 9th Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $8.65; bulk of sales $8.10-8.65; medium and good beef steers $7.10-11.75; butcher cows and heifers $3.50-10.50; feeder steers $5-7.75; light and medium weight veal calves $8.50-10.75; fat lambs $13.25-15; feeding lambs $12.25-14; yearlings $9.75-13.25; fat ewes $4.50-8. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Nov. 3 amounted to: 173,595 cattle; 15,684 hogs; and 213,643 sheep. In eastern wholesale fresh meat markets prices continued their downward trend for the week. Veal weak to $1, lambs and mutton weak to $2 and veal weak to $3 lower while light pork loins ranged from $2 to $5 down and heavy loins were generally $1 lower. On Nov. 9th steer beef ranged from weak at some markets to $1 higher at others; veal $1 to $2 lower at Philadelphia. FARM LIVE STOCK

Charcoal for Swine

To prevent worms, keep the following charcoal mixture before the pigs all the time:

Charcoal, 1 bushel.
Hardwood ashes, 1 bushel.
Salt, 8 pounds.
Air-slaked lime, 8 pounds.
Sulphur, 4 pounds.
Pulverized copperas, 2 pounds.

First mix the lime, salt, and sulphur thoroughly, and then mix in the charcoal and ashes. Dissolve the copperas in two quarts of hot water and sprinkle it over the whole mass, mixing thoroughly. Store this in a barrel under shelter, and keep some of it in an open shallow box where the hogs can get it as they wish.—Bureau Animal Industry, United States Department Agriculture.

GUARD AGAINST HOG CHOLERA

If Herd Is Treated Immediately on First Sign of Disease Loss Will Be Small.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Watch for the first hog to show signs of cholera, advises the United States Department of Agriculture. If the herd is treated immediately it is generally possible to save the herd with but few losses. If the disease, however, is allowed to reach all the animals before the serum preventive treatment is applied heavy losses may be expected. Hog-cholera serum is a preventive and not a cure for hog cholera, the department points out.

Whenever a hog dies of an unknown cause the owner should watch his herd closely for at least a week, and if any more hogs in the herd begin to show signs of sickness a veterinarian should be called immediately, for the chances are that hog cholera has reached the herd and prompt action in applying the serum treatment is the only thing that will save the well animals. A high temperature, ranging from 105 degrees F., to 108 degrees F., in a hog that staggers when it walks, is a pretty good indication of hog cholera. Such hogs should be segregated and not allowed to mingle with other hogs or to wander about, for they will spread the disease wherever they go, sometimes in places where it is impossible to disinfect. Hogs that die on the farm should be buried, or, preferably, burned, in order to prevent birds, insects and animals that visit the carcass from spreading the disease.

Hogs With Strong Constitutions Are More Able to Withstand Disease.

Usually the disease is most prevalent during the fall months and losses are invariably heavy in herds where owners neglect to immunize their hogs before the disease reaches them, or fail to call a veterinarian immediately on its first appearance.

MEDIUM STEERS PROFITABLE

De Kalb County (Ill.) Farmer Is of Opinion That Grade Stuff Is Superior.

The prime feeder steer, so often cited as the best beef-making machine, is sometimes a less profitable animal, according to a De Kalb county (Ill.) cattle feeder, than the steer of poorer quality. This man has had experience with both kinds and regularly feeds eight to ten carloads a year.

The prime steer undoubtedly will produce a somewhat better killer than the poorer quality animal, but it is his belief that the difference in price is less on the finished animals than it is on the feeders. The kind of steers he now buys it has been possible to purchase as feeders at about 1 cent less than the price of the best ones. When finished and put on the market these steers ordinarily have sold about half a cent lower than steers of the other quality. He figures that his cost of gain is about the same as that of the others. Thus there is an advantage of one-half cent a pound in feeding this second-grade stuff instead of the very best.

Time to Wean Pigs.

Pigs should not be weaned until they are at least eight weeks old, and if the sow is not to have a second litter, or if there is time enough in case she is, it is better to let the pigs suckle until they are from ten to twelve weeks old.

Keep Lambs Growing.

The lambs must be kept growing, and the breeding stock must be thrifty. Ewes in poor condition in the breeding season will usually bring single lambs and have a small milk flow.

Democrats Score Great Victory and Almost Capture Control of Congress.

EIGHT G. O. P. SENATORS OUT

Al Smith's Success in New York Starts His Boom for Presidential Nomination—Turkish Nationalists Goading the Allied Nations to Drastic Action.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

AL SMITH, former governor of New York, has been elected to that office again by a huge plurality and already is being boomed for the Democratic nomination for the presidency in 1924. Regardless of party affiliations, do you think he would make a good nominee, and a good President if elected?

REPUBLICAN control of congress was almost swept away in the Democratic landslide at the election on November 7. According to the returns at this writing, the G. O. P. in the next congress will have 53 senators, compared with 60 now, and the Democrats will have 42 compared with 36 now. Doctor Shipstead, who defeated Senator Kellogg in Minnesota, represents the Farmer-Labor party.

The lower house of the Sixty-eighth congress will be composed of 225 Republicans, 207 Democrats, one Socialist, one Independent and one Farmer-Labor member. If these figures are not changed by the revised returns, the Republicans will have a majority over all of 15.

Nine senate seats were lost by the Republicans, by the defeat of Senators DuPont in Delaware, France in Maryland, Townsend in Michigan, Kellogg in Minnesota, Frelinghuysen in New Jersey, Calder in New York, Poindexter in Washington, and Sutherland in West Virginia, and of Albert J. Beveridge in Indiana. The Democrats lost two seats through the downfall of Senators Hitchcock in Nebraska and Pomerene in Ohio.

Among the outstanding results of the election was the great victory of Al Smith in New York. He defeated Miller for the governorship, which he once before held, by a plurality of more than 390,000. This makes him a logical possibility for the Democratic nomination for the presidency in 1924, and already his enthusiastic admirers are booming him for that honor. One possible rival, Senator Pomerene, is removed by his defeat for re-election by Fess, Republican, but it is likely Cox will want to try again. Another man who may be put forward by the Democrats is S. M. Ralston of Indiana, who defeated Beveridge for the senate and who is very popular among the Hoosiers.

Necessarily the election has its effects, also, on Republican presidential probabilities. Some politicians in Washington think President Harding will not seek another nomination because the great reverses sustained by his party are interpreted as the expression of dissatisfaction with his administration. However, if he should wish to lead the ticket again, two likely contenders for the place are now out of it—Beveridge of Indiana and Miller of New York. But there are other strong Republican possibilities. Senator Hiram Johnson of California was returned with a big plurality; Gifford Pinchot won the governorship of Pennsylvania by 255,000 plurality; and Senator Pepper of Pennsylvania easily won re-election. Any one of these may reasonably ask the presidential nomination, and so, too, might Governor Allen of Kansas. There is some talk even of Senator McCormick of Illinois as the choice of the progressive Republicans, and Jim Watson, now restored as the boss of his party in Indiana, might get ambitious and offer himself. His followers, as well as those of Senator New, are accused of having knifed Beveridge at the polls, and the charge seems to be true, as Republican congressmen were elected in nine of the thirteen Indiana districts.

Senator Lodge of Massachusetts just managed to weather the storm. His plurality over Gaston was about 8,000—a fourth of what it was in 1916. W. N. Ferris, who defeated Senator Townsend in Michigan, announces that his first effort when he gets to Washington will be to unseat Senator Newberry.

Irrespective of partisan feeling, there will be widespread regret over the defeat of Senators Kellogg of Minnesota and Poindexter of Washington, for both have proved themselves able, honest and industrious servants of the people. The same may be said for Hitchcock of Nebraska. Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, who was repudiated by his party two years ago, goes back for a third term with a majority of 34,000. Shortly before the election former President Wilson wrote a letter saying that if Reed were returned to the senate he would "of course be there a man without a party."

FOES of prohibition were considerably elated by certain features of the election. Illinoisans voted two to one for amendment of the Volstead act to permit beer and light wines; California defeated the proposed state enforcement law; Massachusetts rejected a proposal to harmonize the state prohibition law with the federal enforcement act; Governor Edwards of New Jersey, "wettest of the wets," was elected senator; New York Democrats won on a platform with a light wine and beer plank; and in Minnesota Congressman Volstead, author of the enforcement act, was defeated. The wets believe they have gained at least 30 and maybe 60 votes in the house.

On the other hand, the drys won a test vote in Ohio by 100,000, and their leaders insist they will still control congress. While Volstead was retired, the man who beat him, Rev. O. J. Kvale, Independent, says he is "drier than Volstead." However, Volstead will normally be succeeded as chairman of the judiciary committee by Graham of Pennsylvania, who is decidedly liberal in the matter of prohibition.

It was a sad day for the once weaker sex. Of all the woman candidates for seats in the senate and house, only one was elected, and her term will end on March 4 next. She is Mrs. Winnifred Mason Huck, who will fill out the unexpired term of her father, the late Congressman-at-Large William E. Mason of Illinois. Moreover, as Representative Alice M. Robertson of Oklahoma was defeated by a mere man, there will not be one woman in the Sixty-eighth congress.

PRESIDENT HARDING still hopes to have the ship subsidy bill passed by this congress and therefore has called an extra session to begin November 20. The measure is almost certain to encounter stubborn opposition in the senate, and many leaders of both parties believe it cannot get through.

MUSTAPHA KEMAL PASHA and the Turkish national assembly are not satisfied with the victories they have already won and are threatening to stir up a lot more trouble in the Near East. The sultan's ministry having resigned, Rafet Pasha, nationalist governor of Constantinople, assumed power there, and the allied high commission accepted the new regime. But about the same time the Angora government demanded that the allied troops be removed from the city at once, stating that its occupation by foreign soldiery was inconsistent with Turkish independence. The nationalists also announced that foreign warships could not enter the straits without permission and then only one at a time, and that only one vessel of each nation should be stationed at Constantinople. These demands were firmly rejected by the allied high commission, the French agreeing with the British that no such concessions should be made and that the allies must retain military control over the city until peace had been established and that the terms of the Mudania agreement must be observed. The request of the nationalists that the Turkish railways in Europe and Asia that have been under temporary allied control be handed over to them also was refused. Thereupon the Turks, reiterating their demands, called three additional classes to the colors and mobilized large forces near Constantinople. Lieutenant General Harington warned Rafet Pasha he would permit no usurpation of allied authority.

The allied governments admitted the situation was acute and growing dangerous. The British suggested postponement of the Lausanne conference, but M. Poincare for France urged that it open without delay. It was said that Lord Curzon, Poincare and Premier Mussolini all would attend the meeting because of the fear that the soviet Russians would try to persuade the Turks to join them in a combine for the domination of the Near East.

TO CELEBRATE the fifth anniversary of the Russian revolution, some 400,000 soviet troops and armed workers marched in review in Moscow last week before the delegates to the Third Internationale now in session. It was an inspiring sight for the communists who dream of world revolution. Premier Lenin did not appear before the Internationale, but others told of the Red progress in various lands. Leo Kameneff admitted that there is "a temporary victory for reaction, capitalism and imperialism in the western countries, especially in Italy and Germany," but told the workers they must hold tight to their rifles. German delegates said there would be a Red revolution soon in their country.

FOLLOWING the advice of the international economic and financial experts, the German government has asked the reparations commission for a two-year moratorium on all reparations payments—coal, iron and other goods as well as cash—and for outside financial help. The experts assert that the stabilization of the mark, the first essential for the recovery of Germany, is impossible under present conditions and charge that the existing catastrophe is due to internal financial policies combined with the impossible conditions of the Versailles treaty. They propose the establishment of a currency bank which should have the supoprt of foreign banks and also 500,000,000 gold marks from the Reichsbank's reserve. The lifting of restrictions abroad against German trade and giving to Germany full customs rights are recommended.

DETERMINED, as they themselves declare, to smash the Irish Free State government or die in the attempt, the Irish republicans are keeping Dublin in a state of perpetual disorder and alarm by sniping, looting and incendiarism. Sometimes they get even bolder, as on Wednesday when they placed machine guns on housetops and made an attack on the Wellington military barracks. There were numerous casualties before the rebels were ousted. Mary MacSwiney, sister of the late lord mayor of Cork, is in Mountjoy prison and has started on a hunger strike, declaring she will starve herself to death as did her brother in a British prison. Other republican prisoners have joined her in this.

ONE of the worst mine disasters of recent years occurred near Spangler, Pa., when gas exploded in a mine of the Reilly Coal company. Seventy-nine men were killed and thirty-two seriously injured. The state mine inspector says someone was guilty of negligence in not reporting gas pockets or in the methods of testing for gas.

IN MARION, ILL., great difficulty is being experienced in getting a jury to try the first batch of five defendants in the Herrin mine massacre case. The citizens are persistently dodging jury service. Judge Hartwell took under advisement a motion by the defense that the indictments be quashed on the grounds that the grand jury was illegally selected and was unduly influenced.

BELIEVE RICE HAS A SOUL

For That Reason Javanese Islanders Perform Ceremony Which They Call a Wedding.

Rice is the most important food product of the island of Java. The islanders believe that rice has a soul. In order to keep on good terms with the "rice soul," prayers are offered to the rice plant, and offerings of fruit and flowers are made to it. One of the prettiest ceremonies of the island is the "wedding of the rice," a make-believe marriage ceremony which takes place every year at harvest time.

On the "lucky" day the Dookoon calls the relatives and friends of the owner and leads them into the field. They are all in holiday dress and wear garlands of flowers about their heads and bodies. The Dookoon selects two stalks of rice of the same length and thickness, to represent the bride and groom. Then four other stalks, two to represent the bridesmaids and two to represent the best man, are selected.

The "bridal party" is smeared with yellow unguent, decorated with garlands of flowers, shaded from the sun with a palm leaf awning, and the stalks are cut around them.

After a great feast the party sets out for the granary, where the bridal party is locked for 40 days to denote the passing of the honeymoon.

EVERYBODY ON WHEELS

We may be having hard times, but we are still able to buy automobiles. The motor vehicle registration for 1921 totaled 10,448,632—an increase of more than a million over 1920. About half of these cars are believed to be owned by farmers, although there are no actual figures as to distribution. At any rate the country is on an automobile basis, and those alarming statisticians, who are forever trying to show by figures that the national income is not large enough to buy tires and gasoline, might as well throw away their lead pencils and begin to worry about something else. We are going to keep our cars, and buy more. That is settled. And if the income won't stand the increasing investment and upkeep, why we'll have to increase the income.—Farm Life.

THE VEGETARIAN

By GRACE W. ABBOTT

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

James Clifford ran up the steps of his porch with an agility new to him. He was thirty, still slim, yet inclined to laziness. His pretty wife regarded him wonderingly from her chair by the tea table.

"Well, James! What's your hurry?"

He bent and kissed her with unusual fervor. "How are you, dearest? Have a good day? Want to go to the beach tonight and do the roller coasters?"

Eva Clifford sprang to her feet, throwing off her husband's arms.

"James! What on earth ails you?"

He led the way indoors, where once again he took his astonished wife in his arms.

"Nothing ails me, honey. Why don't you kiss me the way you used to when we were engaged?"

He tilted her chin, and laughed at the concern in her eyes, but gave no explanation for his extraordinary behavior. Eva went to the kitchen with instructions to Ellen, and then returned to the dining room, gazing at her husband anxiously. He was romping with Fitts, her little white dog, that hitherto he had scorned to touch. Ellen announced dinner, and the two sat down to a tempting meal. James helped his wife carefully, and then placed upon his own plate some peas and baked potatoes.

"James!"

"Well, dear?"

"Aren't you going to have any lamb?"

"No, dear."

"Why not, pray?"

"Well, Eva, if you must have it, your husband is from now on a vegetarian."

"James!"

"Yes, my dear. I interviewed three doctors regarding it, and am taking their advice to totally abstain from all meat!"

Eva stared at her husband.

"Well, Eva, don't look so! Haven't you noticed how full of life I am—how buoyant?"

"Yes."

"Well, then—don't you like to have me like that?"

"I suppose so."

"Of course you do. Hurry with your dinner, now, and we'll go to the beach."

The days that followed were nightmares for Eva. In vain she planned to have tempting meals—it was distinctly hard when the item of meat was entirely forbidden.

One perfect September day found Eva very hungry for "something good." She knew James' liking for chicken, and so she decided to tempt him once more. She dismissed Ellen, donning a big apron, and tackled the supper herself. Six-thirty brought James, hot and tired, and slimmer than ever. She noticed with concern the dark rings under his eyes. Something must be done.

"Come, wash up for supper, dear—we are alone tonight."

"Don't want any supper!" he mumbled, and left the room.

Eva sat for a moment motionless, and then, without touching a mouthful, carried the food back to the kitchen and carefully placed it in the oven to keep warm. Then she joined her husband. He didn't care to talk. She played softly and sang to him. He growled savagely and declared he was going to bed.

For two hours she remained wide-awake, but at last her vigil was rewarded. James stirred softly, raised himself on his elbow and peered into her face. Then, apparently satisfied that she was sound asleep, he crept out and left the room.

Eva heard him go down stairs, his slippers flapping. Quietly she followed him and found him peering into the ice-box, only to be disappointed. After ten minutes' searching, he found the still warm supper in the oven.

Greedily he tore a leg from the chicken and bit into it. Eva could wait no longer, but went out from her hiding place behind the door and confronted him.

"James, you infant!" she cried, with just a hint of tears in her voice.

"Well, Eva, I was so beastly hungry!" he mumbled shamefacedly, his mouth full.

"I know it, dear, but you might at least give me some. I haven't had any supper!"

"No supper!" exclaimed her husband. "Why not, pray?"

"I waited for you, dear," she replied, drawing a chair up to the kitchen table. "Hustle, now, and give me some of those potatoes. I'm starved!"

"How in tunket did you know—"

"I didn't, dear, but I hoped—"

James laid down his chicken leg and wiped his greasy face. "Eva, you're a nice old thing, ain't you?" and he hugged her shamelessly, in spite of the raised curtains and possibly spying neighbors.

"Doctors are all right," he declared later, when his inner man had been appeased, "but they don't know it all! Got any pie?"

An Important Part Of Fall HOUSECLEANING

Clean your electric bulbs and fixtures thouroughly and carefully. This is an economic measure as well as a feature of good housekeeping. In order to get full value of the current you are useing, let the light gleam through clear, shinning glass.

TO CLEAN LAMP BULBS
Remove them from fixture. Wipe the glass part with a danp cloth and polish with dry cloth.

TO CLEAN FIXTURES
Remove glass shades and wash in warm, soapy water. It may be necessary to use a small brush. The inverted bowls of semi-inderect lights should be wiped with a hot, damp cloth and a little non-scratching cleaning powder.

Shirred silk shades can sometimes be cleaned by brushing well, first with a dry brush, then with a brush dipped in lukewarm suds, and drying at once with a soft towel. Delicate and expensive shades should be dry cleaned,

Polish brass and other metal parts, and wipe with a dry cloth the long, silk cords on floor and table lamps. Use a furniture polish on mahogany finished lamh bases.

CRISIS IN NEAR EAST IS EASIER

CONDITIONS ARE WORSE

Allied Evacuation of Constantinople Still Being Considered—Greeks Accused by Turkish General of Forcing War.

Constantinople—From Angora comes the report that Rafeal Pasha, the Nationalist governor, has been instructed to press the demand for complete control of Constantinople without allied interference.

Constantinople—There is an appreciable slackening of the tension which has prevailed over the successive demands of the Kemalists for greater control of Constantinople. Although no official announcement was made, it was stated in allied circles that sober reflection by the Turks has caused them to make no further provocative gestures before the opening of the Lausanne conference.

Thus, while the situation continues uncertain, it is felt that the peril of a rupture has momentarily been averted.

Situation Improved.

The departure for London of Colonel Gribben, British chief-of-staff, and the decision of Sir Horace Rumbold, the British high commissioner, to leave for Lausanne, was interpreted as indicating an improvement in the situation.

Nevertheless, a persistent impression prevails in some quarters that the Allies may find it expedient to evacuate the capital before peace is concluded.

Turks Cared For.

The British embassy is giving asylum to several hundred Turks of the old regime, including many former ministers whose lives are in peril.

Meanwhile, the economic situation grows worse; prices of fodstuffs are steadily soaring and business houses continue to suspend, their owners departing.

Demands of Turkey Outlined.

Lausanne—Turkey demands merely that it be dealt with as a government founded as other responsible governments are, and that it be allowed to enjoy the same rights in its international relations. This, in brief, was the statement made to representatives of the world's press by General Ismet Pasha, head of the Turkish delegation.

Ismet denied reported wholesale atrocities against Greeks, and said there had been an organized effort to stultify the Turkish Nationalists in the eyes of the western world. The Turks he said protected women and children in their movement against Smyrna, and avoided loss of life as far as possible during the operations.

1400 DEAD CHILE QUAKE TOLL

Santaigo, Chile—The latest advices from Villenar say the entire town was destroyed. Only three houses are standing. Thus far 600 dead have been counted, but many of the streets have not yet been cleared of debris, under which additional bodies are expected to be found. The advices say that it is expected the total deaths in Villenar alone will reach 1,000.

Fourteen hundred persons lost their lives in the devastating earthquake and tidal wave which rent the coast of northern Chile, according to the most accurate estimates.

Starvation, pestilence, and exposure are claiming additional victims in the wake of the disaster, and relief caravans are pushing forward to aid the homeless in the stricken area.

Communication with the shattered towns along the coast from Valparaiso to Antofagasta, the district which bore the brunt of the quake and upheaval of the Pacific, was still disrupted, but couriers brought word to the capital of whole villages leveled by the quake with survivors wounded lying by the hundreds in the streets.

Vellenar, Coplapo and Coquimbo, three little coastal towns, suffered most from the great shock. They were inundated by a rush of the Pacific, which followed the first earth tremor, but little villages further back in the hills appeared also to have suffered a terrific loss of life and property which it may never be possible to estimate.

It was reported that whole communities were wiped out.

This quake was felt over the entire South American continent and recorded on the seismographs of the world, lasted over three hours.

Not Seeking Argument, Says Tiger.

On board the steamship Paris, en route to New York—Former Premier Clemenceau reacted promptly to a wireless message from Jean Longuet, French deputy and leader of the minority Socialists, now lecturing in America, who challenged him to a debate on the league of nations. "I am going to America to talk to Americans, not to argue with Frenchmen," he commented. "I can have all the debates I want with them back home."

J. B. ASWELL

Re-election to his seat in the house of representatives will cost Congressman J. B. Aswell of Louisiana only $17, according to his expense returns which he has filed. Congressman Aswell holds the record for low expenditures in the present campaign. When he filed his report it was accompanied by an announcement that he would not spend any more money.

SPECIAL SESSION CALL

Congress to be Convened Two Weeks In Advance.

Washington—Congress was called by President Harding to meet in extra sesison November 20, exactly two weeks in advance of the regular session. The call, set forth as is usual in the form of a proclamation, declared the extra session was made necessary by public interests.

The call of the special session two weeks in advance of the regular meeting has been approved generally by Republican leaders in Congress who have felt that by getting an earlier start on legislation than would be afforded by the regular sesison, practically all important bills, could be disposed of by next March 4, when the Sixty-seventh Congress must adjourn sine die.

Leaders have asserted that unless the special session were called it would be necessary to have an extra session after March 4 and work into the sumer months.

NO HALLS-MILLS JURY ACTION

Prosecutor Fails to Produce Evidence Warranting Indictments, Is Belief.

New Brunswick, N. J.—The Hall-Mills murder mystery remains a mystery and there seemed to be no immediate prospect of its being cleared up.

No official announcement has been made as to the result of the conference in Somerville between Deputy Attorney General Wilbur A. Mott, in charge of the case, and the foreman of the Somerset county grand jury.

Mr. Mott declined to make any statement when he emerged from the conference but his attitude indicated that he had been unable to convince Foreman Gibb and other local officials that he had enough evidence to warrant grand jury action.

The grand jury has been called to meet here to take up its regular term, but Mr. Mott said the Hall-Mills case would not be presented this week.

JURIST DEFIES DEATH THREAT

Judge Who Sent Wets to Jail Defies Anonymous Writers.

Minneapolis—Threatened with death if he persisted in meting out straight jail sentences to bootleggers and blind piggers, Federal Judge Page Morris has struck back at writers of anonymous letters which he has received by defying them to do their worst and announcing that more drastic punishment than ever is in store for men who persist in breaking the prohibition laws.

"I will not be intimidated by any such threats," the veteran judge said, just before boarding a Duluth train, where he went to cast his vote.

At least three anonymous messages, designed to frighten Judge Morris, have been received by him and turned over to R. M. Hugdahl, postal inspector, who has started an investigation to identify the authors.

Woman's Dream Saves 60 Lives.

New York—A woman's dream is credited with saving the lives of 60 dwellers in a Bronx tenement. Mrs. Jessie Barrotti dreamed of flames leaping through the house, and of muffled footsteps creaking down the hallways. She awoke screaming, "the house is afire." Under protest her husband got up, went down the hall and found a fire blazing near the door of the aaprtment where slept the wife and six children of a policeman. All 60 residents escaped without injury.

20 Naval Cadets Battle Flames.

Annapolis — Twenty midshipmen from the U. S. naval academy narrowly escaped death here when, in an heroic battle against fire, they fought they way up Chesapeake Bay on a sub-chaser. It was a battle that will long live in the memories of those who stood on shore and watched the fight imperiling the academy students until the sub-chaser was finally beached on the shore of the naval experiment station. The craft was burned beyond repair, the flames eating away all the superstructure.

TURKS RESTIVE AS ENVOYS GATHER

Feminine Mob Pounces on, Kil Editor Condemned By Nationalists.

Lausanne—The arrival at Lausanne of Ismet Pasha, with a patry of 18 Turks, all wearing tall astrachan caps and fur overcoats, gave the Near Eastern conference the first touch of actuality.

The French foregn office announced that the Grecco-Turkish peace conference to be held at Lausanne had been tentatively set for "not later than November 20."

In the mean time reports say that Constantinople may be likened to a vast powder magazine, which the British are striving in the face of growing difficulties to keep from ignition. General Harington is urging the home government to hasten the peace conference as the best means of avoiding an open rupture.

He believes that if the Turks can be held in leash until the Lausanna meeting begins, the danger of hostilities will be averted.

The latest concession is abolition of allied censorship of Turkish newspapers and withdrawal of supervision over the Constantinople-Angora telegraph lines and other international and civil administrative machinery.

Rafet Pasha, the Nationalist governor, now has an equal voice in all matters relating to security and order in the city.

A report from Constantinople say that Ali-Kemal Bey, editor of the Anti-Nationalist newspaper Sabah, who was arrested at Ismid on the charge of subversive actions was killed by a mob lead by women after having been officially condemned to death.

GAS OVERCOMES 20 FIREMEN

Flames Start in Basement at Sixth and Nicollet—Stocks Damaged.

Minneapolis—Twenty firemen were overcome by gas while fighting a fire at Sixth street and Nicollet avenue.

Joseph Walsh, one of the firemen, was in a serious condition in the General hospital.

Six of the 20 firemen were taken to the hospital after they had been carried from the basement of the building.

The firemen were overcome by a rush of illuminating gas from a pipe which broke as they entered the basement. Of those taken to the hospital all but Walsh were revived. Walsh was unconscious and was believed to be dying, but the use of a pulmoter partially revived him and physicians said he had a chance to recover.

No estimates of the losses has been made. S. S. Wolfson, manager of Byron's, said the stock and fixtures were valued at $60,000.

DEATH LIQUOR BEING SOLD

Denatured Alcohol Being Distilled and Sold by Bootleggers.

Minneapolis—Three deaths in Minneapolis and St. Paul from poisoned moonshine aroused the police of both cities to a war on manufacturers and dispensers of lethal liquors.

A large supply of the death potions, it is believed, may be in the hands of bootleggers. Efforts were being made to trace the source of various liquor supplies.

The number of deaths during the past 72 hours, the authorities said, is a grewsome reminder of the Christmas season horror of several years ago when scores of drinkers either died or suffered agonies from poisoned moonshine.

The latest deaths occurred in St. Paul, indicating that the vendors of the poison, have temporarily transferred their operations to that city.

BEER-WINE TO PAY BONUS

Illinois Representative Will Offer Measure at Special Session.

Chicago—The soldiers' bonus bill, with an adidtional provision to pay the bonus by a tax on light wines and beer, will be reintroduced in Congress by Congressman Fred A. Britten of Illinois, he announced here.

The congressman declared that the addition for a beer and wines tax would be drafted so as to supersede the Volstead enforcement act definition of intoxicating liquors.

"My addition to the bonus bill will provide a tax of $10 a barrel on beer, $2 a gallon on domestic wines, $4 a gallon on imported still wines and $8 a gallon on imported champagnes.

"This tax, I am certain, will pay the bonus and all expenses incident to its payment."

Representative Britten said his bill would be introduced at the special session of Congress.

Mrs. Harding Is Much Improved.

Washington—Market improvement in the condition of Mrs. Harding was announced by her physician, Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, who said she is now able to stand and take a few steps.

4,000 Christians Slain, 8,000 Missing.

Smyrna—Four thousand Armenian Christians have been killed in the Vilayet of Smyrna, and 8,000 more are missing, it was reported by the committee of bishops which has been investigating the plight of Armenians.

1,000 DEAD IN CHILE DISASTER

Toll of Earthquake and Tidal Wave of Great Magnitude.

Santiago, Chili—With partial re-establishment of communication, Chile's earthquake catastrophe is revealed in even greater magnitude than first reports indicated. It is estimated that at least 1,000 are dead, and many thousands are in distress, needing food and shelter.

Santiago, Chile—An earthquake of great magnitude rocked Chile from end to end. It was accompanied by a tidal wave, and the combined force of the earth tremors and the sweep of the water did vast damage, the extent of which it is impossible to estimate because telegraphic lines were carried down at various places, cutting off communication.

At Coquimbo one hundred persons were drowned when the tidal wave, coming after the earthquake, swept in with a great roar. The inhabitants were panic stricken and ran to the hills. The advance of the sea was accompanied by electrical discharges.

In Antofagasta and Copiapo, capital of the province of Atacamo scores of persons were killed and many wounded so far is known Vallenar suffered most. At Chanaral great tidal waves swept over the commercial section of the city wreickng the postoffice among other buildings.

In addition to heavy casualties of dead and injured at Copiapo and Coquimbo, it was reported that 500 were killed at Vallenar and the surrounding district. Vallenar was virtually destroyed and the survivors are in a critical condition.

The first shocks were felt in Antofagata City a few minutes before midnigth and almost immediately the telegraphic connections were broken.

About 1:30 a. m. a tidal wave inundated part of the city, flooding scores of buildings close to the beach. The radio station was completely flooded, the water surging for more than a mile over the dunes.

All the affected areas are badly in need of relief. Communication with Santiago, Valparaiso and southern Chile is interrupted.

AID RUSHED TO BURNING SHIP

Coast Guard Cutter Answers Calls of Distress from Boat off Hatteras.

Norfolk, Va.—Assistance was sent to a steamer afire 75 miles off Cap Hatteras, wireless messages stating that the blaze which started in No. 2 hold, was spreading and the crew was in jeopardy. As received here the messages indicated that the steamer was the Munsono, but investigation developed that vessel was in port at Baltimore, and steamship officials expressed the belief that the craft was the Mundale, a craft of 2,071 tons register which plies between New York and Cuba.

The coast guard cutter Manning, which already had left for the assistance of the schooner Lillian E. Kerr, reported in distress 75 miles off Cape Henry, was instructed by wireless to proceed to the aid of the steamer and other craft were dispatched to the schooner.

DISAGREE ON SOLUTION

French Still Advocate Rigid Control of Berlin Finances.

Paris—The Allied reparations commission returned to Paris after two weeks of inquiry in Berlin without having reached a unanimous decision as to the best means of saving Germany from financial collapse.

The British, the Italian and it is believed the Belgian delegates are of the opinion that the report of the experts submitted in Berlin forms soundest basis for the solution of Germany's financial difficulties, that is, the balancing of the budget and the stabilizing of the mark. The American observers also endorsed the experts' report as a possible solution.

Louis Barthou, the French representative, however, with the support of his government, still holds to the view that a rigid control of German internal finance should preecde any other measures for assisting Germany.

4 Warships Sink in Naples Harbor.

London—A fire which started at the port of Naples when blazing napths spread over the harbor, caused 10 million fire damage, according to the Naples correspondent of the Central News.

The correspondent reported that the fire was still burning when he forwarded his dispatch, that many warships in the harbor were enveloped and that two gunboats had been destroyed and four torpedo boats were on fire, two destroyers were in danger ant that one cruiser and one destroyer had been sunk.

Greece's As Nation Depends on Relief.

Washington—Alarm over the influx of refugees into Greece was expressed in advices from Athens to American Red Cross headquarters which quoted Dr. Doxiades, Greek minister of relief, as declaring that inability of Greece to support the increased population placed the nation's fate in the balance.

"Whether we survive or perish as a nation," said Dr. Doxiades, "depends on the help we get from the outside."

UNIVERSITY MAN HOME FROM RUST STUDYING

Europe Has Fought Black Rust to Standstill by Killing Barberries.

The black steam rust of wheat and other grains no longer seriously troubles the farmers of western Europe because it has been practically eliminated by the simple process of eradicating the common, barberry bush. This is the report brought back to University Farm by Dr. E. C. Stakman, a plant pathologist of national reputation, who has just returned from a five months' tour of western European countries. Dr. Stakman was commissioned by the United States Department of Agriculture to make a thorough study of rust and barberry conditions in the foreign countries.

Dr. Stakman found that the black stem rust had decreased everywhere in proportion to the thoroughness with which the barberries have been removed. The evidence of this fact in England and Denmark is particularly conclusive, he said. During the course of extended automobile travels in England and Wales he could not find a trace of black stem rust except on a few farms where there were barberries. The mature judgment of most of the plant pathologists of England is that black stem rust cannot exist without the common barberry, he said.

DR. E. C. STAKMAN
Minnesota University Plant Pathologist, who has been studying Black Stem Rust and Barberry Conditions in Western European Countries for the Federal Government.

Dr. Stakman found that even the peasants of the Alps and Jura mountains understand the despicable relation between the barberry and the development of rust. The only reason the bushes are permitted to remain in mountainous districts is the difficulty in reaching them and also because only a little grain is grown. In Italy the Minnesota scientist found that black stem rust is destructive only in the mountains and in the northern part where there are barberries. Barberry bushes have been almost completely removed in Denmark and there has not been a serious outbreak of rust since 1903.

"Nothing could be more convincing than the contrast between the rust situation in Denmark and that in Sweden," said Dr. Stakman. "In Denmark the rust does no damage whatever. In Sweden, on the other hand, it is extremely destructive because of the tremendous number of barberry bushes in that country."

Dr. Stakman brought back the seeds of many promising grain varieties, particularly wheat, and collected a large amount of material for plant studies. He also brought home copies of laws by the enforcement of which western European countries have freed themselves of the menace of black stem rust.

Age will deteriorate cream at any temperature. A low temperature simply retards this action, hence delivery should be made often.

All kinds of livestock will pay good rates on labor and money spent in providing good shelter and proper feeding. A dry comfortable shed will help to cheapen the cost of gains in fattening steers. The division of agricultural engineering, University Farm, has prepared a large number of plans for barns, sheds, cribs, granaries, etc. Why not send for this list?

ICE CREAM FOOD FOR ALL THE YEAR

Cools You in Summer, Warms You in Winter, Says College Man.

Increased consumption of ice cream is urged by C. D. Dahle, of the dairy husbandry division of the state university. Ice cream; says Mr. Dahle, should no longer be regarded as a luxury to be eaten on certain occasions only. What has been considered a delicacy or a confection has, he says, definite food values equal to those of many other foods.

Comparing the nutritive value of ice cream with that of various common foods, Mr. Dahle says, that a quart or a brick of ice cream which weighs about 1.2 pounds is equal to three and three-fourths pounds of chicken, one and two-fifths pounds of beefsteak, 14 eggs (medium size), four-fifths of a pound of ham or 10¾ pounds of tomatoes.

"All of the elements needed to keep the body functioning correctly are found in even larger amounts in ice cream than in milk," says Mr. Dahle. "Butterfat is present in ice cream in large amounts, usually 10 to 14 per cent, and this fat is essential to the body for the production of heat and energy. The fat from this cold product produces heat for the body, as well as does any other fat. So you can see if ice cream is eaten in the winter time it helps warm your body. For this reason it is not a summer food, but an all year around food. It would have a greater cooling effect in the summer if it did not contain quite so much fat. The fat of ice cream also contains the famous fat soluble vitamine which is so essential to growth of children.

"Protein is found in abundance and is utilized by nature in replacing cells which are being constantly broken down in the body, especially when the body is at work. Milk sugar which is utilized for heat and energy is also found in abundance in ice cream along with 13 to 15 per cent added cane sugar, which increases the flavor and amount of food for energy."

Without figuring in the overhead expense, such as labor, Mr. Dahle fixes the cost of making ice cream in the home at 80 to 90 cents a gallon. A quart of ice cream, which costs around 22 cents when made at home, will furnish six persons with a good sized dish each, making the cost per dish less than 4 cents. "No more time is required to make this than is required to make most of the common desserts used in the home," says Mr. Dahle. "Ice cream, however, contains nutritive value and palatability in a much greater degree than many other foods at the same price. Ice cream should have a more prominent place in our diet than it has today."

"Recreation in Rural Communities."

W. C. Coffey, dean of the University Department of Agriculture, and Thomas Cooper, dean of the Kentucky College of Agriculture will give addresses at a big mass meeting which will open the Farmers' and Homemakers' Short Course week at University Farm. This meeting will be held on New Year's day afternoon in the big auditorium at the farm. Dean Cooper will speak on "Farms of Tomorrow." Miss Mignon Quaw formerly with the Montana College of Agriculture will illustrate a talk on "Recreation in Rural Communities" by conducting recreational exercises in which her audience will be called upon to participate.

This great short course for farm people will run through the remainder of the first week of the new year. Class room work will be so arranged that persons attending can select the subjects of their interest.

Flax Should Be Good 1923 Crop.

Farm crops men connected with the university believe that flax will be a good crop to grow next year. Relatively high prices for flax are being maintained, university men pointing out that it is selling for more than $2 a bushel or twice the price of wheat, whereas several years ago it usually sold at only 30 to 50 cents above the wheat price. The improved industrial conditions serves to keep the price of flax seed on a substantial basis. Prof. A. C. Arny, who is in charge of the farm crops section of the university, recommends that wilt-resistant flax seed be saved for planting on old land. Some other variety can be used for sowing on new land which is not infected with wilt. Some wilt-resistant seed can be obtained in Minnesota. Professor Arny says, while North Dakota usually has large supplies which can be drawn upon.

Barrel of Rome Beauties From Lawrence County, Ohio, Showing Label Used by Co-operatives.

Thirty carloads of apples had been marketed co-operatively by three local growers' organizations in Gallia and Lawrence counties, Ohio, up to the first of October, with the marketing season just starting. This year marks the first efforts for large-scale co-operative fruit marketing in the state, and the success of this year's efforts is expected to result in the extension of the work over a considerably larger territory next year. The locals are affiliated with the Ohio Fruit Growers' Co-operative association and the State Farm Bureau federation.

Rome Beauties, an apple developed in Ohio and extensively grown in the southern part of the state, are packed in barrels like the one in the picture. The "Buckeye" label is the brand adopted by the Ohio co-operatives. Apples have been marketed by the co-operatives as far south as Florida and in a number of eastern markets. One sale of Grimes Golden, which netted growers over $1,000, made by them, was branded by market experts as one of the best sales in the country for this kind of fruit. The organizations were unable to fill all of their orders from this year's crop.

Peaches have been marketed by Ohio growers this year under the same co-operative plan, and with the use of the same brand name.

PLAN PROPOSED FOR AFFILIATING FORCES

Three Ohio Organizations Practically Agree on Terms for Co-operative Marketing.

Correlation of effort in co-operative live stock marketing in northwestern and north central Ohio is being sought by leaders of three farm organizations at the present time. Several conferences, attended by representatives of the Ohio Live Stock Shippers' association and the Ohio Farm Bureau federation, which are already affiliated in live stock marketing endeavor, and by Equity organizations which have been marketing live stock in connection with their co-operative elevators, have already been held.

While final agreement as to the methods of working together have not been adopted, definite proposals have been made for such agreement, and, with two or three exceptions, agreed upon by the organizations mentioned. Both sides, it is maintained by those favoring the affiliation, have much to gain by it.

Under the plan proposed the Equity shipping points would, in most instances, be made the local center of county co-operative companies that are operating in the territory.

While the final agreement has not been made, leaders on both sides believe that the difficulties standing in the way of highest efficiency in co-operative marketing by both the county co-operatives and the Equity organizations can be overcome.

WINNER IN HEALTH CONTEST

Paul Funk of Shirley, Ill., Had High Score With 98.9—Eugene White Is Second.

Paul Funk, eighteen-year-old farm lad from Shirley, Ill., who was president last year of War Eagle Boys and Girls' Club camp at Sioux City, was champion in the health contest among the boys at the interstate fair where the ten north central states competed. His score was 98.9. At the right is Eugene White of Guiderock, Neb., who was a close second with a score of [illegible]

CLUB BOY WON CHAMPIONSHIP

Norman Walker of Sloan, Ia., Is Winner at Sioux City Fair With His Fat Steer.

This club boy won the championship in the Shorthorn fat classes at the recent interstate fair at Sioux City in competition with over forty head, among them being very prominent shorthorn breeders. This thirteen-year-old lad is Norman Walker of Sloan, Ia., and he has been doing club work only one year. His steer, Buster Brown, is a purebred, fourteen months old. He was fed 260 days, his initial weight being 410 pounds, final weight 1,025 pounds, gaining 615 pounds with an average daily gain of 2.33 pounds. The average cost per pound of gain was .077, the initial cost of the steer was $28.70 and the total cost, including feed and labor, $76.42. Norman attributes his success first to selecting a well-bred steer, and second to his careful feeding. The feed consisted of ground corn, oats, barley, alfalfa, oil meal with a little brown sugar for dessert to whet Buster's appetite.

TURKEY RAISING MAY BE MADE VERY PROFITABLE OCCUPATION

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Despite a steady increase in the prices producers have received for turkeys since 1915, production has steadily decreased, according to figures published by the United States Department of Agriculture. The average prices received during the four months October to January, 1915-16, was 15 cents a pound. The average price received during the corresponding period in 1920-21, was 32 cents a pound. In 1900, the census figures showed 6,594,695 turkeys on farms in the United States, while in 1910, there were only 3,688,708, and in 1920 there were 3,627,028.

Big Increase in Price.

During the past six years the price of turkeys has increased to the producer more than 100 per cent, while during the past 20 years the number of turkeys produced has decreased about 50 per cent, the department states.

It is common knowledge that turkeys are not easily handled, for by nature they are wanderers, and they usually give considerable concern to those whose duty it is to keep them on the home premises. The almost unconquerable inclination of turkeys to wander into the fields of neighbors has often caused strained feelings, and many owners of flocks have abandoned the business of raising turkeys on that account. Turkeys are also seriously afflicted by a disease known as blackhead which has caused heavy losses, and in some instances the business has been given up entirely for this reason. These causes of loss together with the frequent ravages of wild animals including dogs and rats, have all tended to discourage development of the industry.

The raising of turkeys may be a very profitable occupation where there is an abundance of range, ample feed, and reasonable freedom from preying animals, the department states. Even for those who have a limited range there are opportunities for raising a few turkeys each year if proper time and attention are devoted to it. The department points out, however, the desirability of those who enter the business to study it thoroughly in all its features.

Difficult to Ship Alive.

It is very difficult to ship turkeys alive to market since the shrinkage is very heavy. Ordinarily turkeys do not eat very much when confined, and therefore they are usually killed and dressed locally and then shipped to market, packed in barrels or boxes. Turkeys, like chickens, may be either scalded or dry picked, but the dry-picked birds are preferred in most markets because they keep better, and there are no losses of their substance by reason of a great deal of the soluble substance being removed by soaking in water or by packing in ice. There are conditions, of course, where there is no alternative but to pack the birds in ice and ship them in barrels. The objection to scalded-dressed birds does not obtain to the same extent where the birds are dressed and sold immediately to the consumer.

An Excellent Specimen.

Turkeys mature and fleshen very much better in the fall when the atmosphere is crisp and fairly cold, such as prevails for some weeks preceding the holiday season. During this season the birds are in greatest demand, although the cold storage product may be had at all seasons. Warm weather during the week preceding the holidays has a marked effect on demand, and, other conditions being equal, the quality of dressed turkeys for the holiday market may be predicted to a great degree by weather conditions during the fall season.

RAISING SCRUB LIVE STOCK

Unnecessary Waste of Time and Feed, Declares Doctor Mohler, Chief of Animal Bureau.

"There is increasing evidence," declares Dr. J. R. Mohler, chief of the bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, "that raising scrub live stock is an unnecessary waste of time and feed. Any live stock owner can improve the quality of his herds and flocks by the better-sires route. Purebred sires permit the raising of grades, crossbreds, or purebreds—whichever is preferred—depending on the kind of females used."

Increasing Milk Checks.

The cows should now be kept in the barn at night and made as comfortable as possible. This care combined with plenteous feeding will do much toward making the winter milk checks larger.

Shallow Cultivation Best.

Generally speaking, the shallower the cultivation the better, as long as weeds are killed.

PEAS THRIVE IN MANY SECTIONS

Too Much Space Required for Growing in Garden.

Crop Will Thrive on Almost Any Good Garden Soil and Require Only Moderate Amount of Fertilizer—Alaska Seed Best.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Peas, sometimes spoken of as English peas, are adapted for growing from the Gulf of Mexico to Canada, and from Maine to California, with the exception of a few local sections where they do not thrive. Peas require too much space for growing extensively in the small garden, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, but are especially adapted to the farm garden.

In Florida and certain of the gulf coast regions, the seed is planted in the fall and the peas gathered during the first days of spring. Farther north the seed is planted in February and March and the peas ready for use in May and June. Going still farther into New England and the northwest they are planted in April and ready for use in July or August, all dependent, however, upon the locality. In the southern district, where the ground rarely ever freezes, the seeds are planted about 1½ inches deep, but farther north where late freezes are liable to form a heavy crust over the ground the seed should be covered three to four inches in light sandy soils but not quite so deep in heavier or clay soils.

Alaska or Earliest of All is considered one of the best of the early varieties and easy to grow. One pint of seed of the Alaska will plant about 100 feet of row, and while it is desirable to have brush or wire netting for them to climb on, they may be grown without any support whatever. Gradus, Thomas Laxton, American Wonder, Sutton's Excelsior and Laxtonian are among the best early peas.

A Close Shave

The present state administration escaped being ousted by a mighty narrow margin at election last week. It was not so much dissatisfaction with those in office, as with present day conditions that brought out the protest vote. Had President Harding been up for re-election this year, his chances would have been on par with zero. Unless there is a big change in living conditions within the next two years, another election will see the republican party ousted in favor of either the Democratic or Farm-Labor party.

Spring-Time Again

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mary Martin paused a moment on the high brownstone stoop. In the bleak yard across the street the old maple was sending out a blurry green; at the end of the block a street organ was grinding melodiously.

Spring again.

Loneliness was worse in spring, it seemed to reach out and stir forgotten things. The things she had dreamed a few years ago, the things she had made herself forget.

Mary slipped her key into the lock, pushed open the door and stood a moment in the dimness of the hall before she mounted the narrow stairs to her room.

Another long empty evening awaited her. She could see the tin of cocoa and the saucepan behind the makeshift curtain, the cup with the chipped rim, the library book on the desk under the window, the one chair with its sagging tapestry seat. She gave a little sound supposedly a laugh, that was somehow like a sob.

A bell shivered the silence of the hall; it was a moment before Mary realized it was only the telephone and that Mrs. Johnson was out. She lifted the receiver mechanically and then her heart thumped unsteadily and her voice was almost husky as she listened.

"Mrs. Johnson? This is John Northrop speaking. I wondered if you'd let me look at that edition—"

"Mrs. Johnson isn't in—". Mary had time to interpolate.

She knew that he thanked her; that she said something vague in reply and then she was mounting the stairs to her room. John Northrop! The writer, the dark, fascinating man that Mrs. Johnson spoke of so continuously since first he had come to buy one of her husband's old books. And his voice. Mary felt herself grow warm from head to foot as his voice still rang in her ears, masculine, deep, resonant; it had a quality that made romance visible.

Mary Still Hesitated.

How avidly she read his book reviews; how carefully she hid the newspaper picture of him that she had cut one evening! He was brilliant, impulsive, an outstanding figure.

This evening was somehow set apart, she had only heard a man's voice over the telephone, and yet she could not settle down in her usual monotonous rut.

"I won't meet him if he does come here," she said suddenly aloud. "Why, he could know anyone he wanted. John Northrop, the reviewer! And I—I'm afraid to meet him."

Suddenly she put her head down in the circle of her arms and the hot tears seared her eyelids. She had barely time to wipe them away before the door opened and Mrs. Johnson in her unceremonious way was leaning against the door frame.

"Well! What have you been doing tonight?" she asked, suspiciously, sniffing the cocoa-laden air. Then a smile touched her good-natured face. "A man was asking after you. There's no need to start so! It was Mr. Northrop and he wanted to know who the girl with the charming voice was!"

"Why, you're right pretty when you blush up like that!" Mrs. Johnson went on. "Now, I told him he could meet you if he came here about half past 8—"

"No! No! No!" Mary cried breathlessly. "I don't want to meet him! I can't."

She was obdurate to all Mrs. Johnson's assurances and [illegible] girls, charming girls, girls with fortunes and girls with names, to fall in love at last with just a little nobody like herself.

"I would fall in love with him," she told herself, "and what would be the good of that? He must be used to having every woman he meets fascinated."

She took out his picture again and surreptitiously studied the dark thick brows, the speaking eyes, the finely cut face that was strongly masculine.

When half an hour later she heard steps mounting the stairs it only took her half a minute to turn out her gas, to slip into her closet behind her clothes and to stand there breathing heavily as Mrs. Johnson opened the door.

"She's out," Mary heard the good woman pant on her downward way.

During the next ten days Mary led a strangely delightful, strangely new kind of existence. Sometimes the telephone rang in the evenings when Mrs. Johnson was out and Mary heard again John Northrop's voice. She knew now his errand was fictitious. But she was firm in her resolve not to meet him.

John Northrop, who had always had everything he wanted, was unable to understand this strange, elusive girl. He knew her only by her voice—silvery sweet with a deeper undertone; he had seen a litte picture of her on Mrs. Johnson's mantel. Friendly eyes, a shy smile and a piquant pointed chin had seemed to him the personification of that exquisite voice. He must meet her. He could still hear the light flutter of her laugh on the telephone, the question that her goodby held. He had been pursued too long not to know the delight of the pursuer. He even found himself restless and dissatisfied these last days—he decided on one last strategy.

Mary would never meet him; she had resolved that, she could almost picture the look of disappointment that would flash across his dark face, his strained politeness, her own tongue-tied humiliation.

And yet in spite of that she bought herself a charming frock, a frock with a hint of gold in its brown depths and a hat that bore the hallmark of Paris.

She tried them on on a Saturday afternoon, when she had come back from the office, and turned startled at a knock on her door. A white box with suspiciously fragrant odor made her tremble a moment with excitement. Violets, with heavy purple heads and an exquisite bow of gold and brown ribbon! There was no card, of course, and Mary hesitated before she fastened them to her belt.

How could she stay indoors now? Spring was calling; and although she had only the city pavements and the faces of strangers who would pass unrecognizing, she waited to feel a part of this teeming life.

But halfway up the block her knees trembled under her and she felt the blood beat into her temples. She would have known him anywhere! Only one man had such dark, cryptic eyes, only one man could have such a distinguished manner. Blushing furiously, she looked away, and then a voice, the most beautiful she had ever heard, stopped her.

"I shouldn't have dared speak unless I'd seen you were wearing my violets!"

"How do you know they are your violets?" Mary asked, lifting a pair of shy, soft eyes.

"I chose that gold and brown ribbon myself and had those violets sent to the girl who would not let me meet her!"

"But now that we have met, don't you think—don't you think—" Mary stumbled, backing away.

"I think you are the most elusive and charming person I have ever wanted to know," he cut in, "and if you will just let me try I'd like to show you I'm not the unpleasant person you have evidently heard I was!"

Mary still hesitated.

"But I—"

"Oh, I say, Miss Martin," he begged boyishly, "if you'd just give me a chance! I know I'm only a duffer, but I'd like to show you that I could be your friend—"

Down the block a street organ was grinding melodiously. The faint green of the maple was a blur before Mary's eyes.

Spring again.

There was something strangely poignant in life as John Northrop fell into step beside her.

THAT WORD "TREMENDOUS"

The idea of fear and trembling underlies the formation of the word "tremendous." The English word tremble is a close kin, by way of the French language, to the Low Latin word "tremulo."

The Latin word "tremendus" literally meant something that ought to cause trembling, that is to say, fear, either because of the size of the object so designated or because of size added to other fearful qualities.

At first applied to physical objects alone, the word was gradually extended to immaterial things, such as issues, movements, passions or other attributes of the workings of nature or of man. But the origin of the word is the primitive sense of fear at mere size.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

He reinterred the chest, and is seeking the promise of the owner of the estate that he shall receive the legal tariff in return for his disclosure of the hiding place. He now believes that this treasure was cached by another pirate, and is bending new efforts toward finding the Stortebecker hoard.—Scientific American.

The other day two young women called at the department. They were on a sightseeing tour and wanted to go over the department. Some one thought it would be a good joke to play on Barry, so the two young ladies were introduced to him.

"We would like to see the postmaster general's room," said one of the young women with a smile.

Barry disappeared into an inner office, soon to return.

"I'm sorry," he replied, with his best smile, "the postmaster general is in his office now."

The young woman smiled sweetly.

"We would like to see the postmaster general," she said.

Captain Barry did his disappearing act again, but soon returned.

"I'm sorry," he replied, "the postmaster general is out now."—Washington Star.

Mrs. H. E. Ives Dies

Mr. Harry E. Ives died Monday morning last week at the home of he parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Pirath at Red Lake Flls after an illness of many years standing.

Mrs. Ives, who was Miss Catherine Pirath, taught in the local school during 1905 and was married to Mr. Ives, who was then publisher of the Spectator, in 1906.

After leaving here they first resided at Red Lake Falls, later at Thief River and later on at Brainerd until they moved back to Red Lake Falls.

Mrs. Ives suffered a stroke of paralysis during her first years of residence here and had grown steadily worse since then until death came to relieve her sufferings.

Mrs. Ives is survived by her husband, three daughters, Margaret, Francis and Harriet, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. Pirath, and one sister, Mrs. James Cross of Jamestown North Dakota.

Funeral services were held, and interment took place at Red Lake Falls on Wednesday last week. Heartfelt sympathy of many friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity is extended to the bereaved husband and family in their sad loss of wife and mother.

Vinji Sells Bus Line

C. Vinji, who has operated an auto bus line thru here from Thief River Falls to Crookston the past season, has sold his interest to the Triangle Transportation Co. of Crookston. The new owners have put on one of the new model passenger busses instead of the touring car used by Mr. Vinji. The new vehicle made its first trip up this line on Friday last week.

Good Time Frolic

The Sunday School of the Methodist Church are giving a Good Time Frolic in the Imperial Hall Wednesday November 29th at 8:00 p. m. Home made candy, Christmas suggestions, and lunches will be sold. A fish pond for the youngsters will be an attractive feature of the evening. Every one is welcome. Come and have a good time.

C. G. Johnson of West Duluth, is here this week on his annual turkey purchasing trip and for a visit at the N. A. Nelson home. Mr. Johnson is in the produce business in Duluth, and makes a trip up here every year to purchase turkeys and poultry for his holiday trade.

Axel Westerlund left Monday for the Twin Cities where he expects to find employment during the winter. In case he cannot locate anything there, he intends to go to Chicago.

May Get Paving

Many Minnesota cities and villages may secure pavements for streets on the state trunk highway system upon adoption by the Legislature of 1923 of recommendations by the state highway department Such towns as are on the trunk system are to pave the streets designated using state specifications and under state supervision. Then when that particular stretch is reached for paving by the state department. the cost of the 18 foot strip which the state ordinarily builds, will be refunded. The towns will have enjoyed use of the improvement in return for carrying the interest on the fund used. Another recommendation to be made to the legislature is to pass a law requiring vehicles of every description travelling on the trunk system to carry lights. The last is a good suggestion, and will prevent many accidents.

Parcel Shower

On Thursday Nov. 9th Miss Alice Erickson, who will become the bride of Oliver Norquist of North Branch, Minn., this month, was pleasantly surprised with a parcel shower, tendered her by a large number of friends at the Carl Anderson home. The hours were spent socially, after which lunch was served by Mrs. C. Anderson, Mrs. J. Gunstad, Mrs. G. B. Peterson and Mrs. E. J. Eide, the hostess. The bride-to-be was presented with a large number of useful and pretty gifts as a rememberance of the occasion.

Forks Founder Is Dead

Captain M. L. McCormick, one of the founders of Grand Forks, and at one time acting governor of Dakota territory, died last week at his home in St. Paul, Capt. McCormick was seventy-five years of age at time of death.

A little touch of real winter arrived on heels of a sleet storm Saturday night and Sunday. The ground is now frozen and covered with ice, but there is but a trace of snow.

The one best bet of the season is "THE HANDICAP" coming to the Imperial on Thanksgiving night only. 15c-20c & 30c.

New Physician Here

Dr J. Regner, announcement of whose location here was made last week, arrived rather unexpectedly Wednesday night last week by way of the Soo. He is busy this week finding suitable office rooms and getting settled.

Dr. Regner has had many years of general practice, and specializes in treatment of diseases of the chest such as pneumonia and kindred ailments. It is his intention to install up-to-date office equipment as soon a circumstances permit. Dr. Regner is a pleasant gentleman to meet and he will find a hearty welcome in this community.

Diphtheria Scare

The Minneapolis Journal of Tuesday carries a news article from Thief River Falls stating 150 cases of diphtheria exist in that city, and that the city authorities are considering using the auditorium as a hospitial in an attempt to stamp out the desease. The reports also state that the Red Cross has been called upon for cots to be used in the emergency. If the report is true, immediate steps should be taken to prevent a spread of the epidemic to this village, and parents of susceptible children should govern themselves accordingly.

May Extend Lines

Officials of the Red River Power Company have made a proposition to the village authorities at Plummer, Oklee and Brooks whereby they will extend the electric power line from Red Lake Falls to furnish electric service to those villages. Mentor, Erskine, McIntosh and Fosston may also be included in the service if suitable arrangements can be made. Judging by the service furnished St. Hilaire since the line was built here, the towns named above will be extremely fortunate if they can induce the Red River Power Company to furnish them current for light and power under the same conditions as St. Hilaire gets it. Not only will they be served by the best working current, but they will find the company willing to go to most any length to give them first class service at all times.

Community Club

The first meeting of the Community Club this fall will be held at the high school auditorium Friday evening this week. A fine program has been arranged, and lunch will be served by the high school pupils.

FOR HEALTH

What Do You Think About This?

In connection with the opening of the fifteenth annual sale of Christmas Seals, which starts November 22, officials of the Minnesota Public Health Association call our attention to the enormous drop in death rate from tuberculosis. Had the death rate of ten years ago continued, 972 people who are now living would have died this year from tuberculosis The statement follows:

The death rate in 1921 from tuberculosis was lower than it has ever been in the history of the state. In 1911, 119 people out of every 100,000 in the state died of the desease. In 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died of tuberculosis. As compared with 1911, ten years ago, Minnesota is saving 972 lives a year.

In 1920, 90 people out of every 100,000 and in 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died, a saving in 1921 as compared with 1920 of 276 lives.

FIGHT FOR LIFE

SYNOPSIS—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance. Natalie, Coolidge and West plan a visit of charity. Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie for a purpose. Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but leaves. On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He thinks Coolidge was murdered. Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon. West is taken by surprise, knocked out, separated from Sexton, and comes to his senses to find himself bound and helpless, and confronted by a man named Hobart. The man tells him he (West) is interfering with his plans and if he persists will be done away with. West refuses any compromise. Hobart sends for Natalie, hoping she can induce West to give up his quest.

—9—

"In the presence of Percival Coolidge?"

"Yes; he was given a week in which to straighten matters. That is why he killed himself."

"But why is it necessary for you to meet Hobart in a place like this—a veritable thieves' den?"

She shrugged her shoulders, releasing his hand.

"He has not completed his work, and does not think it best for us to be seen together. I know him so well I am not at all afraid, even here. Is that all, Captain West?"

"It seems to explain everything," he admitted, yet far from satisfied.

"And you will drop the whole affair?" she asked anxiously.

"If I say yes—what?"

"You will be released from here, of course, and the whole misunderstanding forgotten."

"And otherwise?"

"I have no means of knowing what the men intend to do. They will accept your pledge, I am sure."

"Possibly, but I am not so sure I will consent to give such a pledge."

"Then you do not accept my word; do not believe what I have told you?"

"Not that exactly, Miss Natalie; I could have faith in your word, except that I believe you to be mistaken, deceived. Hobart is not square; he is using you for his own ends. Under these conditions, I would be a coward to give such a promise, and leave you helpless in this man's power."

"Now Look Out."

"You intend then to refuse?"

"I do; I'll fight it out."

She stared at him, scarcely believing her own ears, her lips parted, a look of angry fright in her eyes.

"You are a fool, Captain West," she burst forth, at last, unable to hold back the words. "I have done my best for you, and you spurn that. Now look [illegible]" [illegible] rapped sharply on the panel of the door.

The change in the girl was so pronounced, her action so impetuous, as to leave West startled and silent. The thought came to him instantly that she was not the innocent victim he had supposed. Her words and movements expressed disappointment, rather than regret. She was angry at his choice, ready to withdraw from him all sympathy, all assistance. Her plea had failed, and the woman had become a tigress. Then she must have been endeavoring to deceive him; as deeply interested as these others—in getting him safely off the trail of this crime. It was a hard lesson, one that instantly turned all his theories upside down, but the truth came to him with blinding, sickening force—she was as guilty as Hobart; they were both working to the same end, endeavoring to get him safely out of the way. They would accomplish this with lies if possible, if not then with force. It was for no other purpose he had been granted this interview alone—in the hope that he might thus be deceived by her. Now he saw through the trick.

These thoughts swept West's brain in a sudden flash of revelation, but he had no chance to act, to denounce her, to make a single movement, before the door opened swiftly, and Hobart slipped eagerly into the room. The first glance the fellow had of the prisoner, standing erect and unbound, must have deceived him into believing the girl had succeeded in her quest.

"So you've set him free," he exclaimed. "The fellow has come to his senses, has he?"

"No, he has not," she snapped with temper darkening her eyes. "I was not afraid of him, so I let him loose, but he's made me no promise. Now it is up to you; I'm done."

She slipped out through the opening, and Hobart leaned against the door, pushing it shut behind her, his scowling eyes watching West intently.

"So, that is how it stands, is it, my man?" he growled threateningly. "You even refuse to accept the word of the lady, do you?"

"Those are very nearly the facts," West replied steadily. "Then I told her I thought she must be mistaken; now I believe she was sent here for no other purpose but to deceive me. If I ever had any doubt of a crime, it has vanished since this interview."

"What crime?"

"Murder; the killing of Percival Coolidge. Is that plain enough, Hobart? I want you to understand. I am fighting this case from now on in the open; it is going to be man to man."

"What the h—l do you mean, you cur?"

"I'll tell you," went on West coldly, determined now to so anger the fellow as to bring the whole matter to a climax, reckless of the consequences. "I charge you with murder. I haven't the proof, but I'll get it; I do not know the object, but I'll find out."

"You fool! You'll never get away from here."

"I am a soldier, and am taking a soldier's chance. Now listen. I feel no particular interest in the death of Percival Coolidge. In my judgment the world is just as well off with him dead as alive. But what this means to Natalie Coolidge is another matter entirely."

"She told you—"

"Yes, she told me—a lie. That is what hurts; what makes me ready to take any chance to put you where you belong. You have lied to her, deceived her, made her your accomplice in crime. I'm fighting for a woman, because she has got no one else to fight for her."

"Oh, I see; in love, hey—with her, or her money?"

"With neither, so far as I know," frankly. "She is a woman helpless in your hands; that is sufficient."

"But, h—l, she hasn't any use for you—didn't she tell you so?"

"Quite plainly—yes. But that is no excuse for any man to play the coward. I am not afraid of you, Hobart, or your gang. You got me before by treachery; I was not looking for trouble. But now I am. I am going through that door, and if you try to stop me you are going to get hurt."

The fellow grinned, one hand thrust into the outer pocket of his coat, his eyes narrowed into ugly slits.

"You think so! You haven't a weapon on you, West, and if you take a step, I'll put you out of commission. I know how to handle your kind, you big bluffer. What I want to know is what you have got in your head, for, believe me, I don't take any stock in this woman stuff. Are you after a slice of old Coolidge's boodle? There's enough of it for all hands to have a dip. How does that hit you?"

"Sounds interesting, at least," admitted West, so earnestly as to attract the other's attention. "But let's talk it over among ourselves—who is listening there?"

Hobart glanced behind at the nearly closed door. It was for only a second [illegible] wicked, vicious blow, with all the propelling force of the body behind it, and Hobart went down stunned, crashing the door tightly shut as he fell. Once he strove blindly to reach his feet, tugging madly at the weapon in his pocket, but West, feeling no mercy, and wide awake to the fact that any shooting would mean a call for help, struck again, sending his groggy opponent flat, and unconscious. It was all the swift work of a minute, and there had been no noise to arouse alarm. Hobart had not even cried out; the only audible sounds being the sharp click of the door, and the dull thud of a falling body.

West emptied the man's pockets, slipping two revolvers into his own;

West Emptied the Man's Pockets.

then stood for an instant motionless, staring down into the white upturned face. He had followed the impulse of the moment; had struck savagely; knowing it was his only chance. Thus far he had done well; but what next? He was conscious of but one thought, one purpose—to escape from this house, unpledged and still free to act. Yet how could this be accomplished? He had no plan, no knowledge even of his surroundings, of what lay beyond the walls of this room. His eyes swept the bare interior, seeing nothing to inspire hope. Hobart had said this room was practically a prison, and it looked it—the walls bare, and unbroken, and a rough single cot. All possibility of egress lay in the closed door, and a narrow window high up in the opposite wall, also tightly shut, and shaded by a heavy curtain.

His hand tried the door cautiously; the knob turned easily enough, but there was no yielding to his pressure. The lock was evidently on the outside, and he could discover no keyhole, no possibility of operating it from within. Then besides in all probability, a guard would be posted outside in the hall, waiting for some signal from Hobart. West glanced again at the recumbent figure, bending over to make sure of his condition, then, gripping a chair, silently crossed the room.

There was not a minute to lose. He knew that he must choose quickly whatever course he pursued. Any instand Hobart might recover consciousness and gain assistance by a rap on the door; indeed his confederates without might not wait for the signal. The silence within, the length of time, might arouse suspicion. The only chance lay in immediate action. Standing on the chair West found the window had been securely nailed into place, but this had been done so long ago, it was quite possible for him to work the nails loose, yet it required all his strength to press up the warped sash sufficiently far to enable him to gain a view outside. It was not encouraging. Evidently he was upon the third floor, at the rear of the building, looking down into a cluttered-up back yard. His eyes could scarcely distinguish what was below, as the only glimmer of light came from a far-distant street lamp at the end of an alley, the faint rays creeping in through holes in the fence. Yet one black shadow seemed to promise the sloping roof of a shed directly below; but even with that to break his fall, it was a desperate leap.

He stared into those uncertain depths, endeavoring to measure the distance, deceived by the shifting shadows, afraid of what lay hidden below. For the moment he forgot all that was behind him, his whole mind concentrated on the perils of so mad a leap into the dark. The awakening came suddenly, the chair jerked from beneath his feet, his body hurled backward. He fell, gripping at the window seat, so that he was flung against the support of a side wall, able to regain his feet, but not to wholly [illegible] and rapped sharply on the door panel. It opened instantly, and big Mike, closely followed by another man, pushed forward into the room. West was trapped, helpless; one man pitted against three. He backed slowly away, brushed back the disheveled hair from his eyes, watching them warily, every animal instinct alert.

Mike took one comprehensive glance at the scene, at the overturned chair, the half-open window, the trapped man crouching motionless against the further wall. The meaning of it all was plain, and his bar-room training gave quick insight as to the part he was to play. He spoke gruffly out into the dark of the hall behind him, an order to some one concealed there; then shut the door tightly, and faced West, his head lowered like a bull about to charge. West understood; he was locked in to fight it out—three against one. Hobart was nearest to him, his face swollen and red, his eyes ugly slits, with teeth snarling between thin lips. The fellow laughed sneeringly, as their glances met.

"Now we'll take care of you, Captain," he taunted. "Never mind his guns, Mike; there's not a load in either of them. Give the guy what he is looking for. Come on, you terriers!"

But West did not wait. There was only one chance, and he took it—to carry the fighting to them. He had no doubt of the emptiness of his guns, and hurled one straight at Hobart's head, leaping forward with the other clutched in his hand straight at Mike, who had scarcely time to fling up one hand in defense. The thrown weapon missed its mark by a narrow inch, striking the wall behind, and falling clattering to the floor, but the other broke through the big saloonkeeper's guard, and sent him reeling to his knees, a gush of blood reddening his hair. Again and again West struck him, driving him prone to the floor before the other two dragged him away, wrestled the weapon from his hand, and closed with him in a desperate death grapple.

What followed he never could relate. He was mad with fury to fight. A mere animal defending life with every means at hand, caring nothing for either wound or hurt so that he won out in the end. Mike was out of it, but the two grappling him fought like wildcats, rough bar-room fighters, resorting to any tactics to disable their opponent. Yet it was this that saved him. Crazed as he was, madly as his brain whirled in the fierce struggle, his long training held supreme—he knew how to fight, remembered instinctively every trick and guard. Again and again his clenched fist reached its mark, and slowly he broke away from clutching hands, and regained his feet. It was a terrific struggle, but luck, as well as skill, was with him. The next he knew, out of the red ruck, was that he had Hobart by the throat, jammed against the wall, with fingers clenched in the throat. Then he saw the other coming, a dim, shapeless thing, that he kicked at viciously. The boot must have landed, for he was suddenly free to strike the purple face fronting him, and fling the helpless rocking body in a huddled mass on the floor.

It was over with; he had won breathing space, a chance to see what was about him. Yet that was all. The fellow he had kicked was already up, doubled from the pain of the blow, but with mad eyes glaring at him. Hobart had struggled to his knees, cursing fiercely as he swept the blood out of his eyes. They would both be on him again in a minute, more desperate than ever, and the door was locked—there was no chance there. The window! Ay! there was the window. Death either way, yet a chance; and he was man enough to take it. He leaped on the chair, and clambered up; he heard Hobart swear, and felt the grip of a hand on his dangling leg; kicking himself free, and was on the ledge. He never looked below, or took time to poise for the leap. Heedless, desperate, scarcely realizing what he was doing, he flung his body out over the edge, and fell.

Complications pile up in the next installment. It's a wonder.

All but the Viz.

Recently a chattel mortgage in a rural district was foreclosed on the following:

"Eight oxen, viz, one yoke (2) named Tom and Bill; one yoke (2) named Spot and Black; one yoke (2) named Red and Sam; one yoke (2) named Jake and Bright."

The sheriff made his levy, and reported that he had made diligent search around defendant's premises but had been unable to find the "viz." An old negro, who worked at the sawmill where the oxen were found, said to the sheriff: "Boss, I'se been working round here eber since dey been any sawmill, and I hain't neber seen no vizes."—From Off the Record.

SMALL GRAINS RALLY

Closing Markets Show Wheat Steadily Climbing.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended Nov. 17, 1922.

GRAIN: Grain prices trended upward during the week and closed sharply higher. Chicago December wheat advanced firm cents; Chicago December corn up 3½c. European political situation, strong foreign markets, and good cash demand were main market factors. Sentiment mixed on the 17th but commission houses were mostly bullish. Better foreign demand reported; milling demand good at Chicago and Kansas City. Corn market had firm undertone. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.32; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.22; No. 2 mixed corn 73c; No. 2 yellow corn 74c; No. 3 white oats 44c. Average farm prices: No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa 60c; No. 2 hard winter wheat in central Kansas $1; No. 1 dark northern wheat in central North Dakota $1. Closing future prices: Chicago Dec. wheat $1.20¼; Chicago Dec. corn 71¾c; Minneapolis Dec. wheat $1.16⅞; Kansas City Dec. wheat $1.11⅜; Winnipeg December wheat $1.05⅞.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: Chicago hog prices declined 10 to 40c per 100 pounds for week. Beef steers steady to 15c higher, butcher heifers weak to 35c lower with fat cows unchanged; feeder steers steady to 25c up and veal calves 50c to $1 lower than a week ago. Fat lambs declined 10 to 25c but fat ewes were steady to 50c higher. Yearlings and feeding lambs unchaned. On Nov. 17th Chicago hog prices fully steady with Thursday's average; beef steers slow uneven about steady, other classes fully steady. Fat lambs steady to strong and fat sheep fully steady. Nov. 17th Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $8.25; bulk of sales $8-8.25; medium and good beef steers $6.90-11.75; butcher cows and heifers $3.40-10.50; feeder steers $5.25-7.75; light and medium weight veal calves $8-9.75; fat lambs $13-14.75; feeding lambs $12.25-14.25; yearlings $9.75-13.25; fat ewes $5.50-8. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending Nov. 10th were: Cattle and calves 154,753; hogs 12,921; sheep 173,401. With the exception of pork which was weak to $3 lower, the trend of prices in eastern wholesale fresh meat markets was upward for the week. Veal and mutton steady to $1 higgher, beef firm. POULTRY

ROUP IS DANGEROUS DISEASE

Delicate Fowls Have Very Severe Attacks and Recover Slowly—Isolate Sick Birds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the worse results of the wet and inclement weather of fall and early winter is the disease of chickens commonly called roup. It resembles the more malignant forms of influenza in larger animals and in man, attacking principally the membranes lining the eye, the sacks below the eye, the nostrils, the larynx and the trachea. It is attended with high fever and is very contagious, but the nature of the germ is not yet known. However, it is known that contagion is brought into the poultry yard by infected birds. Outbreaks of roup in the fall occur most commonly where the growing chickens are overcrowded in the coop or where the coops are not waterproof or are poorly ventilated. Sometimes these are birds purchased from other flocks, and sometimes they are birds from the home flock which have been on exhibition and exposed to contagion. Again, they are wild birds or pigeons which fly from one poultry yard to another.

Delicate birds have very severe attacks and recover slowly, as pointed out in Farmers' Bulletin 957, published by the United States Department of Agriculture. Often a chronic condition persists for a long time and birds so affected give and spread the disease for a year or more, becoming a starting point for many new outbreaks.

At first symptoms are similar to an ordinary cold, but there is more fever, dullness and prostration. The eyelids are swollen and held closed most of the time. The birds sneeze and shake their heads in their efforts to free the air passages. Sometimes the eyes are entirely closed and birds are prevented from finding food. This, of course, results in rapid loss of strength, and many of the birds die within a week or ten days. Some of the affected ones recover and others continue weak and have a chronic form of disease for months.

Comfortable, Roomy Winter Lodgings for the Hens Means Plenty of Eggs.

The best treatment is to place sick birds in a warm, dry, well-ventilated room free from drafts, and away from the rest of the flock. An antiseptic and healing mixture should be applied to the affected membranes. Lacking a spraying apparatus, a small syringe and oil can, or even a medicine dropper, may answer the purpose, or the bird's head may be plunged into a basin of the mixture and held there for a few seconds. The most suitable remedies are: Equal parts of hydrogen peroxide and water; boric acid, 1 ounce, water, 1 quart; or permanganate of potash, 1 dram, water 1 pint.

WINTER SHELTER FOR GEESE

Shed Open on South Side With Plenty of Straw or Shavings Is Most Satisfactory.

Except in stormy weather or in the winter mature geese seldom need a house. A shed open on the south side, a poultry house, or a barn usually is provided by breeders in the North, and is used by some breeders in the South, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Coops, barrels, or some other dry shelter should be provided for the young goslings. But wherever they are the geese should have a clean place, with plenty of straw or shavings for the floor during the winter.

KEEP POULTRY FROM CATTLE

Unless Herd Has Been Found Free From Tuberculosis Fowls Should Be Separated.

Poultry kept on dairy or general live stock farms should not be allowed to run with cattle unless the herd has been tested and found free from tuberculosis. Poultrykeepers are beginning to realize that if they are to buy healthy birds they must get them from places where the live stock is known to be free from tuberculosis.

HOPE FOR PEACE IN NEAR EAST

Turk Envoys, However, Receive Instructions to Stand Pat on Demands.

U. S. IS TAKING PART

Complete Accord Said to Have Been Reached by All Delegates—Mussolini and Venizelos to Look After Italians and Greeks.

Lausanne—Hope that peace on earth would result from the labors of the Near East conference was voiced by the speakers at the brief opening session.

This sentiment was voiced by President Haab of the Swiss confederation, who presided over the opening plenary meeting, and it was dwelt upon by both Lord Curzon and Ismet Pasha in their responses on behalf of the numerous delegations.

The first day's sitting required only a half hour and the business of the conference was not actively begun until the second day.

Richard Washburn Child, ambassador to Italy, and Joseph C. Grew, minister to Switzerland, the two principal American representatives, were seated prominently in the front row of the auditorium beside Premier Poincare of France, and received a warm welcome from other delegations.

Mussolini Determined.

The prospects of American activity in the conference, which many of the foreigners appeared to interpret as the launching of a new American policy in Europe and the presence of a strong delegation from Japan, gave world-wide significance to the conclave.

Benito Mussolini, the new strong man of Italy, with his air of alert determination, drew all eyes as he moved to his seat not far from Venizelos, whose activities and popularity practically forced the abdictation of a Grecian king and who was here to apply all his diplomatic skill to save what he can for his country in the peace with Turkey which the conference is to formulate.

It was announced that the establishment of a complete accord between Premier Poincare, Lord Curzon and Premier Mussolini on all matters coming up in the conference was celebrated by a dinner of 65 covers which M. Poincare and the French delegation tendered to the British and Italian representatives.

It is understood that the difficulty in satisfying Italy arose from the Italian convention that in the treaty of Sevres which the present conference must revise, Italy's national rights in the Near East were not sufficiently represented and protected.

Constantinople—Although some progress was made at a continuation of the conference between the allied generals and Rafet Pasha, the Turkish nationalist governor of Constantinople, complete agreement was not reached on the question of the standing of the allied police.

NEWBERRY RESIGNS SENATE

Washington.—Truman H. Newberry has resigned as United States senator from Michigan. Forwarded to Governor Groesbeck of the state under date of November 18. Mr. Newberry's letter of resignation, requesting that it might become effective immediately, was made public here after a copy had been transmited to Vice President Coolidge with the request that it be read into the senate record as soon as possible.

Although declaring in a review of the long and bitter controversy over his right to a place in the senate since his election over Henry Ford, his Democratic opponent four years ago, that this right had been "fully confirmed." Mr. Newberry in his letter said he had been impelled to retire from that body because of the defeat of his Republican colleague. Senator Townsend, in the November 7 election. At the same time, in discussing the controversy in its relation to the campaign just closed, during which it was an issue in many states, Mr. Newberry expressed the conviction that a "fair analysis of the vote in Michigan and other states where friends and political enemies alike have suffered defeat, will demonstrate that a general feeling of unrest was mainly responsiable."

Before the case passed as an issue into the recent campaign the senate had upheld Mr. Newberry's title to a seat by a margin of five votes, but it appeared that the fight was again to be resumed early in this session of congress.

SIR C. FITZPATRICK

The long fight waged by Canadians for their individual representation at Washington has been won, officials at Washington having been informed that the Dominion of Canada will be represented either by a minister or a high commissioner with ministerial powers. The lieutenant governor of Quebec, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, is prominently mentioned as the probable first Canadian minister to the United States.

LAW HAS 80 MAJORITY

Lloyd George Following in Commons Drops to 44.

London—The long drawn out fight between former Premier Lloyd George and Sir George Younger has for the time ended with victory for the chairman of the Unionist party.

Younger and his adherents staked their political fortunes at the famous Carlton club meeting which smashed the Coalition on the conviction that the country was ripe for a return to straight party politics, and in the firm belief that the nation would support their conviction by sending the Conservatives to the House of Commons with a good working majority.

Their confidence has been amply justified. The elections have returned parliament with almost the same overwhelming predominance of Conservatives as the last parliament elected in 1918 on a wave of grateful enthusiasm to Lloyd George as "winner of the war."

The new House of Commons will meet Nov. 20 to elect the speaker, and it is considered certain that the late speaker, the Right Honorable John Henry Whitley, will be re-elected. The formal opening of parliament by the king will take place Thursday the 23rd.

CHINA IS SENT ULTIMATUM

Drastic Action Threatened Unless Bandit Held Missionaries Released.

Peking—Measures for the immediate release of the foreign missionaries kidnaped by Chinese bandits were demanded of the Peking government by the American, British, Italian, French and Swedish ministers acting under government instructions.

The five ministers, presenting a joint note, called in person and informed executives of the Chinese republic the powers would be compelled to act drastically unless the missionaries were released and guaranties given for future safety.

Hankow, Province of Hupeh, China, reports say American, British and French residents of the province of Honan, alarmed at the increase of lawlessness and the appearance of an apparently organized campaign against foreigners, have appealed jointly to their legations for protection.

RAIL CHIEFS ASK CHANGE

Executives of Northwest Lines in Washington for Hearing.

Washington—Presidents and other officials of the railroads operating between Chicago and the Pacific coast by way of the northwest are in Washington to prepare arguments for changes in the plans of Professor W. Z. Ripley for consolidation under the transportation act.

Professor Ripley proposed to put into what is known as group No. 14 the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Northern Pacific, Chicago Great Western, Minneapolis & St. Louis, and the Spokane, Portland & Seattle roads. In Group No. 15 he proposes to consolidate the Great Northern, Chicago & Terre Haute, Iron Range, Duluth, Mesabi & Northern, Green Bay & Western, and the Butte, Anaconda & Western. He also has included the Spokane, Portland & Seattle as a possibility in this group, transferring it from No. 14.

MEXICO WARNS UNITED STATES

Defiance Wins Vote of Confidence in Chamber of Deputies.

Mexico City—All South and Central American republics were informed that Mexico resented any censorship of its legislation by the United States or other powers and that President Obregon's statement to that effect had secured for him a virtual vote of confidence in the chamber of deputies.

According to the communications as published here, Mr. Summerlin on October 19 last, wrote a personal note to Secretary Pani enclosing a copy of a draft of a proposed petroleum law and requesting a copy of the official bill as soon as it was prepared.

In some quarters the publication of the communications is considered a clever political move to unite all factions in Congress at a moment on the provisions of Article 27 of the Mexican constitution.

Charges that the United States has interfered unduly in the drafting of internal legislation in Mexico, which have culminated in an outburst of anti-American sentiment in the Mexican Chamber of Deputies, were declared by the State department tonight to be wholly unsubstantiated by the facts.

U. S. MAY SUE MINNESOTA

Impending Legislation Involves Swamp Land.

St. Paul—Information comes from Washington that the federal government may sue the state of Minnesota for $1,000,000.

M. J. Brown, assistant attorney general, has returned from Washington, where he, together with Governor Preus and Attoreny General Hilton conferred with the United States attorney general regarding the sale of 150,000 acres of swamp land by the state to private citizens. Federal officials contend the control of the land still vests in the United States, while the state holds the land may arbitrarily be sold by the state.

NEWBERRY QUITS SENATE

Resignation, Effective at Once, Is Submitted to Governor Groesbeck.

Washington—Truman H. Newberry of Michigan, whose right to a place in the Senate has been a subject of long and better controversy, has submitted his resignation with a request that it becomes effective immediately.

In a letter to Governor Groesbeck made public here, Mr. Newberry said he had been impelled to retire voluntarily, because of the defeat of his Republican colleague, Senator Townsend.

SULTAN FLEES TO BRITISH

Turks Try to Sneak Destroyer Out—Socialist President Murdered.

Constantinople—Crown Prince Abdul Medjid Effendi, cousin of Sultan Mohammed VI, has been elected Caliph, according to an announcement from Angora.

Paris—Complete accord was reached here by Lord Curzon, British foreign secretary; Premier Poincare of France, and Baron Avezzano, Italian ambassador to France, over the general outline of the attitude that the Allies will assume towards the Turks at the Lausanne conference, it was declared in a statement.

A plan for French participation in an armed demonstration against the Turks, if one should prove necessary, is believed to have been agreed upon.

The French, however, were insistent that there should not be such an effort to smooth out the smallest differences as would justify Turkey's fears that the Allies had framed ironclad peace terms.

The three powers were quick to agree on the necessity of insisting that the Turks must assure ample protection to commercial interests, but a longer discussion took place on the two major questions.

Political motives may be read by some into the flight of the Sultan on a British warship. Great Britain concededly has strong motives for seeing no harm come to him, because of the millions of Mussulman, within her domain, many of whom have disagreed with the Turkish Nationalists.

London reports say Hussien Hilmid Bey, president of the Turkish Socialist party, has been assassinated in Constantinople, says an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from that city. The crime was ascribed to political motives.

BOOST MINNEAPOLIS WEEK

80 Organizations Arrange "Open House" Dec. 3-9.

Minneapolis—Enthusiasm for itself, its past, its present, its industries, its achievements, its institutions, its people and its future, swept over Minneapolis as more than 80 civic and trade organizations united behind Minneapolis Week, called 30 meetings to lay plans for the week, and began to fill the days from Dec. 3 to 9 with activities to infuse every corner of the city with the spirit of Minneapolis.

Other meetings were being arranged by officers of all the 80 organizations that already have lined up to back the week made official by Mayor George E. Leach's proclamation.

The organization that had meetings and talked over their activities for Minneapolis week included the Hennepin County Medical society, the Minneapolis Dental society, the Real Estate board, the Minneapolis Optometrists association, and the Minneapolis chcapter, American Institute of Architecture.

THIRD AMERICAN KIDNAPED

Populace Driven Out As Dozen Villages Are Sacked and Burned.

Peking—George Olaf Holm, an American member of the Lutheran Mission, has been kidnaped by bandits in Honan Province. The powerful bandit army is growing bolder. It apparently dominates the entire province of Honan. A dozen towns have been sacked and burned and the inhabitants forced to flee. Upwards of 300 Americans in the danger zone are greatly alarmed, according to the American consul at Hankow.

Mr. Holm, whose home is at Mooreton, N. D., is the third American missionary to be carried off by the Honan bandits.

A body of armed bandits entered the Holm residence at Chen Yang, seized the missionary in the presence of his wife and two sons and marched him off into the country.

HILL ROADS ATTACK MERGER

Plan to Group Great Northern With Milwaukee Opposed Before I. C. C.

Washington—Whether transcontinental railroads in the Northwest should be consolidated into two regional systems, one built around the Great Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, and the other around the Northern Pacific and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, was taken up for detailed consideration at a hearing before the Interstate Commerce association.

Representatives of the "Hill" group, including the Northern Pacific, Great Northern, and Burlington, were given first hearing and through Walker D. Hines, formerly director general of railroads, they attacked the consolidation plan which would result in a separation in their present unified holdings.

Bob was known far and wide as a model husband; steady as the rock of Gibraltar. As steady as he was, at times he was in despair. Letty, his wife, was a veritable gadabout.

Bob remonstrated in vain. Letty would dissolve into tears—a way she had; but when her tears dried she was on the trot again with her cronies. Coming down on the 5:15, Bob ran across Charley, the latest victim of matrimony. Poor Charley was in the throes of indigestion.

"If Grace could only learn to cook," moaned Charley. "But you can't sympathize, Letty is such a peach at that sort of thing."

"Yes, she is," admitted Bob; "but what would you do if your wife insisted on going out every night?"

"I'd beat her to it," Charley assured him.

"There is only one thing for you to do, Bob," Charley told him. "There is an old superstition that says if you want to keep a cat you must butter her feet. Apply that to Letty."

Now, Bob had a deep vein of superstition, although he would have died rather than admit it. If he could butter Letty's feet—if he could—he would try it and see how it worked.

Letty met him at the door, bubbling over, as usual. She served the delicious dinner and enjoyed watching him eat. As soon as he had finished his hearty meal and she had eaten like a bird, she drew him into the cozy living room.

"I have a secret for you, Bob," her eyes dancing, "I am going to stay at home tonight, all alone with you."

"Letty, are you sick?" Bob was really anxious.

"Don't rub it in now, honey, or I'll change my mind."

She was in her most charming mood. She sang his favorite songs, she played his favorite selections; she made harmless drinks—delicious all the more because they were harmless.

"Why can't it be like this all the time, Letty?" he asked her. "Could anything be better than this?" Now Letty could have been disagreeable and replied in return:

"No, nothing could be nicer for you, but what about me? I have done the cooking, the entertaining, the talking, and I am almost exhausted. I have given and you have taken."

But she was a wise Letty and knew better than to spoil a perfect evening.

"My dear boy," she smiled in her enchanting way, "you enjoy this because it is so rare. If we had a night like this every night in the week you would soon tire of the monotony. You haven't even read your sporting news, Bob. I must have charmed you, surely. I'm going to break the record tonight and go to bed early."

She went through her retiring routine more quickly than usual. Bob did the nightly chores; wound the clock and set out the milk jars. As he turned to enter the house, something soft rubbed against his leg. He looked down and saw a beautiful black cat. He liked cats, particularly black ones, but Letty could not bear to have one in the house. He stooped to stroke the glossy fur and the cat purred. He could not resist the impulse to open the screen door and let the cat enter with him.

By the time Bob had fed the stranger, made a bed for it and fastened the windows it was growing late. It was silent upstairs. Letty must be asleep. He looked at the cat, then thought of the butter. He went swiftly to the icebox, brought out a pat of butter, clicked off the lights and went silently up the stairs.

Letty was sleeping peacefully. She made a perfect picture of repose, and he gazed, well satisfied that everything was working out as he wished. The night was so warm that she had thrust her feet out from the thin covering, and Bob stooped to apply the butter.

Now Letty had peculiarly sensitive feet. As Bob plastered the butter he touched a sensitive nerve. Letty gave a powerful kick, landing on Bob's right eye. He gave a howl of pain, while Letty turned over to a more comfortable position. She would not wake up; she was a heavy sleeper, as he knew from experience.

Hours later, or so it seemed, Letty awoke. There at her feet was a horrible black creature, licking her toes. She could not move; she felt petrified as the terrible animal glared and looked ready to spring if she uttered a cry to Bob.

After an eternity of waiting, the animal jumped off the bed and slunk away.

"Bob," she called, in her weakest voice. "Bob, dear, wake up; I'm so frightened."

Bob was in no comforting mood, but he got out of bed and turned on the lights. Letty screamed when she saw him.

"Look at your eye, it is all black. Such a night I've had. What did you do to your eye?"

Bob refused to say what he did. She sat up with the air of a tragedy queen.

"There was some terrible black animal sitting on my feet most of the night. Don't think I'm crazy, Bob; he really did. I shall make [illegible]

An Important Part Of Fall HOUSECLEANING

Clean your electric bulbs and fixtures thouroughly and carefully. This is an economic measure as well as a feature of good housekeeping. In order to get full value of the current you are useing, let the light gleam through clear, shinning glass.

TO CLEAN LAMP BULBS
Remove them from fixture. Wipe the glass part with a danp cloth and polish with dry cloth.

TO CLEAN FIXTURES
Remove glass shades and wash in warm, soapy water. It may be necessary to use a small brush. The inverted bowls of semi-inderect lights should be wiped with a hot, damp cloth and a little non-scratching cleaning powder.

Shirred silk shades can sometimes be cleaned by brushing well, first with a dry brush, then with a brush dipped in lukewarm suds, and drying at once with a soft towel. Delicate and expensive shades should be dry cleaned.

Polish brass and other metal parts, and wipe with a dry cloth the long, silk cords on floor and table lamps. Use a furniture polish on mahogany finished lamh bases.

German Socialists Force the Resignation of Wirth and His Government.

CUNO IS NEW CHANCELLOR

Assurances of Turk Nationalists Relieve Tension in Near East—Bonar Law Wins Control of British Parliament — Supreme Court Says the Japanese Can't Be Naturalized.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT HARDING, in a letter to Mrs. Corinne Roosevelt Robinson, said the public mind is shifting somewhat in regard to the prohibition enforcement, and prophesied that the Volstead act will be "liberalized." Do you think his interpretation of the signs of the times is correct?

DR. JOSEPH WIRTH, chancellor of Germany, and his entire cabinet resigned last week, practically forced out of office by the failure of Wirth's plan for reorganization of the ministry to meet the impending crisis concerning the stabilization of the mark, the reparations program and the general economic condition. He desired a coalition ministry in which the German People's party should be represented. But the united Socialist parties refused to participate in such a coalition because, mainly, the industrialist leaders of the People's party insisted on their stand in favor of the ten-hour day for the workers. The abandonment of the eight-hour day, according to Hugo Stinnes and other industrial magnates, would be the solution of the problem of paying the reparations and restoring the country's industries.

Wilhelm Cuno, general manager of the Hamburg-American steamship line, accepted the task of forming a new government.

Wirth's downfall was not unexpected for his position had been growing rapidly weaker for some months and his influence was waning because of his evident lack of initiative. He failed to devise any way of carrying out his policy of fulfilling the reparations agreement and last summer he virtually abandoned it, adopting a new slogan of "bread first, then reparations." The united Socialists had been growing more and more restive and dissatisfied with the government's attitude relative to financial and economic problems, especially the grain requisition bill, and with its failure to curb speculation in the dollar and check the collapse of the mark.

SO FAR as reparations go, the new cabinet has a program already formed, contained in the recent note to the reparations commission. This received the approval of the Socialists, the Democrats and the People's party. In this note the government expressed its willingness to fulfill the program for payment of reparations in kind and the stabilization of the mark on condition that it be granted a moratorium of from three to four years and that a finance syndicate be established as recommended by the international experts to restore Germany's credit. The note says the reichsbank will make a loan of 500,000,000 gold marks ($125,000,000) to the German government if allied bankers will furnish an equal sum. This money will be used to stabilize the mark. Germany says it will make an internal gold loan, but it asks that in order to facilitate the nation's ability to pay it be given the same rights of trade as specified in favored nations treaties.

Early in the week serious food riots broke out in Dusseldorf and Cologne, where many shops were looted and soldiers and police were compelled to fire on the crowds. Smaller riots took place in Berlin and elsewhere, and it was feared the disorders would spread to the Ruhr district. There is no doubt that the food situation in Germany is very serious. The reparations commission when in Berlin recently learned that the country must get 800,000,000,000 marks' worth of grain during the next year.

FOLLOWING some days of genuine alarm lest war break out between the allies and the Turks, the latter gave assurances that eased the situation. Postponement of the Lausanne conference until November 20 made them decidedly suspicious of the good faith of the allies, and the insistence of Lord Curzon that Great Britain, France and Italy reach a preliminary accord on matters to be discussed, still more angered the Turks. The allied military chiefs at Constantinople were so disturbed by the prospects that they sent messages to their respective governments urging them to begin the conference speedily and quit playing politics, intimating that otherwise they declined to accept responsibility for what might happen. All the time Rafet Pasha, governor of Constantinople, under orders from Angora was pressing the demand for full control of that metropolis without allied interference. Conditions were decidedly threatening. However, on Wednesday the allies received a note from the Nationalist government stating that it would respect the terms of the Mudania armistice agreement and would not insist on the withdrawal of allied troops from the zones delimited by that pact. The note continued: "The national government, seeing that it has assumed the duty of insuring order and security in the capital, requests the cessation of interference in the shape of control by allied troops in our internal administration."

Secretary of State Hughes instructed Ambassador Child at Rome and Minister Grew at Berne to go to Lausanne as observers of the peace conference for the United States government. Rear Admiral Bristol also will be there when his duties as American high commissioner at Constantinople permit. The cruiser Pittsburgh, bearing Rear Admiral Long, commander of our naval forces in European waters, arrived at Constantinople.

FULL returns from the British parliamentary elections held last Wednesday are not in at this writing, but it is certain that Prime Minister Bonar Law will have a Conservative majority in the commons of about 87 over all other parties. The Labor party made extensive gains, mainly in the manufacturing counties and northern towns in England and in Scotland. This despite the fact that both the Conservatives and the Georgian Liberals directed a strong campaign against the Laborite candidates. The four leaders of the chief parties, Bonar Law, Lloyd George, Herbert Asquith and John R. Clynes, chief of the Labor party, all were elected to the house. The prime minister's plurality was rather slender, and so was Asquith's. Lloyd George's group of Liberals in the house will not be large but may serve him in the making of opposition combinations.

Of the 33 women nominees the returns so far show that only two were elected. These are Viscountess Astor, former American, and Mrs. Margaret Wintringham. Both are present members of parliament. Among the men defeated was Winston Churchill, former secretary for the colonies.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI is losing no time in putting Italy on the road to recovery of her prosperity. Last week he asked and obtained from King Victor Emmanuel full power to make radical bureaucratic and tributary reforms without awaiting for parliamentary sanction. These include rearrangement of the taxation system and reduction of salaries and number of government employees, and the leasing of railroads and telephone and telegraph lines to private concerns. On Thursday the chamber of deputies began a session which the premier hoped would last only a few days. He outlined the policy of his government to the deputies and announced a reform of the electoral laws decided on by the council of ministers. It was said if the chamber did not pass the law for this reform promptly, it would be dissolved and the present law would be modified by royal decree.

The success of fascism in Italy has prompted the organization of similar movements in other lands. In Bavaria and Hungary it appears likely to take the form of royalist revolution if it comes to fruition. Recent dispatches tell of the spread of the movement in Mexico, where, as in Italy, it is designed primarily to stamp out communism.

ONE of the most important decisions handed down recently by the Supreme Court of the United States was that read by Associate Justice Sutherland last week denying to the Japanese the right to be naturalized in the United States and to become citizens of this country. One case from Hawaii and two from the state of Washington were decided together. The court held that the naturalization act of June 29, 1906, was limited by the provision of section 2, 169 of the revised statutes, authorizing the naturalization of "free white persons" and those of African birth and descent, and that the Japanese are not eligible to naturalization.

It was added in the decision that "there is not implied—either in the legislation or in our interpretation of it—any suggestion of individual unworthiness or racial inferiority. These considerations are in no manner involved."

NOT in many years before has South America experienced so severe an earthquake as that which devastated large sections of Chile. The most destructive of the tremors lasted but a few seconds, but the shocks recurred during several days, each one adding to the destruction and to the terror of the inhabitants. The worst results were on and near the coast, and great tidal waves increased the devastation. A number of towns and villages were wholly or partly razed, and the loss of life may reach 1,500 or 2,000. The American Red Cross responded immediately to the call for aid, and in addition President Harding ordered two vessels to take cargoes of food, clothing and medical supplies from the Canal Zone to the stricken region. Thousands of families are homeless and destitute, and already pestilence has broken out among them.

This disaster gives sharp point to the annual roll call of the American Red Cross, now in progress. The organization is always ready to meet such emergencies, but they make sudden and enormous demands on its financial resources. For that reason every American is urged to buy a yearly membership.

SO-CALLED Progressive Republicans who are members of the present congress or who were elected members of the Sixty-eighth congress, together with other prominent members of that wing of the party are said to be arranging a conference at which they will plan for open revolt against the leadership of President Harding and dictation of the "conservatives." According to dispatches from Washington some of the issues upon which they expect to unite are: Repeal of drastic provisions of the Cummins-Esch transportation act; revision of the tax laws, levying higher rates upon big incomes, both corporate and individual; radical curtailment of governmental expenditures; recognition of the soviet Russian government; curbing of the powers of the federal reserve board; revision of the recently enacted tariff; amnesty for political prisoners; living wage guarantee for labor under the jurisdiction of the government; legislation to curb the use of the injunction in labor disputes; a more liberal policy in the extension of credit to farmers.

WILLIAM BROSS LLOYD, millionaire, and eighteen other members of the Communist-Labor party, convicted of violating the Illinois espionage act, lost their last chance to evade punishment when the state Supreme court refused to extend the stay and issued a mandate directing execution of the prison sentences imposed on them two years ago, and collection of the fines.

DAIRYMEN SHOULD STUDY FEEDING, KEEP RECORDS

Helpful Hints for Making the Dairy Business a Financial Success.

Special Bulletin No. 64, recently published by the Minnesota Experiment Station, makes the following suggestions for the management of a profitable dairy business:

(1) Study feeding. Many cows fail to give the returns of which they are capable because they do not get the right combination of feeds. Some cows do not get the right feeds, others get balanced rations but not a sufficient quantity to enable them to return a maximum profit. Get a copy of Minnesota Bulletin No. 180 entitled "Feeding Dairy Cows" and follow the instructions given.

(2) Use purebred dairy sires of high producing ancestry. Carefully select the high producers among the heifers by means of milk production records and the use of the Babcock fat test.

(3) Keep records or make estimates of all costs of your dairy herd. Compute the wage they return per hour for the time expended on them.

(4) Know the yearly production of each individual cow. This means keeping private records of the production of each individual cow or membership in a testing association.

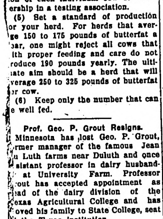
(5) Set a standard of production for your herd. For herds that average 150 to 175 pounds of butterfat a year, one might reject all cows that with proper feeding and care do not produce 190 pounds yearly. The ultimate aim should be a herd that will average 250 to 325 pounds of butterfat per cow.

(6) Keep only the number that can be well fed.

Prof. Geo. P. Grout Resigns.

Minnesota has lost Geo. P. Grout, former manager of the famous Jean Du Luth farms near Duluth and once assistant professor in dairy husbandry at University Farm. Professor Grout has accepted appointment as head of the dairy division of the Texas Agricultural College and has moved his family to State College, seat of the Texas institution.

Professor Grout has a national reputation as a breeder of high grade dairy cattle. In the eleven years in which he was in charge, the Jean Du Luth farms held all world records with Red Polled cattle and made several world records with Guernseys. Last June, Jean Du Luth Coronet, a famous dairy cow from the farms, was sold for $8,000, the top price of the Western National Guernsey sale. Professor Grout has been president of the Minnesota State Dairymen's association, the Minnesota Dairy Council, and the Guernsey, and Red Polled Breeders association.



PROF. GEO. P. GROUT.

The Texas station with which he is now identified, has a dairy farm of 500 acres and a dairy herd of 270 purebreds. Before leaving for Texas, Professor Grout purchased several purebred Guernseys and Holsteins for further foundation stock for the Texas farm college.

The farm inventory is the simplest financial record a farmer can keep. It tells him how much he is worth above his debts, and a comparison of two successive annual inventories will indicate whether [illegible]

MARKETING CORN AS PORK IS MOST PROFITABLE WAY

Grain Should Go To Market on Four Legs, Says College Man.

"With corn cheap in price, the grain should go to market on four legs instead of on four wheels," says E. F. Ferrin, professor of animal husbandry, University of Minnesota. "During the last two years many farmers who felt they could not get a decent price for their grain, have fed it to hogs and made twice or sometimes three times the value of the grain on the market.

"Of all the meat animals, the hog returns most for the grain fed. One hundred pounds of pork are made from 400 to 500 pounds of grain. The quantity of feed to make beef and lamb or mutton is considerably greater. Shortage of cars for shipments does not bother the hog shipper as much as the man who sells grain, because he is marketing a concentrated product rather than a bulky one. The cost of freight on the hogs is less than the charges would be on the corn represented by the pork. Besides this, all the plant food stored in the corn is hauled off the farm if the grain is sold while most of it remains if meat and not grain is marketed.

"To get best results from feeding corn to hogs there is needed some protein or muscle building feed. Corn is chiefly a starchy grain and growing pigs need more protein than corn furnishes. Pigs are sold at a young age while they are still growing. Faster and cheaper grains are made by the young pigs if they are given the protein they need to make growth. This cannot come from corn by an economical use of the grain as it has entirely too little muscle building material and too much of the fat producing substances for young pigs.

"Skimmilk or buttermilk is a fine partner for corn in a hog ration. With corn at thirty cents a bushel the milk is worth one cent per gallon to feed along with corn to fattening pigs. This is based on the feeding of about two and one-half pounds of milk for each pound of corn. In addition to the value given here for the milk, pigs will gain faster and get to market earlier than on corn alone. When milk is not available, tankage is a good protein supplement."

Fowl Cholera Most Fatal.

Fowl cholera is the most fatal of all chicken diseases. It also affects geese and turkeys. Outbreaks usually occur in those flocks which are in fine condition. Cholera also occurs in flocks of geese which are being heavily fed for market. The birds die rapidly and in great numbers. The first sign of trouble may be the finding of several dead birds under the roosts in the morning. This comes so suddenly and without warning that the owner often thinks they have been poisoned.

"There is no medicine of any value in the treatment of the sick birds," says Dr. W. A. Billings, veterinary specialist with the university's agricultural extension service. "All efforts should be directed to keep the disease from spreading. Destroy the sick ones at once for they seldom recover. Disinfect the houses and sterilize the drinking and feeding utensils.

"Since those flocks in the best of condition are often the first to be attacked, it has been found to be beneficial to cut the feed ration in half.

An Impetus to Beef Calf Feeding.

The animal husbandry division of the state university has purchased 60 Shorthorn calves for feeding trials which will be carried on the coming winter. The calves will be fed in six lots of ten each on six different rations made up entirely of feeds readily available in Minnesota. Complete records of the gains made, feed consumed, cost of gains, and profit from each lot will be kept and results given out on Cattle Feeders Day which, in accordance with past practice, will be observed next spring at University Farm when the calves are ready for market.

This baby beef feeding trial, following the one held a year ago, is expected to give genuine impetus to the beef calf feeding movement in Minnesota. In fact, a decided increase is noted in the number of calves being put on feed this fall for the production of baby beef. Those who followed and profited by the results of [illegible]

American Farm Bureau

Ohio Wool Producers' Warehouse.

Ohio wool producers, who are members of the Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers' association, use this warehouse, located at Columbus, O., as the collection point for their wool. Shipments made here are weighed, graded and prepared for co-operative sale.

Successful Agency.

The Ohio wool sales agency has been one of the most successful in the country and, it is expected, will handle practically as much wool as all of the other state-wide co-operative agencies in the country. More than two and a half million pounds of wool have been received at the warehouse this year.

Not only has a central co-operative sales agency aided materially in getting good returns for Ohio wool producers, but the warehouse itself has made a good return on money invested.

During the busy season it is not uncommon to have eight or ten carloads of wool brought up to the warehouse in one day. A special track connects with railroads coming into Columbus. Ample office space for the transaction of necessary business and the keeping of records is available.

PLANS OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLE GROWERS

Details of Organization Completed and By-Laws Adopted at Recent Chicago Meeting.

The board of directors of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, Inc., at the close of its session in Chicago announced through the American Farm Bureau federation that the details of organization have been completed and by-laws adopted.

An executive office in New York city and an organization office in Chicago have been established. New York was chosen for the executive office, or actual sales agency for the following reasons: It is the largest exporting center in the United States; it has the largest fruit and vegetable consuming public; it is the most important fruit and vegetable marketing center in the United States; through the influence of A. B. Rule, general manager of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, banking interests in New York have declared themselves in sympathy with the new co-operative plan and will support it.

The organization office in Chicago will conduct the organization work and will have the direct contact with the field. Field service men will operate from this office.

From the indicated tonnage of fruit and vegetables in view that will come into the organization, together with the tonnage already in the hands of the North American Fruit exchange, which will be handled by the federation, indications are that this new federation of fruit and vegetable growers' associations will start January 1 as the largest distributor of fruit and vegetables in the United States.

The Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, Inc., was organized on the recommendation of the fruit marketing committee of 21, appointed by James R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau federation on August 25, 1921. The committee of 21 was appointed as a result of the national fruit marketing conference, the third of the commodity conferences called by the American Farm Bureau federation.

A contract was signed with the North American Fruit exchange which has been operating since 1911 as a nation-wide non-speculative sales agency for fruit and vegetables, whereby the force and effectiveness of the two organizations were brought together under the name of the Federated Fruit Growers, Inc. During the meeting of the board last week in Chicago, at the suggestion of vegetable growers from many states who were present, it was decided to alter the name to include the vegetable growers.

"The combining of the ideals of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, Inc., with the already existing organization machinery of the North American Fruit exchange," says C. E. Durst, secretary-treasurer of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, "will eliminate the need for building a sales organization. By including the vegetable growers we will still further [illegible] North American Fruit exchange has 140 distributing points and many salaried representatives. These facilities will be at the disposal of the new member associations who come into the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers."

Actual operations will begin January 1, Mr. Durst said.

ABSOLUTE REST FOR WOMEN

Recreation Camp Established on Site of Stonewall Jackson's Home in West Virginia.

(By Izetta Jewell Brown, Member of the Home and Community Committee.)

A recreation camp for farm women, the first of its kind in the United States, is one of the accomplishments of the West Virginia Farm Bureau Federation.

Through appropriation from the state legislature and from gifts, the site of Stonewall Jackson's old home at Jackson's Mill, W. Va., was purchased and converted into a camp for farm women. It was called Jackson's Mills camp. Bathhouses, dining rooms and assembly rooms have been built and the ground surrounding the old Jackson mill, which is still standing, has been turned into a real camp.

About 100 farm women attended the first camp which started August 1. How everybody did enjoy that week! Next year the camp will not accommodate the number of farm women who have already indicated their desire to be there.

Izetta Jewell Brown.

The week's program included class study, nature study, hikes, general assemblies, swimming, vespers, sings, and lots and lots of rest. Special stunts were given on stunt night. No work was done and $5 a week was charged for board. Everything was arranged to give farm women present one good week of absolute rest mingled with recreation and fun.

Isn't that worth while?

BREEDING FLOCK DOES BEST IF PERMITTED FREE RUN OF RANGE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If cockerels or pullets are used in the breeding flock they should be well matured, poultry specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture advise. Hens are better than pullets. They lay larger eggs, which produce stronger chicks. Yearling and two-year-old hens are better than older ones. Pullets used as breeders should be mated with a cock rather than with a cockerel. If a cockerel is used he should be mated with hens rather than with pullets. As a rule, well-matured cockerels will give better fertility than cocks.

Free Range for Breeding Pen.

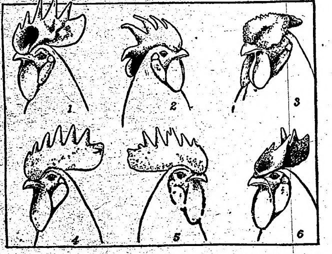
When possible free range should be provided for the breeding stock. It is better to provide it during the entire fall and winter before the breeding season, but, if this is not possible, free range just preceding and during the breeding season will be of great value. Birds of free range will get more exercise and, therefore, will be in better health and will give higher fertility, better hatches, and stronger chicks.

The breeding flock needs careful supervision to make sure that the fowls keep in good breeding condition. The birds and the houses should be examined often to see that they are not infested with lice or mites. Either of these pests in any numbers will seriously affect or totally destroy fertility. Care must be exercised also to see that the male does not frost his comb or wattles. If these are frosted his ability to fertilize eggs will be impaired and may not be recovered for several weeks. On very cold nights when there is danger of the combs being frosted the males to be used as breeders must be put in a warm place, such as a box or crate of suitable size partly covered by a bag or cloth. The breeding male should be examined occasionally after feeding to see that his crop is full and that he is not growing thin. Some males will allow the hens to eat all the feed, with the result that they get out of condition. If this happens the male must be fed separately from the hens at least once a day.

Provide the breeding stock with comfortable quarters. The house must be draft proof, yet well ventilated and dry. The birds should not be crowded. If the birds are yarded, four square feet of floor space per bird should be allowed, but on free range from three to three and a half square feet per bird will be enough.

Feeding Breeding Stock.

The breeders must be fed so as to keep them in such condition that they will produce eggs. Any good laying ration is suitable for this purpose. Beef scrap should not run above 10 or 15 per cent of the total ration. The birds should be kept in good flesh, but should not be allowed to become excessively fat. All whole or cracked grain should be fed in litter. This forces the fowls to exercise by scratching for it. As a supply of green feed is usually lacking late in the winter or early in the spring, sprouted oats, cabbage, mangels, or cut clover or alfalfa should be fed.



Heads of Cockerels and Cocks Showing Defective Combs. Defects of These Kinds Should Be Guarded Against in Selecting Breeders. 1, Thumb Mark; 2, Blade of Comb Following Neck Too Closely and Points Showing Tendency to Lop; 3, Rose Comb Showing Hollow Center; 4, Side Sprig; 5, Uneven Serrations and Double Point; 6, Twisted Comb.

BEST SELF-FEEDER FOR PIGS

Small Device Is Handier to Move Around and Takes Up Less Room in the Feed Alley.

The small self-feeder is much handier to move around and also stands the moving much better than the large one. It takes up less room when placed in the feed alley of the hog house or in some other sheltering building, and is safer to feed from. Any feeder is apt to clog up occasionally, especially in feeding ground feed, and for that reason they should be looked after often. The larger the feeder the stronger is the tendency to let it take care of itself.

From the standpoint of construction the advantage is also in favor of the small feeder. With a length of much over four feet the load on it will be heavy and the strain of moving it will tell much sooner than on the smaller size. Many good types of ready-made self-feeders can be bought today, and if the freight on them has not been too high they should be sold almost as cheaply as they can be made.

PREPARE SOIL FOR ALFALFA

Sweet Clover Paves Way for More Aristocratic Neighbor and Insures Good Stand.

One big thing about sweet clover is that it paves the way for its more aristocratic and exclusive neighbor, alfalfa. Farmers who have tried the plan of seeding a plot to sweet clover for one or two years and then putting in alfalfa, have found that they invariably get a good stand, for the soil has been properly inoculated for the alfalfa, and it takes right hold.

Go over the vegetables in the cellar for any indication of decay. Cabbage is apt to decay early.

MAKE TEST OF BLUEGRASS SEED

Has Been Giving Dealers and Experts Much Trouble.

Great Variation in Behavior of Various Samples Has Been Found in Germinating Tests Made by Department.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Canada bluegrass seed seems to be extremely sensitive to a number of conditions that affect its germination and for that reason the United States Department of Agriculture is trying to develop a method for testing it that will give uniform results. Up to the present time blue grass seed has been giving seed dealers and state analysts much trouble.

The department, in its attempt to determine the factors influencing the germination of Canada bluegrass, has found a great variation in the behavior of various samples. All samples are found to require a daily alternation of temperatures for successful germination. A temperature of 20 degrees C. for 18 hours and 30 degrees C. for six hours is satisfactory. Many samples give a distinctly higher germination when exposure to light is added to the above temperature schedule. However, it is important that the temperature schedule be not sacrificed in obtaining the light exposure.

Some samples of Canada bluegrass do not germinate completely even with the above conditions satisfied. Work in progress is expected to determine all the factors necessary to make a dependable germination test of Canada bluegrass possible.

Appearance and Quality.

Appearance as well as quality helps to sell goods. County fairs and exhibitions should be one means of advertising good produce and creating a demand for it.

Nora Wins Her First Case

By MARTHA WILLIAMS

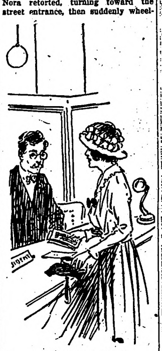
(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nora frowned. The long line before the cashier's window was the last and worst of her morning bedevilments. She had hoped to be almost first in such a line, but waiting for the necessary check had consumed a precious half hour, then she had been buttonholed in the office by a woman with a mission, eke a grievance, from whom she had escaped by the skin of her temper—the same being pretty badly frayed. To find so many folk ahead was distinctly aggravating.

It was nearly noon—her breakfast had been meager. Having cash assets of less than two dollars besides the precious check, she had tried to content herself with oatmeal and black coffee. Now a healthy appetite was strongly rebellious.

The line moving jerkily, halting now and then, at last brought her to the window. She thrust in her check, and almost immediately there was a flitter of green paper on the glass shelf. With a relieved sigh she slipped out of rank, and ran over the bills with faintly tremulous fingers. At the last bill the fingers actually shook—it was double—instead of one ten she held two. Impulsively she crushed back to the window, saying: "There, is a mistake——" Before she could say more, the superior being inside the cage flung at her, frowning: "Madam, this bank never makes mistakes—it wishes you women could or would learn to count money."

"Pardon me! We so lack practice," Nora retorted, turning toward the street entrance, then suddenly wheeling about to see down the long vista a sign at the end reading "President."



"This—These, Rather."

Half a minute later she faced the president, grim, gray, and reputed a tartar—but that she did not know. She flung at him: "Please, sir. Is it true this bank never makes mistakes?" her voice steady enough though her knees shook a bit.

"I am not rash enough to say 'yes,' nor foolish enough to say 'no,'" the president answered, rising from his chair. "But why the question?"

"This—these, rather," Nora retorted, laying the two bills in front of him. "Just now I presented at your second window a check for $25, drawn by Cross & Leroy to order of Elinor Maxwell. It was overpaid, as you see; when I told the man there was a mistake he waved me away insolently."

"H-m! Not like Weston. He's a careful fellow," commented the banker. "Sure you don't bear him a grudge?"

"No more than, as a cad, he insults me by existing!" Nora flashed back, her head going up. The banker smiled grimly, asking: "Well, then, why didn't you pocket the money and go along rejoicing?"

"Not enough of it. I hate cheapness, though my hat does shout '88 cents, marked down from a dollar,'" Nora continued, her eyes beginning to dance. "Now if it had been a million, or even half one——"

"What would you have done?" the gray man asked. A younger man at a window beyond Nora's purview was smiling outright, evidently restraining laughter.

"Beat it for home and my poor niggers," Nora cried joyously, "as fast as I could go."

"Where is home" from the inquisitor.

"Alabama," from Nora. "Grandpa's land has had no other owners than Maxwells since the Indian times. He just managed to keep a little ahead of the factors' mortgage till 5-cent cotton came—in 1914, you know. It ruined him—and worse.

"Half the land went to settle with the factors; the other half barely kept us and our people from starving. You see, the niggers had been in the family since there was a family. It was hard, hard to see them [illegible]

"Suffering?" the banker broke in incredulously.

She nodded. "If you call a Christmas dinner of plain ashcake, without even a scrap of meat or molasses, good food, perhaps there wasn't any; but, take my word for it, all that fall and winter persimmon bread was our greatest luxury."

The younger man stirred and started to speak. His elder's eye compelled silence. "So you would take your loot and squander it in charity," he said.

Nora faced him dauntlessly, answering:

"If the bank stands to its cashier that it makes no mistakes where would the loot come in, especially after it had been warned of a mistake?"

"It wouldn't come in. I'm a lawyer—I know," the young man said, coming forward.

Nora smiled at him roguishly. "I am not—only hoping to be some day," she said. "That's how I'm here."

"You've won your first case, Miss Maxwell," the banker said, bowing. "But I'd pay you a good fee if you hadn't made the case. I hate like everything to dismiss Weston. He is newly promoted; think it must have gone to his head."

"Then don't fire him," Nora said, compassionately. "Job hunting is so disheartening. I know."

"May I ask what your job is?" the interlocutor said.

She answered gravely, though with twinkling eyes: "I'm the original candy girl; get twenty-five a week for making models warranted to fetch the flapper and equally engage her elder sisters."

"You study?" the banker began.

"Night school," Nora interrupted. "Has to be that or nothing. Pity I wasn't born a boy, I love law so well, and then there have been such lawyers in our line. If only I can make good grandad will be so happy. Even heaven wouldn't be all right for him if he had to know that the last of us was a rank failure."

"You won't be," Banker Lewis said confidently. "Thank you for the trouble you have taken to set this matter right. Isn't there something the bank can do to show appreciation——"

"Surely! Slip back that measly ten and say nothing about it till next week," Nora broke in gayly, adding almost wistfully: "Also something personal. Please tell me where I can get real food without waiting too long——"

"It will be better to show you," Mr. Lewis interrupted. "We'll take Miss Lane, my secretary, and John Lewis Cope, my scapegrace nephew, to make the party complete."

A thrill amounting almost to a riot went through the establishment when the limousine rolled away with four inside. It whirled the four crosstown to the lower city's most famous luncheon place. There Nora, forgetful of her 88-cent hat, her mended gloves, her severely simple handbag, ate daintily but with keen relish such food as she had not tasted before.

Afterward she was sent to a matinee in charge of Miss Lane, the men bowing themselves away at their courtliest, the elder of them saying: "Be sure we shall keep track of you," and the younger looking things he lacked courage to say. Possibly he found the courage later, since the week after she passed a brilliant examination and was duly admitted to the bar.

Miss Nora Maxwell became Mrs. John Lewis Cope, but so quietly hardly a breath of it got into print. There would likely have been columns had it leaked out that Banker Lewis had settled a quarter million on the bride, besides giving his nephew wherewithal to buy back Maxwellton, a big plantation down in Alabama.

DIDN'T LIKE THAT "CORNCOB"

Barber's Criticism May Force Novelist to Give Up His Favorite Form of Smoke.

A noted novelist and playwright will have to abandon the corncob pipe that is dear to him if he heeds the kindly advice of his favorite barber.

"Yes," he observed sadly, as he puffed away at the old cob, according to the New York Sun. "I can't smoke this old pipe anywhere near Pietro's now. In fact I'm getting so I may have to give up smoking it in public for fear I should meet him.

"You see, I went into the shop the other day, as I've done every day for years, with the corncob going full blast. Business was dull for the moment. As I entered Pietro greeted me as usual—then as I was removing my collar he came over to me.

"'Do you mind if I say something?' says he.

"'Not at all,' I assured him.

"'Well,' he said rather timidly, 'if I was you, a man of your standing I wouldn't smoke that there old corncob. I wouldn't. It ain't—it ain't, well, artistic.'"

Jake Einerson Is Dead

Jake Einerson, who resided here in the early years before taking a homestead in the vicinity of Eplee, died early Sunday morning at the Ferdie Brown home at Thief River, from an attack of heart trouble. Mr. Einerson had been ailing for some time, and came Saturday to Thief River to seek medical attention. He retired late that night seemingly no worse than usual, and was found dead in bed the following morning. Jake came to this section of the country while a young man, and worked at various vocations in this village until he went farming on the homestead. He was married to Mrs. Blaine, of this place, who preceeded him in death many years ago. To this union was born one son, Harold, who survives.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. M. Grimsrud, of the local Norwegian Lutheran church, from the Larson undertaking parlors at Thief River Tuesday afternoon at 2:00, and interment was made beside the remains of Mrs. Einerson in the Lutheran cemetery north of this village.

With mild weather continuing three weeks beyond the usual time, navagation on the Great Lakes will be open at least a month longer than usual this year which will insure movement of a great volume of coal to this part of the country. From present outlook there will be plenty of fuel for all needs the coming winter.

Dr. J. A. Regner has leased three rooms at the Mrs. O. Sherva residence and moved in there with his office equipment last week. The rooms are well suited for that purpose and the doctor is busy between his numerous calls getting everything in shape.

To accomodate early buyers of Christmas seals a small supply is on hand at this office. School children will canvass the village in the regular sales campaign next week.

Miss Olive Patterson, who teaches in the city schools at Crookston, visited here at the home of her sister, Mrs. O. Gunstad, from Friday until Saturday afternoon last week.

Mrs. Bennie Johnson entertained about a dozen friends Saturday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Axel Johnson who left Monday for Brooklyn, N. Y., where she will spend the winter.

Mr. Ducharme, Sr., came yesterday from Red Lake Falls to spend Thanksgiving here with his son, Theodore, and family.

Encouraging reports have been received as to condition of Mrs. John Maskerud who is a patient at the hospital at Warren.

City Teams Wins

The city basketball team was victorious by a score of 18 to 14 in their game with the high school basketeers last Thursday evening. The high school team put up a good battle in spite of the fact that they were at disadvantage in weight as well as lacking in experience. With a little more practice in team work, the high school boys will be able to put up a stiff game. Leo King was elected captain of the high school team, and Sigard Engh was named to the same position with the city team, before the game.

Dr. Mugg Is Dead

Dr. C. G. Mugg, the Grand Forks optometrist who traveled thru here for many years, and made regular visits to this village, passed away last week at Glenore, N. D., from heart failure. Dr. Mugg did quite an extensive business here and is well known to a large number of people in this community.

Big Damage Suit

The village of Stephen togather with the Minnesota Electrical Distribution Company, who serve that town, are defendants in a damage suit wherein $40,000.00 is asked by a resident of Stephen as result of burns and injuries recieved when a high power transmission wire became crossed with the service wire at the plaintiff's home.

Dr. Regner, the new physician, is having a fine run of business. He has attended to as many as four calls in one day.

Since the river froze over there has been some excellent skating. The snow today covered the ice but there is some talk about making a rink on the river.

The creamery association at Thief River Falls has passed on and accepted plans for a new creamery building to be built in that city next spring.

The Farmers Elevator loaded out two carloads of grain Wednesday.

FOR HEALTH

What Do You Think About This?

In connection with the opening of the fifteenth annual sale of Christmas Seals, which starts November 22, officials of the Minnesota Public Health Association call our attention to the enormous drop in death rate from tuberculosis. Had the death rate of ten years ago continued, 972 people who are now living would have died this year from tuberculosis The statement follows:

The death rate in 1921 from tuberculosis was lower than it has ever been in the history of the state. In 1911, 119 people out of every 100,000 in the state died of the desease. In 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died of tuberculosis. As compared with 1911, ten years ago, Minnesota is saving 972 lives a year.

In 1920, 90 people out of every 100,000 and in 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died, a saving in 1921 as compared with 1920 of 276 lives.

SYNOPSIS—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance. That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her. Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance. Natalie, Coolidge and West plan a visit of charity. Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie for a purpose. Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but leaves. On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He thinks Coolidge was murdered. Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon. West is taken by surprise, knocked out, separated from Sexton, and comes to his senses to find himself bound and helpless, and confronted by a man named Hobart. The man tells him he (West) is interfering with his plans and if he persists will be done away with. West refuses any compromise. Hobart sends for Natalie, hoping she can induce West to give up his quest. Natalie releases West from his bonds and assures him that she has no need for his assistance. Her actions almost convince West she has guilty knowledge of Percival Coolidge's murder. He defies Hobart, and the thug, with two companions, attempts to kill him. After a terrific fight West leaps from the window.

CHAPTER X

—10—

Under Cover.

A shed roof was below, and he struck it, fortunately feet first, but the sharp slant of the boards sent him hurtling forward over the edge into a miscellaneous pile of boxes beneath, his body finally resting on the hard ground. He lay there dazed, the breath knocked entirely out of him, bruised, and scarcely certain whether he was dead or alive. For the moment, he seemed to have lost all consciousness, unable to realize even what had occurred in that upper room, or to comprehend the necessity of immediate flight. All about him was intense darkness, and, after the crash of his fall, no sound broke the silence. He could see nothing, hear nothing to arouse his faculties; his flesh quivered with pain, although he felt sure no bones were fractured, for he could move both arms and legs freely, while after the first shock, his mind returned to activity, dominated by the single conviction that he must get away from there before those men could get down stairs.

He endeavored to rise, rolling partially over in the effort, which failed, but the movement, slight as it was, left one hand dangling over an excavation at his right. His fingers explored the edge of this opening cautiously, revealing a cellar-way leading down into the basement. The opening was black, silent, mysterious, yet it was a hiding place. If he could manage to roll down those steps into those depths below, he might hide there unseen, until he regained strength, until the first effort at pursuit had been abandoned. Then there might be a chance for escape.

West grasped the idea clearly enough. Those fellows would be there swiftly. If they found him gone they would have no doubt but what he landed safely, and had made a getaway. They would search, of course, perhaps out into the alley, hoping he might have been injured, but it was hardly probable they would think to explore the cellar. Even if they did, he could surely creep into some dark corner where he might escape observation. Anyway, crippled as he was, this offered the one and only chance. He could not argue and debate; he must act.

He rolled over, and lowered himself down into the opening, locating the half-dozen broken and rotted steps with his feet. He made no attempt to stand, but simply slid down, finding a partially closed door at the bottom, the passage-way blocked by a litter, the exact nature of which could not be determined in the darkness. With some difficulty, and more than ever conscious of his weakness, and the pain of bruises, he managed to crawl over this pile of debris, and crouch down finally in the intense blackness within. He felt like a trapped rat, still gasping for breath, his body quivering from exertion.

Yet his retreat had been none too rapid. The silence above was broken by the creak of an opening door, the sound of excited voices, and a sudden gleam of light finding entrance through the open cellar-way. West, startled, crept back into a corner, every nerve alert at approaching peril. He recognized Hobart's voice, as the fellow plunged down the steps from the first floor out into the yard.

"To h—l, of course he's here!" he stormed. "My G—d, man, he dived out head first; I saw him. He'll be dead as a door nail now. Come on with that lantern, Turner. Where in thunder is the ladder—does any one know?"

"You think he lies on the roof?"

"Why not? That's where he must have struck, ain't it, Shorty? I don't know, though; it is so steep he'd most likely roll off. Here, you, let me take that glim. There's nothing here in these boxes. Ah, there's the ladder; climb up, Shorty, and see if the guy is stuck anywhere on the roof. Go on! What are you afraid of; if he's there, he's a stiff all right, believe me."

Turner's voice, hoarse and rumbling, came back from above.

"There ain't nothin' up here, Jim. D—n me, if I don't believe the cuss got clean away. Gee, but he was sure a nervy guy, all right."

He Recognized Hobart's Voice.

"Nervy? Crazy, you mean. But he never took that fall without busting something. The bird is lying about here somewhere. You make sure he ain't up there, Shorty."

"Well, he ain't; I kin see every inch o' this roof. Perhaps he fell in between them barrels down there."

The two evidently searched thoroughly, the rays of the lantern dancing wildly about, while Hobart savagely cursed his companion, and, reiterated his belief that no man could take that plunge, and escape unhurt.

"It couldn't be done, I tell you; maybe he could crawl, but that would be all. Why he went down head first; I saw him go out the window, and that drop would daze a cat. Say, Shorty, maybe the stiff dropped down into this cellar-way. Let's take a look."

The light streamed in through the narrow opening, and Hobart scrambled cautiously down the rotted steps. West, drawing himself securely back behind the protection of his barrel, saw the lantern thrust forward, and a face behind it peering in the shadows. The fellow did not advance into the room, but Hobart did, pressing his way roughly past, and standing there full in the glow of light, staring about into the dim shadows. He evidently saw nothing to arouse suspicion, for his voice was angry with disgust.

"Not a d—n sign here, Shorty. It looks like the fellow maybe did get away. But it beats me how. There ain't no place now for us to look but the alley."

"An' if he ain't there?"

"Then we'll hop this dump mighty sudden, I'm telling you. With that guy loose, it won't be healthy for me hanging around here."

"He ain't got the goods on you, has he?"

"No, he ain't got the goods, but he is dead wise to some things, and he didn't get out of that shindy upstairs without getting hurt. He'll be sore all right, and will raise all the h—l he can. It's safer to keep out of the way."

"An' what about that other buck, Hobart? It won't do to have him picked up, if this guy gets the harness bulls to take a look around here."

"That ain't his style, Shorty; he won't spiel anything to the cops about this row. He's an ex-soldier, a captain, and he's nuts on the girl. That's why he dipped into this mess—trying to save her—see? Maybe he won't be so keen now, after the song and dance she gave him upstairs. I'm half inclined to think the guy will drop out entirely, d—n glad to get off alive, now he believes she is as rotten as the rest of us. But I ain't sure—maybe he is the kind that sticks. That's why I don't take any chances just now. Things ain't quite ripe for a get-away—see?"

"Sure; she gave him some straight stuff, hey?"

"She certainly did; she's as smart as she is good looking. It somehow don't strike me this guy is going to bother her any more. I'm figuring that he's out of it."

"But his partner?"

"Oh, we'll leave him somewhere propped up against a door. Likely he'll never know what happened to him, or where. He ain't nothing to be afraid of—just a butler, with a cracked head. It's the other guy who has got the brains. Come on; let's take a look out in the alley."

Their shadows vanished up the stairs, the glow of light disappearing, and leaving the cellar in impenetrable darkness. West did not venture to move, however, content to wait until thoroughly assured the way for escape was clear. He had not learned much from this conversation, except to increase his convictions that a serious crime was being consummated. The full nature of this conspiracy was as obscure as ever; rendered even more doubtful indeed, by the active participation of Natalie Coolidge. This was what puzzled and confused him the most. He could no longer question her direct interest in the affair, or her willingness to assist in overcoming his efforts. Even without the free testimony of the men this fact was sufficiently clear. She had deliberately lied to him, attempted deceit, and then, when he refused to yield to her efforts, had so reported to Hobart, and left him to his fate. It was manifestly impossible for him to believe in her any longer. Yet what could it all mean? how could she hope to benefit by such an association? Why could she thus shield the murderers of Percival Coolidge? What possible object could there be in the commission of this crime, except to gain possession of her own fortune? It was all mystery to his mind; a new unanswerable question arising wherever he looked.

What strange influence could this man Hobart exercise over the girl? To West's judgment he was in no way the sort of man to appeal to Natalie Coolidge. He was of a low, cunning order, with some degree of outward polish, to be sure, yet inherently tough, and exhibiting marks of a birthright which indelibly stamped him of a social class far below her own. Surely, she could not love the fellow, yet unquestionably he possessed a mysterious power over her, difficult to explain through any other hypothesis. If West had not known the young woman under different conditions, he might have accepted this theory, and dismissed the whole matter from mind. But it was the haunting memory of that earlier Natalie Coolidge, the mistress of Fairlawn, which would not permit his complete surrender. She had seemed all that his dream of womanhood called for. Unconsciously, he had given her his heart, and he could not tear the remembrance from mind. There was something wrong, terribly wrong; what it was he had no means of knowing, yet, there in the dark, he determined he would know, would never be content until he learned the whole truth. All his hope, all his future, depended on the answer.

Hobart and Turner were absent for some little while; the sound of their voices ceased, but the distant flicker of the lantern enabled West to trace their progress up the alley, and then back again. They returned in no pleasant humor, convinced that their expected victim had escaped safely, but made no further effort to search the yard. West, confident at last that the way was clear, wriggled out from his place of concealment behind the barrel, and stood erect. He felt stronger now, and in less pain, convinced that his injuries were in no degree serious. The darkness was so intense he had to grope his way forward, anxious to make no noise which might betray his presence.

In the intensity of the gloom, his sense of direction failed, taking him somewhat further back before he finally located the exact position of those outer steps. Then as he turned abruptly, his foot came in contact with an obstacle on the floor. For an instant he could not determine what it was; then, with a thrill of horror, he realized the presence of a human body. There was no sound, no movement, and West drew back from contact with the object, shrinking in horror. Then he gripped himself sternly—whoever, whatever this was, he must know. Alive or dead he must determine the truth. He bent over, feeling with hands in the darkness. The flesh was warm; it was no cold corpse he touched, but a living human being; ay! tied like a mummy, unable to move hand or foot. Then, as suddenly, his groping fingers, eager enough now, discovered the cause of silence—the man was gagged, cruelly gagged, helpless to utter a sound.

The situation once realized, West worked rapidly. If this bound man was Sexton, the quicker he could be released the better. Hobart had already revealed his plans, and might appear at any moment for the purpose of executing them. If escape was to be achieved, it must be accomplished at once. In the darkness his fingers could do nothing with the knot, but the sharp blade of a knife quickly severed the twisted cloth, and the gag was instantly removed from between the clenched teeth. The man moaned, breathing heavily, but made no other sound while West slashed at the cords lashing his limbs, finally freeing them entirely. Not until this had been accomplished did he pause long enough to ask questions.

"There; that's the last. Now, who are you—Sexton?"

"Yes, sir," weakly, and in a mere whisper, "an' I know yer voice, sir. Thank God, yer found me, sir."

"It was a bit of luck; but we'll talk that over later. Now we've got to get out of here. Can you walk?"

"I don't know, sir; after a fashion, maybe. I'm mighty stiff and numb, sir."

"Take it easy; work your legs up and down like that; good, that will restore the circulation. How long have you been lying here?"

"I don't know, sir," his voice strengthening. "I must have been hit, the way my head aches. The first thing I knew after I went into that room with you, I was lyin' here in the dark. I couldn't move or speak, sir, an' it was so black, I kind of got it into my head maybe I was dead and buried. If it hadn't been for my hearing things—voices talking, and all that—I guess I would have gone clear batty. Maybe I didn't get everything straight, sir, but one o' them fellows was Hobart, wasn't he?"

"Yes; we walked right into his trap. The fellow who came over to the table and talked to us was Jim Hobart. He knew me at first sight, and easily guessed what we were there for."

"And was Miss Coolidge here, too, sir?"

"Yes, she was; I had a talk with her that has mixed me all up, Sexton. She seems to be hand in glove with these fellows. But how did you suspect she was here?"

"I heard her voice, sir; up there somewhere, sir, soon after I come to my senses. She and some man went along outside. Sounded like he was makin' her go with him. I couldn't get much of what was said, but he sure talked awful rough, an' she seemed to be pleadin' with him. They wasn't there but just a minute, an' then, a little later, I heard an automobile start up."

"You have no idea how long ago this was?"

"No, I ain't sir. I been lyin' here about half dead, I guess, an' I don't seem to have known anything after that until those fellows come down here with the lantern. Were they hunting after you?"

"Yes; I outwitted them upstairs, and jumped from a window. But that is enough talk now; we'll go over the whole affair when we are safely away from this place. How is it? Do you think you can navigate?"

Sexton responded by getting slowly to his feet. He trembled and was so uncertain, as he attempted to grope forward, that West grasped him firmly, helping him slowly toward the foot of the steps. The two crept up the stairs cautiously, and surveyed the cluttered-up yard as best they might in the dim light of the distant street lamp. It appeared entirely deserted, nor was there any evidence that the building above was occupied. No doubt lights were burning within, but if so the shades must have been drawn closely, allowing no reflection to escape. No better opportunity for evading notice could be hoped for, and West, alert now to every chance, made instant decision.

"They are all inside. Creep along behind that pile of lumber to where you see the hole in the fence. I'll be just behind you. That's the way."

The narrow alley was much lighter, yet still dark enough to conceal their movements, as they clung close to the deeper shadows. Except for an old cart it was unoccupied, the surface covered with ashes, so packed as to leave no trace of wheels. Ahead of them at the end of the block glowed the only street lamp visible. Sexton, by now largely recovered from his late experiences, broke into a run, with West following from the immediate neighborhood unseen. Suddenly Sexton stumbled, but arose almost instantly to his feet again, grasping something which gleamed like silver in his hand.

"I'll Be Just Behind You."

"Not hurt, are you?" asked West anxiously.

"No; what's this I found?"

The other took it impatiently.

"What is it? Why a small pocket knife, of course. Come on, man, don't stand mooning there." He slipped the article carelessly into his pocket.

Now, where does the knife come in.

PIGS' CHRISTMAS

"Merry Christmas, quack, quack!" said Mrs. Duck.

"Merry Christmas, cackle cackle!" said Miss Fidgety Fashionable Hen.

"Merry Christmas, cock-a-doodle-do," said Red Top, the Rooster.

"Merry Christmas, cackle, cackle," said Mrs. White Hen.

"Merry Christmas, cock-a-doodle do," said Sir Reginald Rooster, a visitor from a farm near by.

"Merry Christmas, gobble, gobble, gobble," said Mr. Turkey. "I am not at all sure whether I will be for a Christmas dinner or not. I have been fed a great deal of milk and I am supposed to be fat and tender. I certainly am a handsome, plump bird, but whether I am tender or not I do not know, and never shall know. Of course, others will know that, alas!

"Yet it is an honor to be chosen for the great Christmas dinner. I cannot make up my mind about the whole question any more than the family can. I can tell it is hard for them. When they feed me now they seem so sad, and they look at me in so guilty a way."

"Merry Christmas, it will all be for the best," said Mrs. Goose. But none paid much attention to her, for, after all, the whole barnyard knew she was nothing but a goose.

And when Mr. Gander said, "Merry Christmas," and gave a great shriek, it didn't mean anything to the barnyard creatures.

Still, they were surprised and glad that Mrs. Goose and Mr. Gander had a little of the Christmas feeling, for so often they were cross. In fact, almost all of the time they were cross and kept by themselves.

"We Hope You'll Take the Hint."

"Merry Christmas," neighed the horse.

"Merry Christmas," said Sir William Goat, known, too, as Billy Goat.

"Merry Christmas," said Miss Duck. "Quack, quack, merry Christmas."

"Grunt, grunt," said Grandfather Porky Pig. "I wish you all a merry Christmas, too."

"Grunt, grunt, so do I," said Pinky Pig.

"Merry Christmas," said Master Pink Pig.

And Mrs. Pink Pig added:

"Merry Christmas," and twisted her little tail a trifle more.

"Grunt, grunt," said Brother Bacon; "a merry Christmas to you all."

"Squeal, squeal," said Pinky Pig's mother; "I wish the whole barnyard a merry Christmas."

"So do I, grunt, grunt," said Sammy Sausage. "By all means."

"Squeal, squeal, grunt, grunt," said all the pigs together, and separately, and kept adding again and again:

"Merry Christmas, merry Christmas, every one."

"What does it mean?" asked Red Top, the Rooster. "The pigs are so full of the Christmas cheer. They're so anxious to wish us all a merry Christmas."

"We hope you'll take the hint," said Grandfather Porky.

"What hint?" asked Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"The hint," said Miss Ham. "Surely we've been clear."

"Yes," said Sammy Sausage. "Surely you all must understand that we have been trying to be as polite as polite could be, so you will give us many presents. And we thought if we made you all feel cheerful you would all feel like giving to us.

"We do hope you've been made cheerful," he added.

"But if your cheerfulness doesn't last long," said Brother Bacon, "you'd better begin your Christmas-giving by giving to me. Any nice little delicacy will do."

"Grunt, grunt," said Grandfather Porky; "'age before beauty,' my dears, is a good old saying, and one to be followed. Give to Grandfather Porky first of all."

"Ladies first, squeal, squeal," said Miss Ham.

"You are not exactly a lady," said Sammy Sausage.

"Not exactly," said Miss Ham, "but nearly enough to be served first."

"The elderly ladies should come first," said Pinky's mother.

And now the pigs squealed and talked as fast as they could among themselves and forgot to wish any one a merry Christmas again.

The farmer gave them a splendid Christmas dinner, but how amused the other animals of the barnyard were at the way the pigs had talked of Christmas cheer!

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Asks Congress in Extra Session to Pass Ship Subsidy Bill.

DEMOCRATS ALL AGAINST IT

Measures Link Bonus and Modification of Volstead Act—Turks at Lausanne Are Having Hard Sledding—Clemenceau's Frank Speeches in American Cities.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GEORGES CLEMENCEAU, the "Tiger" of France, is telling his American audiences that Europe's unrest is due to the fact that the United States abandoned the Old World to its troubles, without trying to help it adjust matters after the war. He says we should enter an informal alliance with France and Great Britain. What do you and your acquaintances think about that?

PRESIDENT HARDING, addressing the extra session of congress which opened Monday of last week, appealed for the enactment of a ship subsidy bill. He said there were but three courses to be taken in this matter—"constructive, obstructive and destructive." And though he admitted there is, even in his own party, decided opposition to such a measure, he urged that congress take the constructive course. He argued that the measure as drafted provided complete safeguards against exploitation for favored interests and said that he believed government aid for the merchant marine was as justifiable as government aid of industry through tariff laws or railways through land grants and loans, and government expenditures for good roads, inland waterways, reclamation and irrigation projects.

Mr. Harding especially emphasized the point that the contemplated legislation would not call for new expenditures, but instead proposes to substitute for the present annual drain of $50,000,000 upon the public treasury direct compensation equal to a trifle more than half that amount.

Congress listened to the President calmly and coldly and then the majority got busy with the program, to do the best it could in the circumstances. The bill was quickly reported favorably by the committee on merchant marine, and on Wednesday the house adopted a special rule for its consideration. This provided for three days of general debate and three for consideration of amendments, and a final vote on Wednesday of this week. Meanwhile the Democratic members in caucus decided to oppose the measure solidly, and some Republicans let it be known they would vote in the negative because they thought the people of their districts didn't want the bill.

THERE were two interesting features of the senate's session Tuesday. The first was the swearing in of the first woman to hold a seat in the United States senate—Mrs. W. H. Felton of Georgia. Senator-elect George delayed the presentation of his credentials that this historic event might take place. Next day Mrs. Felton answered once to her name in the roll call, told the senate how proud she was, and retired after 22 hours and 25 minutes of actual service.

The other feature was the bringing up of the Ku Klux Klan matter. A letter from Governor Parker of Louisiana to a New York ex-service man was read by Senator Walsh of Massachusetts. It urged that senators and congressmen be asked to assist in combating the organization. Governor Parker was in Washington at the time, having journeyed there to appeal to the President for federal aid in driving the Klan from his state. Mr. Harding told him the federal government could interfere in the matter only where federal interests were involved and that he was confident Louisiana could take care of the situation. Parker left for home with the statement that he was going to make a fight to the finish against the Klan. Governor Hardwick of Georgia says he will co-operate with Governor Parker in this, and already Governor Allen of Kansas has started legal proceedings to stop the operations of the Klan in his state, because it has not filed its articles of incorporation. Governor Olcott of Oregon also has declared himself the unrelenting foe of the Klan.

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY of Michigan put an end to the long controversy over his election as senator and at the same time relieved his party of great embarrassment by resigning his seat. He said it would be futile for him to attempt to continue his public service as he would be continually hampered by "partisan political persecution." Republican leaders, though sympathizing with Mr. Newberry, agreed that he had adopted a wise course.

TWO soldiers' bonus bills have been introduced in the house, and both of them involve modification of the Volstead prohibition act for both provide for financing the bonus by taxes on liquors now classed as intoxicating. The bill introduced by Representative Hill of Maryland provides that the bonus be financed by a 20 per cent tax on beer and cider containing not more than 2.75 per cent alcohol. The measure sponsored by Representative Britten is the old bill amended so that the necessary funds shall be raised by a tax of $10 a barrel on domestic beer, $30 a barrel on imported beer, $10 a gallon on imported champagne, $5 a gallon on imported still wines, and $2 a gallon on domestic wines.

Whether either or both of these bills are fathered by the "wet" organizations is not stated, but the coupling of the bonus and the liberalizing of the Volstead act may turn out to be a clever and winning move. The Association Opposed to Prohibition is on the war path and, overlooking no chance. Its executive committee has decided to conduct active campaigns to have the state and national conventions of both parties insert "wet" planks in their platforms.

Senator Spencer of Missouri, Democrat, has announced that he will introduce a bill to create a scientific commission to investigate and decide the question, "When is liquor intoxicating?"

ISMET PASHA and his Turkish Nationalist colleagues find themselves up against a tough proposition in the Near East peace conference which began its sessions at Lausanne on Monday. Lord Curzon, by promising Britain's full support for the French program in relation to Germany, brought about complete accord between Great Britain and France in regard to the terms to be imposed on the Turks, and in general it appeared that Italy would agree with them. To start with, the allies decided, over the protests of the Turks, that the proceedings of the conference should be secret and every delegate was pledged not to reveal them, the press being given only a brief communique each day. After several days the Turks again protested against this, asserting that the British and French delegates were giving out the news to correspondents secretly, while they, as Moslem gentlemen, were observing their pledge. All of which availed them nothing. Ismet also objected in vain to the presence of "third parties," especially the Japanese, in the conference, and asked why Russia was not fully represented. In the latter he was backed up by Premier Mussolini of Italy who declared Russia should participate fully in the conference. This stand of the Fascist statesman was a great surprise to the British and French. The soviet delegation was a week late in arriving.

When the conferees got down to business Ismet Pasha submitted the demand of Turkey for the 1918 frontiers or those resulting from the second Balkan war and for a plebiscite in western Thrace. The allies virtually decided at once that these demands should be rejected, but it was said the matter might be referred to a committee. They were opposed vigorously by Venizelos for Greece and by the Bulgarians, Rumanians and Jugo-Slavs.

Stambouliski asked the conference to give Bulgaria a corridor to the Aegan sea, including Dedeagatch, but Greece and the allied powers opposed this. It is not unlikely Bulgaria will be granted an outlet by the free use of a railroad to Dedeagatch, which would remain Greek territory.

Abdul Medjid Effendi, a man of scholarly attainments, has been elected caliph of the Mohammedan church by the Nationalist assembly, and installed in Constantinople. The deposed sultan reached Malta safely under protection of the British, and it has been rumored that they will make use of him later in India to create antagonism there against the Nationalists.

WILHELM CUNO, the new German chancellor, spent much of the week selecting the members of his cabinet from the bourgeoise parties, and seemingly he believes his government will be strong enough to withstand the assaults of the angry united Socialists. The latter rejected President Ebert's appeal to drop their quarrel with the People's party and help save Germany from collapse. This caused Ebert to repudiate his own party and authorize Cuno to ignore the Socialists.

KING GEORGE opened the new British parliament with the usual speech from the throne, in which he asked that, as regards trade and employment, the ameliorative measures prepared by the Lloyd George government be continued and extended. James R. MacDonald, who had been elected leader of the Labor party and therefore is leader of the opposition in parliament, started the debate on the king's speech by calling for alleviation of the distress arising from unemployment. How serious this question is was made plain by the enormous parade of the unemployed in London which at first demanded access to Prime Minister Bonar Law but was turned away from Downing street by diplomacy. The first urgent business of parliament, however, will be the passage of the Irish bill, for if the Free State constitution has not been ratified by December 6 the Anglo-Irish treaty will lapse.

M. GEORGES CLEMENCEAU is delivering a series of addresses in the largest American cities, explaining the present day attitude of France and telling Americans wherein, as he thinks, their own country is at fault in not taking an active part in the efforts to revive Europe. His strictures and his advice are received with enthusiasm, with interest or with dissent, according to the opinions of his individual hearers and readers, but always they are received with friendly spirit, for the old man himself inspires admiration and liking everywhere. It is not likely that he can induce America to enter into the alliance with France and Great Britain which he advocates, but probably he will be successful in giving us a better understanding of the policy of France and her urgent needs.

ANOTHER great mine disaster occurred last week, this time near Birmingham, Ala. Cars running wild severed an electric cable and a spark caused a terrible dust explosion 1,100 feet from the entrance. Four hundred and seventy-five men were trapped, and of these 84 were killed. Many others were severely injured.

EVERYONE will be interested in the story which came out of French Lick Springs, Ind., where Mayor Hylan of New York has been stopping after a visit to Chicago. It is to the effect that Hylan and Mayor Thompson of Chicago have formed an alliance for the purpose of getting William Randolph Hearst nominated for the presidency in 1924. It is said they will hold over the heads of the leaders of the Democratic party the threat of forming a third party to include all the insurgents and more radical farmer and labor elements. In fact, Hylan made just that threat in a statement to the press.

ST. HILAIRE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Ye Sons and Daughters of the St. Hilaire High School! Do you know that your basket ball team was defeated by the city athletes at the first game of the season? Ask old "Father Time" to spare you an hour for the next game. May we "always be there" one hundred present strong?

This week the regular six weeks examinations have been given. It is understood that those who have a program of five subjects and fail in anyone which they have been below grade in so far, will have to drop one of the subjects.

The rule has been made that the student who comes late in the morning or who is absent altogather will have to remain until 4 o'clock in the evening in order to account for some of the work that he has missed. This rule is a benefit to all as it makes the pupils feel the responsibility of a high school course.

The following are the names of those having a perfect attendance for the past six weeks. Stella Bengston, George Biskey, Laurine Bjerk, Ross Chapman, Quentin Chapman, Verney Evenson, Alice Gigstad, Klemens Gigstad, Dorothy Grimsrud, Billy Gunstad, Fred Hacket, Lewis Nelsen, Iona Olson, Myles Olson, [illegible]

THE SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

The pupils of the school entertained their parents and friends last Friday evening. The Pageant of Peace which included interesting war scenes, and various folk dances and drills was given. At the conclusion of the program, refreshments were served by the high school pupils. This is the first public entertainment given by the school this year and it was greatly enjoyed. The money realized from the entertainment will be used for school purposes.

BILL'S HALF-HOUR

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Bill Evans, whistling aloud out of his happy, care-free young heart, picked up the letter which lay on his desk, unfolded it, and read. His whistle stopped abruptly.

Head propped in his two hands, he read the letter again, spread out on his desk, as if a second perusal might alter the situation.

"Dear Bill—Don't think that I have forgotten you, for all the long silence. When I told you I did not love you enough to marry, but loved your friend instead, I was wrong. He never asked me again, by the way. If you still want me, I will marry you. In fact, I am taking a chance and coming out by the next boat, which will dock at Honolulu almost as soon as you receive this letter. If you don't want me, Bill, why, I can at least go home again! As ever,

"BEATRICE SHAW."

Beatrice Shaw! Yes, he had once thought he loved her—had been pretty well cut up when she turned him down. But he hadn't thought of her for months. Not since he had met Eileen Cary to whom he was to be married at noon tomorrow.

But noon tomorrow! Why, that was when the Matsonia would dock, bringing Eileen's aunt to the wedding from her home in the States, and also Beatrice. How could he explain to Eileen that this girl had no claim on him? That the old affair—and it had hardly been that—was over and done with years ago.

How could he know that Beatrice would revive an affection for him she had never shown and out of a clear sky would descend to ruin his wedding day?

Bill rose and paced the floor of the comfortable study he shared with his old friend and present fellow worker at the Inter-Island Navigation company with nervous, angry strides. Then a strong desire surged within him to share his trouble with some one.

Should he tell Eileen? Instinct urged him to wait, yet the longing to hear her voice was overpowering.

He took down the receiver and called the number of her father's plantation on the city's outskirts.

"That you, Eileen?"

"Busy?"

"Anxious for tomorrow?"

"Suppose—suppose you should hear—oh, nothing, dear; I don't know what I'm saying."

"Of course I love you. No, there never was any one else. On my word of honor Eileen!"

And yet, as he hung up, Bill could see the Matsonia steaming nearer and nearer, bringing the girl who apparently thought he still cared, as, hang it, he evidently must have seemed to care years ago, when, spurred by a moonlight night at a dance at Coronado, he had suggested they be engaged. So long ago had it been that he had even forgotten why she had turned him down. Oh, the letter had mentioned his friend. What friend? To Billy the whole matter was as vague as that.

Desperately Bill sat down and tried to reason a way out of the tangle. He would get his roommate to go down to the Matsonia and explain to Beatrice that he was about to be married, that she was mistaken in thinking he cared, that she must return on the next boat, providing she had funds. But, hang it, his roommate, the only one he could trust not to let the cat out of the bag to Eileen, had other duties as best man. He was to meet Eileen's aunt, take her to the church and return immediately to accompany Bill.

Meanwhile Beatrice, wondering why Bill had not met her, would probably be hunting him up, and like as not stumble on him as he entered the church! A nice contretemps that would be! For to Bill's disordered mind it seemed quite possible that any girl capable of chasing an old and discarded lover to Honolulu would be quite as capable of breaking up a wedding with another girl on the spot.

A wild thought leaped in Bill's brain. Suppose he bolted! Or suppose he dashed out to Eileen's and demanded she elope. Yet where could they elope to before Beatrice arrived? The islands are circumscribed when it comes to gossip and he was in a position to know that not even a tramp steamer for the South seas would be leaving port.

Hark! Who was that coming in downstairs? A shiver of apprehension shook Bill; then angrily he shrugged his shoulders. The Matsonia hadn't raised Diamond Head yet. At worst it would only be his roommate.

His roommate it was, who bounded up the stairs two steps at a time and burst in the door.

"Caught a ride back on Cramer's yacht, so got here sooner. How's the little bridegroom? You're looking seedy. Brace up and tell me what you think of a double wedding!"

"A double wedding, Will?"

"Sure! Didn't you read the little note I left on your desk for you to read? Or did you think it was yours and I opened it by mistake? I've always been sweet on Beatrice. Thought at one time you were. And now, bless her heart, she's coming out to me! Oh, you're not the only lucky bird!"

"No, William," said Bill, and rising [illegible]

An Important Part Of Fall HOUSECLEANING

Clean your electric bulbs and fixtures thouroughly and carefully. This is an economic measure as well as a feature of good housekeeping. In order to get full value of the current you are useing, let the light gleam through clear, shinning glass.

TO CLEAN LAMP BULBS
Remove them from fixture. Wipe the glass part with a danp cloth and polish with dry cloth.

TO CLEAN FIXTURES
Remove glass shades and wash in warm, soapy water. It may be necessary to use a small brush. The inverted bowls of semi-inderect lights should be wiped with a hot, damp cloth and a little non-scratching cleaning powder.

Shirred silk shades can sometimes be cleaned by brushing well, first with a dry brush, then with a brush dipped in lukewarm suds, and drying at once with a soft towel. Delicate and expensive shades should be dry cleaned,

Polish brass and other metal parts, and wipe with a dry cloth the long, silk cords on floor and table lamps. Use a furniture polish on mahogany finished lamb bases.

ASIA MINOR IS TRAGEDY SCENE

Refuges Crowding Down to the Fringes of Black Sea and Mediterranean.

NO FOOD FOR STARVING

Pitiful Appeals for Help Sent by American Warships in Near East—Snow Makes Suffering Intense.

Constantinople—Another human tragedy that promises to rival the Smyrna fire is developing in northern Asia Minor, where the tide of a quarter of a million Christian inhabitants is sweeping in full flood to the fringes of the Black sea and the Mediterranean.

These refugees are clamoring to be saved. The American naval base at Constantinople is deluged with SOS calls from the flotilla of American destroyers patrolling the Mediterranean and Black sea coasts of Asia Minor, which are crowded with Christians fleeing from the Turk. There is a poignant note of despair and tragedy in every message snatched from the air. Appeals from land to "save our souls" are received almost hourly and are taxing the capacity of the American radio staff here.

Thousands of Orphans.

Appeals come from every part of Anatolia, where whole Christian communities are migrating and where the American Near East Relief is working heroically to overcome almost insuperable obstacles, including the removal of orphans for great distances to the sea.

Cryptic radiographs received here indicated that "a critical situation was developing with surprising suddenness; the whole interior is blanketed with snow, adding immeasurably to the misery of the exiles."

A wireless from the destroyer Barry said:

"Five hundred Christians are arriving at Samsun daily from parts unknown."

Another from the Barry, relayed from Sivas, in the interior of Anatolia, said:

"Ten thousand Christians and two thousand orphans trudging through the snow from Sivas are looking to the Americans to save them."

Many Near Death.

Another destroyer relayed a dramatic appeal to the Near East Relief at Constantinople from James H. Crutcher of Tuscaloosa, Ala., at Samsun. "Can you take a thousand mountain children? If not it means their end."

One from the destroyer Lawrence came from Americans at Trebizond, declaring: "We cannot hold up evacuation of Trebizond much longer. We are overwhelmed by arrivals from the interior. Instruct immedaitely."

RUSSIA ASKS PARLEY HAND

Lausanne—America's insistence for the open door and equality economically in the Near East, which follows her traditional demands for equal commercial privileges in the Far East, was cited by the Russian delegation as supporting an official communication forwarded by the Russian delegation to the conference asking for the right of speech on all matters before the body.

Russia objects vigorously to any attempt to limit her activities in the discussion of the future status of the Dardanelles; she claims that all topics on the Lausanne agenda are closely related to the supreme object of freedom of the straits and that stable peace in the Near East can be attained only by allowing the Russian delegates free participation on the same basis as the other great powers.

Points to U. S. Stand.

In their official petition the Russians affirm that only by following the principle of equality can the conference hope to reach the goal of greater equity in their relations between nations—"as expressed at the opening of the conference and confirmed by the recent declaration of the representative of the United States."

ILLINOIS ROCKED BY QUAKE

St. Louis, Mo.—Considerable property damage was caused by earth tremors of moderate intensity in eastern Missouri, southern Illinois, western Indiana, and northwestern Kentucky, according to reports reaching here. The tremors shook buildings and homes, toppled chimneys from residences, broke windows, knocked chinaware from shelves and frightened residents in the parts of the four states.

Hunger Striker Is Released.

Dublin—Miss Mary MacSwiney, who has been hunger striking in Mount Joy prison, has been released. Her release came on the twenty-third day of her hunger strike. She had refused to take food since her arrest on November 4, when she was seized during a raid on a house in Aylesbury Road by nationalist troops who were seeking Eamonn De Valera. Miss MacSwiney was released at 7 p. m., and was taken in an automobile to the Mater hospital.

JEAN LOUGET

Jean Louget of Paris, a grandson of Karl Marx, the father of modern socialism, arrived in this country on the steamship Mauretania. Meeting at first with considerable opposition because of his well-known stand on socialism, the tendency being to deny him admission to the United States, the objections were finally overcome and a passport issued to him. While in this country M. Louget will give a number of lectures on the general situation in Europe following the World war and the effect of the treaty of Versailles.

BARBERRY FIGHT OPENS

Big Cleanup in Minnesota, Dakotas, Iowa and Nebraska,

St. Paul—Six members of the Conference for the Prevention of Grain Rust are at Washington this week appearing before the agricultural subcommittee of the House in support of a $500,000 appripriation for continuing the barberry eradication campaign in the spring wheat states next year. They are President J. F. Reed of the Minnesota Farm Bureau, Harrison Fuller, director of the Conference, Dr. E. C. Stakman of the University of Minnesota, Dr. G. H. Coons of the Michigan College of Agriculture, President W. S. Hill of the South Dakota Farm Bureau and President C. W. Hunt of the Iowa Farm Bureau. Congressman Sidney Anderson of Minnesota is chairman of the committee conducting the hearing.

ACTION ON RURAL CREDITS

Legislation Indorsed by War Finance Corporation Head to be Pushed.

Washington—Rural credit legislation began to take form, when a new bill sponsored by the American National Livestock association and approved by Eugene Meyer, Jr., managing director of the war finance corporation, was made public.

The bill authorizes the formation of agricultural credit corporations with a minimum capital of $250,000. The corporations would furnish credit on agricultural products for periods ranging up to three years, thus filling the gap between short loans available under the federal reserve system and long term loans under the Federal Land bank system. The bill also contains a number of amendments to the federal reserve act, referring to the rediscount of short time agricultural paper. The bill amends the federal farm loan act by increasing from $10,000 to $25,000 the amount which Federal Land banks can lend to any one borrower.

BUTLER TO SUPREME COURT

Harding Names Lawyer to Succeed Judge Day.

Washington—Pierce Butler of St. Paul was nominated by President Harding as associate justice of the supreme court to take the place made vacant by the resignation of Associate Justice Day.

Mr. Butler is a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Minnesota and formrely was county attorney of Ramsey county and president of the Ramsey County Bar association. In 1921 he was retained by the Canadian government for the valuation of the Grand Trunk railway.

RAMSEY PROBE BY OFFICIALS

Reports of Freedom Allowed Prisoners Brings Action.

Minneapolis—Reports that discipline in the Ramsey county jail is so poorly maintained that liquor is smuggled into the place and prisoners wile away their hours drinking, dice throwing, and playing cards were followed by order from U. S. District Judge Page Morris, that conditions there be investigated. He directed United States district attorney, and Marshall to inspect the place.

Issues Edict on Oil Concerns.

Mexico City—President Obregon has delivered a circular to all oil interests operating in Mexico, to the effect that within 60 days all companies must find a means of conserving the natural gas in their wells.

Paris Reports Shortage of Priests.

Paris—The Echo de Paris says there is a great shortage of priests in France, due to a large extent, by losses of the war. Rheims, the newspapers say, needs 200 more members of the clergy.

U. S. WARNING JOLTS ALLIES

Child's Attack on Preferential Rights Deemed "Undue Interference."

Lausanna—America gave Great Britain, France and Italy a hard jolt when her spokesman, Richard Washburn Child, declared that the United States government has the support of the American public in its opposition to all secret treaties and agreements, particularly those designed to create zones of economic and commercial influence, such as the San Remo tripartite agreement of 1920, which apportioned the Mesopotamian oil fields among the three big powers.

Mr. Child's exposition was merely a restatement of Secretary of State Hughes' aide-memoire of October 30, in which he defined for the benefit of the British, French and Italian governments the functions of the American observers to the Lausanna conference and broadly outlined America's open door policy for the Near East—but it was a restatement under conditions that made it sensational.

It came as the conference was about to begin consideartion of Turkey's Asiatic boundaries, and it was a clear warning that America will not remain silent if the three inviting powers insist upon preferential rights in oil, mineral, railway and power development in present Turkish territory or in that which was lopped off by the war.

MICHIGAN DEFEATS MINN.

Big Ten Series Leaves Three Tied for 1st Place.

Minneapolis—Displaying an aerial attack that would not be denied, Michigan went into a tie with Iowa for the western conference football championship by defeating Minnesota, 16 to 7, in one of the most spectacular games ever played on Northrop field. It was a typical Wolverine-Gopher tussle, filled with thrills from start to finish. It found the underdogs holding the upperhand against an eleven that was undefeated, only to lose the advantage when the more seasoned combine hit its stride. Any one of a number of breaks might have turned the tide of victory the other way.

Chicago and Wisconsin battled desperately before 32,000 surprised spectators on Stagg field and closed the Conference season with a scoreless tie, which to the hopes of the Midwayites was almost as crushing as defeat. Outplayed, outrushed and fighting on the defensive

Unable to withstand the shattering plunges of Locke and Miller, the Northwestern line weakened, then crumbled and fell, permitting Iowa to batter through for a 37 to 3 victory.

U. S. TO SUE CAMP BUILDERS

Orders to Seek Recovery on Cantonment Contracts.

Washington—Orders went out from the Department of Justice to federal district attorneys for the institution of suits against the contractors who built the country's cantonments, under which Attorney General Daugherty hopes to recover the enormous sum of $78,500,000.

This sum, acording to officials, represents "profiteering" as closely as War department experts have been able to calculate.

The suits will be begun all over the country in the next few days. The first probably will be filed in the cases of Camp Sherman, Ohio, built at a cost of $13,000,000 in which the government hopes to recover $5,000,000, and in the case of Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., built at approximately the same cost, and in which the government hopes to make an even greater proportionate recovery.

SUBSIDY BILL WILL PASS

Measure Holds Its Own in Seven Solid Hours of Debate.

Washington—Sailing on through peaceful and then through turbulent seas, the shipping bill held its own in the House as friends sought to speed its voyage and enemies fought to scuttle it.

Anoka—A girl and a boy, 6 and 8 years old walked four miles on dark country roads near Osseo to carry home news of an automabile accident in which their fathers were killed. The children had escaped injury.

Flu Epidemic Breaks Out on Steamer.

Plymouth, England—An epidemic of influenza has broken out among the officers and crew of the American steamer President Roosevelt. The chief officer of the vessel and the purser are among those ill.

Canada Spends $40,000,000 on Roads.

Ottawa, Ont.—Forty million dollars is being spent on good roads in Canada this year. Highway construction is being done on a larger scale than ever before and the appropriations for

CAPPER INSISTS LOWER RATES

13 Railway Systems' Dividends Cited as Argument for Reduction.

Washington—"The American farmer" Senator Capper, Kansas, told the Senate, "is paying for the privilege of raising wheat."

The Kansas senator who is the leader of the farm bloc, in the course of an appeal for lower freight rates on farm products declared that in spite of the railroad's repeated assertion that they 'cannot afford to lower freight rates, he is convinced that they 'cannot afford not to lower them.'

He estimated that more than half of the country's fruit crop this year was lost because it cost the growers more to sell their fruit because of high freight charges than to let it rot.

Senator Capper quoted a Wall Street agency as saying that 13 great railway systems would increase their dividend rates during the next few months; one of them the Chicago & North Western, to eight per cent.

He asserted the Santa Fe was earning about 25 per cent on its preferred stock and 13 per cent on its common and had increased its surplus during the last seven years; the Union Pacific was earning 15 per cent and had a large surplus; the Burlington was paying its stockholders 20 per cent; the Great Northern would earn six per cent; the Pere Marquette 8.4 per cent, the Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern Pacific each 10 per cent and the Illinois Central 14 per cent; the Central of New Jersey expected to make an extra dividend for distribution; the Pennsylvania had increased its dividend from 4 to 6 per cent.

UNTERMAYER TO AID A. F. of L.

Mellon Believed Clearing Way to Permit Appointment.

Washington—White House selections to fill the two vacancies on the Federal Reserve board were reported to be a step nearer solution.

The vacancies are in the office of governor and the newly created "dirt farmer" member.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon went to New York, where he was reported to have gone to consult with financial interests there, over the Reserve board governorship.

It is understood from an authoritative source that the President has determined to appoint Eugene Meyer, new director of the War Finance corporation, if a vacancy can be created that will make him eligible.

One farm group has put forward James R. Howard of Iowa, in the Kansas City district, for the "dirt farmer" appointment. He is head of the Farm Bureau federation. But another farm group is bitterly opposed to his appointment. The opposition is understood to be ready to combine with the interests demanding representation from the South, with the result that the "dirt farmer" member may ocme from that section.

IRISH EXPOSURE CHILDERS

Firing Squad Takes Life of Irish Leader by Court Martial.

Dublin—Erskine Childers, chief lieutenant of Eamonn De Valera in the Irish Republican movement, was executed at 7 a. m. Fradiy by a Free State firing squad. Official announcement of the execution was made shortly afterward by the Free State cabinet.

Childers was secretly tried before a court martial. Owing to the secrecy with which the affair was conducted and the refusal to issue any official information various rumors arose as to the disposition of the guerilla chieftain. His sister claimed he had been put to death secrety.

MEYER FOR RESERVE BOARD

New York Attorney Agrees to Participate in Trial.

Washington—Samuel Untermayer of New York, will assist the American Federation of Labor in presentation of its argument urging impeachment of Attorney General Daugherty when the impeachment proceedings again taken up, according to a formal announcement by the federation.

Mr. Untermayer, according to the statement, will handle features of the impeachment proceedings dealing with the anti-trust and war fraud cases.

Dying Bandit Found.

Minneapolis—Although near death, William Kenny, found wounded and believed to be a leader of a bandit gang which was frustrated in a St. Paul pay roll robbery, refused to give the police any information about himself or his accomplices.

Single Conference Lausanne Decision.

Lausanne—The plan to hold two distinct conferences on the Near Eastern question has been abandoned, it was stated, and the problem of the straits has been merged into the general conference.

Delayed in Taking Office.

Manilla, P. I.—Governor General Leonard Wood will not be able to take up his new duties as provost of the University of Pennsylvania until the latter part of February and possibly not until spring.

Hibbing—The first case of its kind ever tried in northern Minnesota, whereby a clergyman attempted to collect for back salary was settled in district court. Rev. Father Schumak, former priest of the Russian Orthodox church in Chisholm, sued for $315.

Minneapolis—The Pence Automobile company of Minneapolis, filed amended articles of incorporation with the secretary of state increasing its capital stock from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000. Harry E. Pence, president, and E. C. Malcolmson, secretary, signed the articles.

Duluth—About one-tenth of the big game hunters in this section of the north country brought back trophies, according to estimates made by veteran hunters. It is estimated that the smallest number of deer and moose in the history of the north country fell before the nimrods' rifles.

St. Paul—Governor J. A. O. Preus indicated that he would fill a vacancy on the district court bench in Minneapolis within a few days and that he would select one of the two municipal judges reecntly elected to district judgeships, thereby creating a vacancy as municipal judge.

Duluth—Enactment of a new state wide teachers' pension law, to include all classes of teachers, city, rural and university, will be sought of the state legislature, when it meets in January, in accordance with recommendations of the Minnesota Education association pension committee.

Duluth, Minn.—Because what he thought was a fox hiding in a hole proved to be a wolf, Clarence H. Dunning of this city, is $15 ahead. Dunning was driving into the north country to hunt deer when he saw the tail of an animal protruding from a hole in the side of the ditch along the road. Thinking it was a fox, he pulled the tail, expecting to catch the animal. When it had backed out far enough for Dunning to see it was a wolf, he grabbed a pole and clubbed it to death. He received $15 bounty for the pelt.

Minneapolis—The Golden Rule, St. Paul department store, filed amended articles increasing capital stock from $750,000 to $3,000,000. Jacob Dittenhofer, president, and Bennet Buchman, secretary, signed the amended articles.

Winona, Minn.—Holding that an officer cannot be held liable for acts of his subordinates, Judge Wilbur F. Booth in federal court here dismissed the action brought against S. B. Qvale, federal prohibition director in Minnesota, to obtain $20,000 damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained when federal agents raided the Malewicki home the night of May 1.

POULTRY TUBERCULOSIS CAUSES BIG LOSSES

White Plague Declared the Greatest Menace By Prof. Billings.

"Tuberculosis is by far the worst disease of poultry at the present time," says Dr. W. A. Billings, veterinary specialist with the agricultural extension division of the state university. "It exists throughout Minnesota and causes tremendous losses. It is a contagious disease and spreads very rapidly after it gains a foothold in the flock. The germ is very much like the one which causes tuberculosis in the human. The older birds of the flock are the ones usually affected. It is seldom seen in birds under a year old.

"The birds are first noticed to be droopy and stand off by themselves, sometimes refusing to eat. The comb and wattles are pale red or colorless. There is a gradual loss in weight and, in later stages of the disease, they become very thin and weak. Some are unable to stand. They may live for several weeks after they are first noticed to be sick.

"When examining a dead fowl, look over all the internal organs carefully. The liver will be found to contain greyish or yellowish white spots on the surface. Some may be as small as the head of a pin and others may be as large as one's thumb. Now turn to the intestines and look for greyish white lumps on the outer surface. If this condition is found, there is no doubt of its being tuberculosis.

"There is no cure for this disease. If the flock is small it would be best to destroy them all and start over again. Be sure to burn or bury all the dead birds and carefully clean up and disinfect the yards and houses. If the flock is large or valuable, it may be tuberculin tested; all birds which react should be destroyed."

Kentucky Professor to Speak.

Prof. Thomas Cooper, dean and director of the agricultural department of the Univeristy of Kentucky, will be one of the leading speakers at the mass meeting opening the Farmers' and Homemakers' Short Course at University Farm on Monday, January 1. His subject, "Farms of Tomorrow," has an appeal for all classes—farm and city people alike.

PROF. THOMAS COOPER
Who will speak at the Farmers and Homemakers Short Course at University Farm Jan. 1 to 6, 1923.

Professor Cooper is a man of large experience and has an intimate understanding of the problems confronting the agriculture of the middle west. Both Minnesota and North Dakota have profited by his achievements as an extension worker and farm management expert. His splendid work with the department of agriculture, University of Minnesota, attracted the attention of state authorities in North Dakota and, on invitation, he accepted the position of dean and director of the North Dakota college and station. After administering the affairs of that station with conspicuous success for several years he was called to his new field in Kentucky.

The legume is everywhere becoming known as the farmers' friend. Legumes are always ready to help lessen the fertilizer bill. "Give them a fair chance, treat them as you would a true friend, and you will be repaid a hundredfold; remember, it is the legumes that have been credited not only with boarding themselves, but paying for the privilege," says soil fertility experts.

CATTLE TUBERCULOSIS CAN BE PREVENTED

One Hundred Thousand Cattle in Minnesota Are Now Affected.

Prof. H. R. Smith, commissioner for the National Livestock Exchange, painted a vivid picture of the tremendous losses entailed by bovine tuberculosis in this country before the annual conference of agricultural extension people held at University Farm recently. One hog out of every seven in the United States, he said, has tuberculosis, or a percentage of 14 for the entire country. In 1898, he said, only 2 per cent of the hogs of the country were affected with this disease. All the figures and statistics, he added, show that the hog growing industry is imperiled to an extent not known or appreciated by agriculturists of the country.

"If we can get rid of tuberculosis in cattle," said Professor Smith, "we can keep it out of our swine herds, for 98 per cent of tuberculosis in hogs is due to the cow and her milk. Probably 20 per cent of the hogs in this territory are affected with tuberculosis. Minnesota is one of the 'bad states.' A high percentage of tuberlosis found in children comes from milk.

"One hundred thousand cattle in Minnesota have tuberculosis right now and the problem is to find them and put them out of the way. The disease can be stamped out and our livestock made healthy and members of the human family safe-guarded from this source of infection. It is simply a question of education and action."

What is known as "area testing" is the thing that will drive out tuberculosis, Professor Smith added. Plans have already been made for starting work under this system in two Minnesota counties yet to be selected. Professor Smith emphasized the importance of adequate state funds for the expenses of the work, and said that $500,000 would be needed for the right kind of a campaign in Minnesota the coming year. This, he said, should be regarded as a promising investment rather than an expenditure.

Costs of testing have been reduced under the area plan of tuberculosis eradication, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Records of the department show that for 25 counties in various states for which figures are available, the cost of testing was only 34 cents a head. Steuben county, N. Y., where 45,000 cattle were tested by 33 veterinarians in 19 days, did the work at a cost of 23.5 cents a head. In Missouri the testing done by federal veterinarians cost only 28 cents a head. This included salary, subsistence, and travel expenses. In some counties work has been done at as low a cost as 15 cents a head.

New Variety of Apple Appears.

Good things are expected of the Haralson, a new apple developed at the State Fruit Breeding farm at Zumbra Heights, Lake Minnetonka. In appearance and size the Haralson is equal to the Wealthy, but is much hardier and will keep under ordinary storage conditions until the first of April, according to Prof. W. H. Alderman, chief of the division of horticulture of the University of Minnesota.

The Wedge, which was also developed at the farm and named in honor of a well known Minnesota horticulturist, is similar in character to the Haralson while being slightly larger and of somewhat better appearance. It's quality of hardiness has not been fully determined, but it is apparent, Professor Alderman says, that it will succeed well at least as far north as central Minnesota.

The Folwell, the third of the new apple varieties, is a highly productive and high quality fruit and can be recommended to both the home and the commercial grower. The Minnehaha, fourth in the list, is also of interest because of its high color and good quality. It is medium in size, and keeps only until midwinter.

More than 50,00 farm boys and girls were enrolled as pig-club members in 1921, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. These young farmers reported growing nearly 60,000 purebred pigs, valued at $1,500,000, and managed according to improved methods of housing, feeding, and care advocated by extension workers.

Dairy improvement association records show that the feed cost of 100 pounds of milk varies from 40 cents to $1.20, depending largely on the production of the herd.

American Farm Bureau

Elaine Hendricks and Bertha Boger.

These two Colorado club girls, Elaine Hendricks and Bertha Boger, won the state championship in canning at the Colorado state fair in Pueblo and will go to Chicago to compete for the trip to France, which will be given to the winning team in the national canning contest for boys' and girls' clubs.

The achievements of these girls at Pueblo are worthy of mention and are the result of several years of patient effort in their home community and county.

The Kit Carson county farm bureau in co-operation with Miss Amelia Alexander, county club leader, has featured club work as one of the main projects. As a result of their efficient work, practically every farm home in the county does its own canning. Each Saturday afternoon for several years these girls have given demonstrations in store buildings, where country women came to rest and learn to can.

In the contest demonstrations at Pueblo they canned a rear quarter of pork in one hour, a crate of peaches in three-quarters of an hour and one-half bushel of beans in three-quarters of an hour. It is fully expected they will maintain Colorado's high standing in club work at the national contest in Chicago during the International stock show.

IOWA FARMERS LIKE SOY BEANS IN CORN

Young Pigs Turned Into Field Make Remarkable Growth—Necro Trouble Disappears.

The results of the farm bureau campaign for home-grown protein in the way of soy beans in corn for hogging down are pleasing Iowa farmers. A well-known farmer of Gower township, who is trying beans for the first time, says: "About a month ago I turned 288 head of spring and summer shoats in 32 acres of corn and soy beans planted about the first of June. The beans were about right to hog down at that time. So I routed them out for ringing and say, I never had a bunch of hogs in my life that showed the thrift, growth and gain that this 228 head did. If I had weighed them when I put them in and then weighed them when I took out the first carload I dare say we could not have believed the scales. I have been bothered with necro in my hogs for the last few years in a moderate form. This fall, after turning these shoats in on these soy beans, I noticed the excrement from these took on an entirely different color and form than ever before. For about two weeks it looked like excrement that follows pilling. After that it appeared in a normal form for hogs in cornfield. By letting the hogs in early this way they get very little corn and pasture on beans and grass. So in about three weeks they have learned to haul down full feed for themselves. After getting on full feed they pasture on the beans lighter or use them about like they would tankage. They eat vines and all as long as beans are green. After that they seem to eat beans only."

REPRESENTATION IN LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Foreign Organizations Appeal to American Farmers to Help Secure Recognition.

On the belief that the standing of agriculture in the League of Nations tribunal at The Hague affects American agricultural interests, even though the United States is not a member of the League of Nations, foreign agricultural organizations are appealing to American farmers to assist in getting the same representation for agriculture that other industries already have.

The international court at The Hague has decided that questions regarding agriculture that come up before the league are to be dealt with by the international labor board of the league at Geneva.

An explanation of the situation, written by Dr. E. Laur, secretary of the Swiss Farmers' association, is forwarded to the American Farm Bureau federation by Frederic Rohner, who was a delegate from the Swiss organization at the last annual meeting of the farm bureau. Doctor Laur says:

"During the war the French peasants stood in the trenches, while the majority of the industrial workers remained in the factories earning bigger wages than ever in peace time. At the end of the war the industrial labor organizations contrived to secure for themselves, as the 'spoils of war' the 'eight-hour working day.' The farmers and their leaders were still at the front. Nobody was there to defend their interests in the treaty of Versailles. During this time the leaders of the factory workers got together and secretly laying the basis for the international labor board they inclosed in the scheme the clauses which now give them the opportunity to extend the eight-hour day also to agriculture. In order to camouflage their actual aim, the agreement mentioned only 'industry.' However, in their secret discussions they made provisions to include 'agriculture' in the term 'industry.' The authorized ministers discussing the peace treaty could not go into all these details and most probably they themselves had no knowledge of what had been agreed to by the 'labor experts.' This brings it about that today France herself has to appeal against the treaty of Versailles.

"It is to the interest of farmers the world over to unite in protest against this decision. Had the intention to bring agriculture under the jurisdiction of the international labor board been openly stated at the time the treaty of Versailles was being discussed, this clause would never have been allowed in the treaty."

FITTING CATTLE FOR SHOWS

Little Miss Bernice De Vaul Is Real He-Man in Preparing Beef Animals for Fair.

Little thirteen-year-old Bernice De Vaul, a calf club girl of Inwood, Ia., is a real he-man when it comes to fitting and showing cattle. Here she is at the Sioux City Interstate fair with her two junior yearling Shorthorn steers, one weighing 1,130 pounds and the other 1,105. While the winnings were slim this year she declares she will wind up with a purple ribbon next year.

SELECTION OF SITE FOR ICE HOUSE

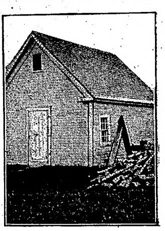
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

While the ice house is a common thing among the outbuildings now found on many farms, yet there are many farms which do not have it. Farmers not enjoying this useful piece of equipment have need to consider, as fall comes along, what arrangements should be made so that they may have a place ready to store ice when cold weather arrives.

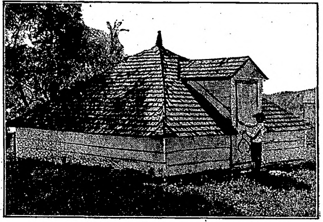
The selection of a site for an ice house is very important. Other conditions being suitable, the ice house on a dairy farm should be placed as near as possible to the milk house, in order to reduce the labor of handling and to encourage the more liberal use of ice. On a general farm the ice house should be located near the residence. To facilitate drainage the ground on which the ice house stands should be porous and slope away from the building. Advantage also may be taken of the nearness of hills, trees, or buildings, which often afford protection from hot winds, thus saving ice.

Type of Building.

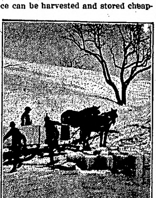
The construction of the ice house depends to a great extent upon local conditions, the size of the house, and the difficulty of obtaining ice. These factors help to determine the sum that may wisely be spent for such a building. Where ice is expensive or hard to obtain, a better constructed and insulated and therefore more expensive ice house is advisable. Where natural ice can be harvested and stored cheaply a cheap structure is usually satisfactory, and the loss from melting ice is a small consideration.



Farmer's Ice House With Milk Room.



Ice House Is Useful Piece of Equipment on Any Farm.



Getting in the Ice Crop for Next Summer.

The cost of harvesting and storing, the interest on the money invested, and repairs and depreciation on the building, are to be considered in relation to the ice loss from melting; and the type of house to be built depends upon these factors. It never pays to build permanently in other than a substantial manner, and careful thought should be given the matter before erecting a cheap makeshift that will not give adequate service.

An ice house should be built where it will be shielded as much as possible from the wind and from the direct rays of the sun. The object is to prevent the outside heat from passing into the interior and melting the ice; consequently every effort must be made to resist the passage of heat by placing in the walls a material or a form of construction which will reduce the transfer of heat from the outside to the inside. No material known will entirely prevent the passage of heat, but several kinds of material, called non-conductors or insulators, offer a high resistance to its passage. The best insulators appear to be those that contain entrapped air in the greatest number of small spaces.

As to the size, this must depend upon the amount of ice that will be needed. A cubic foot of ice weighs about 57 pounds, so in storing ice it is customary to allow from 40 to 50 cubic feet per ton for the mass of ice, but the quantity that an ice house of a given size will hold depends upon the manner in which the ice is stored. Generally speaking, in the north it will take one and one-half tons for cooling the milk from each cow, and two tons per cow in the South. Allowing 50 cubic feet for a ton of packed ice, ten tons will require about 500 cubic feet of space.

Detailed figures as to capacity, together with directions and building plans, are found in literature issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, which is always ready to answer inquiries on this as on other subjects pertaining to farm practice.

PREVENT MOLD IN BUTTER TUBS

Cause of Much Annoyance and Source of Big Losses.

Receptacle Is Steamed for Thirty Seconds and Inner Surface Paraffined and Rubbed With Salt—Meets Need of Creameries.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The growth of mold on butter in tubs is a cause of great annoyance to dealers and a common source of loss to creameries. Preventive treatments designed to do away with this trouble have been devised by various people, and these have been carefully studied by the United States Department of Agriculture. The treatment that has been found most successful consists in soaking the tubs in cold water, steaming them for 30 seconds with live steam, paraffining the inner surface, and then rubbing over the paraffin with salt. In addition, the liners for the tubs are soaked for 30 minutes in a saturated solution of boiling brine. Under the supervision of the department several million pounds of butter have been packed in tubs and liners treated in this manner and no cases of mold have been reported.

A number of methods of treating tubs and liners have been tried out in comparison with the one just described, but no other has been equally successful. Some tubs and liners were merely soaked in cold water, and in these the mold made an abundant growth. When the tubs and liners were soaked in a saturated solution of cold brine the growth of the mold was somewhat reduced. Butter in tubs that were soaked in water and steamed for 30 seconds with live steam, and lined with liners that had been dipped in a saturated solution of boiling brine, developed very little mold; but results were still better when paraffin and salt were used as described above.

The treatment found most satisfactory is inexpensive and meets the needs of creameries of any type and in any part of the country.

PORCH ROSES

By MILDRED WHITE

(©, 1922, by Western Newspaper Union.)

Betsy Rose glanced covertly at the face of the man who sat near. He was very difficult to understand, this man, with his moods of depression and his evident joy in her companionship.

"If he loves me," thought Betsy Rose, "and surely he must know that I love him, then why is he not happy all the time?" It was a perplexing question. Douglas Barton got up from the hammock to pace restlessly the veranda floor while Betsy went thoughtfully to fasten a drooping Dorothy Perkins rose to the trellis.

"I must go back to the city," he said to her abruptly. Betsy turned her violet eyes upon him in surprise.

"The country wearies you? Aunt Libbie will be sorry. She has enjoyed having you with us."

"And it was kind, indeed, of your aunt to take me in. The country does not weary me. I should like to stay here forever—with you." The last words were a whisper.

"Then," asked Betsy Rose, the pink roses nodding above her brown head, "then why must you go?"

"Do you remember," he asked her gently, "the first day that, driving by chance down this road, I found your house and stopped to ask for a drink of water? It was a hot day, and dusty, and you in cool white stood in this same little porch among the pink roses. That was nearly a year ago. And after a time I came back to ask that I might stay for the night. The moon was out then and there was a stillness and desolation in the air. I thought that I should never forget that sense of desolation, but I have forgotten it; you have taught me. And since that evening in the moonlit porch I came again—and still again. As your roses budded and blossomed so did my love for you, until now it is a perfect flower; a flower my heart would offer you, little Betsy Rose, if I dare, because I feel that you will not be able to understand when I have told you a story. I dare not offer it. So, I must go away."

Douglas Barton leaned back, speaking slowly, absently, as though his thoughts were with a time far away. "There was a woman with me the day we stopped at your door, dear; do you remember? A woman so beautiful that her beauty and fame were known across the continent. She was, indeed, a great singer. When first I saw her and heard her, I was translated into another world—a world of adoration. There I lived with but her face my constant thought for months; or was it years? Time was blotted out after I knew her. And so it was with many; only to me was she kind. I cannot tell why. Perhaps the success of my latest invention, brought with my companionship, a share of power. Maida Masters gloried in power. It was not until I came to know her quite well, that I learned that she had a husband.

"'Joel was my rustic lover,' she would say, 'when I was a rustic maid. We lived in a tiny cot near a pine wood and thought that we were very happy until I went to visit a relative far away and met the great master. The musician discovered my voice. I had been but using it to make merry over household tasks. So Joel brought forth his savings. He had worked hard there among the pine timber and I went away with the relative to study. She was very proud of me and the musician enthusiastic, and I have proved their trust.' So spoke Maida Masters, who had won my heart along with many. 'I will be freed from Joel,' she promised, 'and I will marry you. Joel is reasonable. He will understand how unsuitable now is our union.' And I agreed. So that day we were driving back to the tiny home that Maida had known in her marriage, to beg from her husband Maida's freedom. And the sight of your 'Dorothy Perkins' roses caught her eye.

"'We had,' she said softly, 'just such roses over the doorway of that first little home near the wood. Joel trained them for me that beauty and fragrance, he said, might screen out all the barrenness of life. Oh, Joel was a poet, unconsciously—I must stop here. You shall ask for a drink of water from the little maid at the door.' So ordered Maida and I obeyed. And when she had sat for a time in your little porch, Betsy Rose, this favored woman looked out to my big waiting car with tears on her cheeks, I had not dreamed that tears could find place there, and with a knot of your flowers in her hand she came toward me. 'Douglas,' she said, simply, 'I am going back, back to Joel.'

"So I came back down the long road later alone and your little porch was desolate in the cold moonlight. I felt that I could go no farther, and your aunt was good enough to let me stay. And as I saw you here from day to day, oh, my little Betsy Rose, it seemed that you were the ideal I had taken her to be; the little girl, as she had said, that she used to be, before adulation and love of power had changed her. And in my love there has ever been sorrow, for because of your very ideality I knew that you could never give to a man who would have taken a woman from her husband—your confidence—and yourself. That is why I must go away." Betsy leaned close that she might fasten the rose she held in the man's coat lapel.

"It is pleasanter here now than in the city," she said, smiling, "and Douglas, there need be no desolation [illegible] in the moonlight [illegible]

DEADLY OVERDOSE

"What experience did you have with the roach poison I sold you last week?"

Erickson–Norquist

Miss Alice Erickson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Aug. Erickson of this place, became the bride of Oliver Norquist of North Branch, Minn., Wednesday evening Nov. 29th. The ceremony took place at the Norwegian Lutheran parsonage at Duluth, Rev. Stenberg officiating. After the ceremony a reception was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Eigel at Superior, Wis.

The bride was attired in a dark blue velour suit trimmed in fur, with hat to match. She carried a large boquet of bridal roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

The bridesmaid was Miss Nannie Erickson, sister of the bride, who was attired in a black sateen dress with hat to match. The groom was attended by Mr. Clyde Neal of Superior.

The out of town guests present were:—Mr. and Mrs. George Larson of Minneapolis, Mr. and Mrs. A. Norquist of North Branch, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Shaultz of St. Paul, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Rydell of Duluth, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Haidsecher of Foxboro, Wis.

Covers were laid for thirty-five guests.

The bridal pair were recipients of many handsome and useful gifts from their numerous friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Norquist left Thanksgiving evening for Virginia, Minn., where the groom is engaged in the drug business, and where they will make their home. (Contributed)

Many St. Hilaire friends join in extending congratulations and best wishes for a happy future to Mr. and Mrs. Norquist.

A Cordial Welcome to All.

Winter maintenance of the state trunk highway system especially in Northern Minnesota, was halted a short time ago' by orders from the state department. Funds at desposal of the highway department are not enough to permit keeping the roads open except in cases of light snows.

After spending a month at the home of his sister, Mrs. J. H. Johnson at Malta, Mont., August Berglund returned home yesterday.

State Saves Money

Winter work on Minnesota trunk highways in many parts of the state will be started soon under contracts awarded recently at a saving of nearly one-fifth from engineer's estimate.

"Figures compare favorably with those on winter work last year, and give the state nearly five dollars worth of improvements for every four dollars used" says Commissioner Babcock.

A Real Blizzard

A genuine old time blizzard hit this section of the country Monday morning and continued "blizzing" all day. A considerable amount of snow fell which was drifted quite badly by the high wind. Excavation work will have to be done in some places about town before the walks will be located again.

Basketball Friday

The high school and city basketball teams will lock horns Friday evening in their second game this season. The high school warriors have had considerable practice since the last game, and they are out to win Friday. Be sure to attend.

Summons was served on the village council recently to defend an action started by Emil Just to enforce removal of some fencing which he claims obstructs traffic on Fourth Street near the old creamery.

After spending a month at the Warren hospital where she underwent an operation, Mrs. John Maakrud returned home last night.

Mike Highland and family moved Saturday from the Peterson house to the Goergen residence which they bought recently.

Martin McAndreas was called Saturday to Thief River by serious illness of his father.

Miss Rose Gunstad, who teaches at Leonard, spent Thanksgiving at home on the farm east of town.

Would Divert Stream

A proposition much discussed before the war, that of diverting the course of the gulf stream and turning the arctic current out in the mid ocean, has lately been revived, and was recently called to attention of President Harding. Eminent engineers claim that by building a peninsula off the coast of Labrador the gulf stream can be swung along the Atlantic coast of this country which would serve to change the climate to rival that of sunny California.

SOVIET ENVOY BACKS TURKEY

Asks that Bosphorus and Dardanelles be open to Turk Warships Only.

EQUALITY DEMANDED

Says Waters Belong to Turks and Should Be Used Only by Turks Whether in Peace or War.

Lausanne—The fundamental position of Russia on the question of the status to be given the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora and the Straits of Dardanelles was outlined by Foreign Minister Tchitcherin, who read a prepared statement in French, of which the following official summary was given out:

"The Russian delegation will strive to attain equality of the positions and rights of Russia and her allies—the Ukraine and Georgia—with the positions and rights of the other powers; and will strive to safeguard the peace and security of Russian territories and liberty of their economic relations with the other powers."

Want Durable Settlement.

M. Tchitcherin contended that permanent liberty of the commercial navigation and pacific maritime communications in the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora, and the Dardanelles, must be assured in the most absolute manner and without restrictions. He said:

"Maintenance of peace on the Black sea and the security of its coasts, peace in the Near East and the security of Constantinople should be guaranteed in a durable manner. This means that the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, in time of peace, as in time of war, ought to be constantly closed to the warships and armed vessels, as well as the military airplanes of all countries except Turkey. Only in this way can liberty of peaceful navigation in these waters be effectually guaranteed.

Belong to Turkey, He Says.

M. Tchitcherin said that the Russian government started with the elementary fact that the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles belong to Turkey, and that the Turkish people are entitled to full sovereignty over their territory and waters.

M. Tchitcherin said Turkey could effectively defend her waters against attack by possessing the right to fortify and arm her coasts, by possessing a fleet of warships, and by utilizing for her defense every technical means of modern warfare.

M. Tchitcherin then passed to what was interpreted as an allusion to England. He said:

"Closing the straits to other warships conforms to the principle of equality between states. Throwing them open will give a preponderating position to the strongest maritime power."

3 BILLION ASKED FOR BUDGET

Deficit for 1922 Almost $274,000,000 Over Income.

Washington—Appropriations aggregating $3,078,940,331 for the fiscal year beginning next July 1 were proposed to congress by President Harding in the second annual federal budget. This is exclusive of the postal service and compares with actual appropriations for this fiscal year totalling $3,274,238,690.

Government expenditures for the coming fiscal year, also exclusive of the postal service, were estimated at $3,180,843,234, as compared with an estimate of $3,703,801,671 for this fiscal year and an actual outlay of $3,795,302,499 for the fiscal year ended last June 30.

Hopes for Excess.

The total federal revenue for 1924 was reckoned at $3,361,812,359, or an excess of $180,969,125 over projected expenditures. The estimated revenue for this fiscal year was $3,429,862,959, or $273,938,712 less than the expected outlay.

Mr. Harding said, however, that it was hoped to eliminate this deficit before the end of the year, adding that if this hope were not realized the expected surplus for 1924 would give a margin to take care of a deficit.

In his message accompanying the detailed budget, the president frankly told congress that whether the country could look forward to any further material reduction in federal expenditures and taxes in future years depended largely upon whether there was a curtailment of expansion of federal aid in lines of research, improvement and development.

Greek Prince Is Exiled.

Athens—Prince Andrew, brother of former King Constantine, has been sentenced by a military court to banishment for life and deprivation of his rank. He will not suffer actual degradation. The judgment of the court finds that Prince Andrew refused to obey orders in the presence of the enemy and moved his army corps in another direction, but considers that in view of his lack of experience in commanding masses of fighting troops application of the penalties provided by law would not be justifiable.

Henry Junge

Henry Junge of New York has been in Washington arranging the season of musicale at the White House. Both the President and Mrs. Harding are lovers of music, and it is hoped Mrs. Harding will be so far recovered by February that the series of musicales can begin that month.

TO GET RUM VIOLATORS

Federal Attorneys Urged to Push All Pending Rum Cases.

Washington—Attention of federal authorities throughout the country has been officially called to the necessity of co-operating closely with prohibition enforcement agencies with a view to curbing the extensive violations of the status.

Federal attorneys have been instructed to push all pending liquor cases and to suggest when proper the imposition of the heaviest penalties on conviction. Their attention was specifically called to reports that some cereal beverage manufacturers were marketing a product of illegal alcoholic content.

DRAFT LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Price Fixing as Financial Stabilizer in Present Emergency Urged.

Minneapolis—Legislation which will be proposed this winter for the welfare of Minnesota farmers was outlined by Representative R. A. Wilkinson of Lake Elmo, chairman of a committee of 10 named by Speaker W. I. Nolan to work out an "agricultural program" for the coming session of the state legislature.

The program of state legislation favored by Colonel Wilkinson for this winter, and to be laid before his committee when it meets, Dec. 12, includes the following:

Broader powers for the commissioner of agriculture in the control of marketing.

Slight changes in the co-operative laws to make them workable.

Rural credits legislation carrying out the state amendment just approved at the polls.

Measures to equalize tax burdens, declared to rest onerously on the farmer.

Rigid economy in state expenditures.

BRITAIN HALTS NAVY JUNKING

Secretary Tells House America Has Not Scrapped Enough Ships.

London—Great Britain will scrap no more warships under the Washington disarmament treaty until the other nations have taken action and have scrapped their quota, according to the assurance given a questioner in the House of Commons by Eires Monsell, financial secretary to the Admiralty.

Asked who has ratified the treaty Commissioner Monsell replied:

"The Treaty of Washington has been ratified by the United States, Japan and this country but not yet by France, or Italy."

Boiler Explodes, Two Die.

Dayton, Ohio—One man was killed and two hurt, one probably fatally, when the boiler of the locomotive hauling an extra freight train on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad exploded early today near Kilkare Park.

TOO MANY MEN NOW FARMING

Statistician Declares Agriculture Overmanned One-Fifth in St. Paul Speech.

St. Paul—Putting reverse English on the popular cry of "Back to the Soil," Roger W. Babson declared in St. Paul that there are too many men engaged in agriculture already and what the industry needs most is to lose about 20 per cent of its farmers.

In declaring there were too many farmers, Mr. Babson also asserted that the second great need of agriculture is to place the industry on a truly business like basis.

"Agriculture does not need more legislation to increase its credit and to get it far deeper into debt," he said. "This, together with the endeavor to hold up the prices of farm products, only attracts more men to the farming industry and there are too many of them now. The proper way for the government to help the farmer would be to say, 'here about 20 per cent of you fellows should get into some other trade or some other line of business and create some sort of an agency to make it possible for them to do so."

SPEED FARM AID LEGISLATION

Financial Relief Is Proposed Through Federal Loan Board.

Washington—The administration's new program for immediate financial relief to farmers was formulated and practically perfected at a conference between President Harding, Secretary Wallace and 12 Republican senators, headed by Senator Watson of Indiana. It will be put before Congress at once and pressed with the full force of the administration.

Broadly, the plan brings together in one administration measure the approved portions of various relief measures already pending in Congress, and contains also provisions to make the intended relief available to the small farmer as well as to the large cattle raisers and grain growers.

The program contemplates creating a division in the Federal farm banks to deal specifically with production and marketing credits, thus supplying a means of discount to the farmer on longer time notes than are eligible to discount by the Federal reserve banks. Credits to the maximum period of three years are to be provided where the turn over covers that period.

POPE TO HALT EXECUTIONS

Vatican Will Make Direct Protest in Behalf of Former Ministers.

Rome—The Vatican is to make a direct protest to the Greek government against the execution of the former Greek ministers. Pope Pius has ordered the papal nuncio at Berne to make representations to Eliptherios Venizelos of the Greek delegation at Lausanne against further executions of former public officials in Greece.

Athens reports the following official statement was issued:

"General Dousmanis, former chief of the general staff, and General Valettas, former chief of staff in Asia Minor, have been arrested, and a warrant has been issued for the arrest of General Papoulas, former commander in chief of the army in Asia Minor.

BUILDING MUNITIONS PLANTS

Berlin Declared Planning Erection of Munition Plants in Russia.

London—The Germans are actively planning a war of revenge, chiefly against France, for which purpose they have concluded a secret military agreement with Russia—this is the main point of "a memorandum by a person in close touch with the best informed German circles in Berlin and Munich," communicated to the Daily Mail, which displays it under big headlines.

The paper claims to have made exhaustive inquiries in Germany, London and Paris into the memorandum's accuracy, with the result, the Mail says, that it has been very largely supported thereby.

HARDING IN '24, SAYS HOOVER

Member of Cabinet Calls Him Obvious Republican Choice.

Palo Alto, Calif.—The Republican presidential candidate in 1924 "obviously will be Warren G. Harding," Herbert C. Hoover, secretary of commerce, said in an interview at his home here.

"Moreover, by that time (1924)," Mr. Hoover said, "the public will be highly appreciative of the sanity and progressive character of the policies that will have brought this country through the reconstruction period."

TAFT WITNESS IN DAUGHERTY CASE

Wickersham, Gompers Also Called in Case Against Attorney General.

Washington—Attorney General Daugherty answering the charges of Representative Keller, expressed his conviction that "this extraordinary proceeding is inspred more by a desire to protect those charged and those who will be charged with violating the law, than to aid the Department of Justice in prosecution of grafters, profiteers and those who have defrauded their government during the emergency of war."

Washington—Chief Justice Taft was named in a statement to the House Judiciary committee by Representative Keller, Republican, Minnesota, as a witness to be called in support of his demand for the impeachment of Attorney General Daugherty.

The chief justice was desired to testify, in connection with his charge, formally filed, that Attorney General Daugherty had appointed "untrustworthy, corrupt and dangerous men" to high office, knowing at the time that they were men of such character.

George W. Wickersham, former attorney general; Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and Guy Oyster, Mr. Gompers' secretary, also were mentioned by Mr. Keller as other witnesses he would ask.

L'FOLLETTE BLOC ORGANIZED

No Third Party Movement Is Contemplated, Conferees Announce.

Washington — Another unofficial "bloc" in Congress was born when "progressives". — Republicans and Democrats called into session by Senator La Follette, Republican, Wisconsin, and Representative Huddleston, Democrat, Alabama—formed a group for promotion of "progressive" legislation during the present and the next Congress.

About 40 senators, representatives and members-elcet, meeting behind closed doors in the Senate agriculture committee room adopted resolutions unanimously declaring their purpose to "drive special privilege out of control of the government" and outlining a general program of liberal legislation.

Politics were declared to be banned and it was announced officially that no third party movement was contemplated. Republicans, Democrats and Farmer-Laborites joined in the conference, which was declared to be bipartisan and legislative, but not political.

AWARDED $1,000 IN SUIT

Inefficient Service, Resulting in Loss to Plaintiff Charged.

Minneapolis—A verdict of $1,000 against the Northwestern Bell Telephone company, as damages growing out of alleged inefficiency of telephone service, was awarded to George S. Grimes, by a jury in district court.

The suit was the first of its kind ever brought in the United States. In the action Mr. Grimes sought $3,000 for loss of time due to telephone service difficulties from July 31, 1917, to July 31, 1918, and from July 31, 1919, to July 31, 1920.

The jury consisted of seven women and five men. They deliberated for three hours—including their lunch period—over questions submitted to them by Judge Dickinson.

YANKS TO STAY ON RHINE

Administration Fears Withdrawal Would be Wrongly Interpreted.

Washington — The administration was said by a White House spokesman to be in harmony with the view of those who believe the American troops on the Rhine should be withdrawn, but it was explained that this step had not been taken because of possible interpretations which might be given it in reference to the attitude of the American government in world affairs when such far-reaching and vital questions are uppermost in Europe.

TRICKERY CAUSED DOWNFALL

Proceedings of Angora Assembly Declared of 'Questionable Character.'

Montevideo—The trial of Elsie Salisbury for the killing of her sweetheart, Oscar Erickson, in the Milwaukee railroad offices here last April began this week.

Minneapolis—William Kenney, bandit leader, who grimly refused to "peach on his pals" even though he knew his own end was near, died in the General hospital.

Duluth—Deputy collectors of the internal revenue office began delivery of 200 tax warrants on Duluthians who have failed to pay their September income tax assessments.

Duluth—Duluth police have been notified by Marquette (Michigan) authorities to be on the lookout for the 13 convicts who escaped from the Michigan state prison Sunday.

Minneapolis—Arthur Sorenson, who married a St. Paul girl and bought an automobile with a "dividend check" for $1,600 was arrested in Minneapolis on a charge of forgery.

Albert Lea—His clothing ignited when a two-gallon can of gasoline exploded, Hans Peter Jensen, blacksmith of Clarks Grove is in a hospital here at the point of death.

Winona—Elmer Otis, living near Rushford, died on his way to a local hospital from injuries suffered when he was crushed between a threshing machine and a separator which he was uncoupling.

Bemidji—Having completed the longest sawing season in the history of the plant which has been operating here for the past 20 years the plant of the Crookston Lumber company has closed down for the winter.

Moorhead—Right of S. O. Tang, recently elected superintendent of Clay county schools to hold office, will be tried out in courts of the county following filing of a contest by J. H. Huitzel of Hawley, his opponent.

Winona—Exactly one week after Edmund Herring, 8 years old, was injured by a freight train near his home here, his brother, Florian, 11 years old, suffered a broken arm when he jumped off an embankment here.

Marshall—Robbers made an unsuccessful attempt to break into the vault of the State Bank of Florence. Considerable damage was done to the building and vault, but the loot obtained by the robbers was small.

Brainerd—Slippery paving caused an automobile to leave the road between Deerwood and Crosby breaking a guardrail and running into a large tree. Henry Johnson of Tenstrike, Minn., is probably fatally injured.

Luverne—While she was attending the funeral of her husband, in this city, thieves raided the chicken yard of Mrs. Z. D. Snook on the farm in Magnolia township, and carried off 350 chickens from the valuable flock.

Duluth — Dutchland Aggie Tiny Prince II, the grand champion bull of the National Dairy exposition, was sold to George P. Grout by John B. Irwin of Richfield station, Minneapolis. The price was not made public.

Minneapolis—Earl Martineau, famous University of Minnesota halfback, undoubtedly will be the choice of his mates for the captaincy of the 1923 Gopher eleven when the lettermen hold their annual meeting next week.

Hibbing—The first case of its kind ever tried in northern Minnesota, whereby a clergyman attempted to collect for back salary was settled in district court. Rev. Father Schumak, former priest of the Russian Orthodox church in Chisholm, sued for $315.

Minneapolis—Judge Page Morris, entered into the last week's session of United States district court, with five liquor cases remaining on the Minneapolis calendar for trial. During the present term of Federal court Judge Morris has disposed of 250 liquor cases.

Red Wing—An outdoor picnic, including a river trip, in California would not be any stunt to mention, but in Minnesota at the end of November is something of a novelty. A party of Red Wing people participated in such a picnic, going up river by launch to the summer home of a Red Wing resident, in almost summer weather, and indulging in a picnic supper.

Hibbing—Starting with a mere handful of unemployed, a procession which gathered recruits as it progressed until several hundred men were in line, paraded the streets of the downtown district of Hibbing, in silent protest against the action of the village council in refusing to vacate streets and alleys in that section of old Hibbing sold to mining interests two years ago.

Minneapolis—All claims for refunds or credits on 1917 federal taxes must be made before March 1, 1923, according to Harry Harper, tax consultant, who returned to Minneapolis, from two weeks of conference with the bureau of internal revenue in Washington.

Crookston—The body of Anton L. Bakken, a farmer, who disappeared from his home, 15 miles southeast of Crookston was found in a grove one mile from his home. The coroner said Bakken had shot himself through the chest. Worry over a farm debt was blamed.

The Minnesota Farm

Pertinent Pointers for Practical Farmers

Prepared by the Agricultural Department, University of Minnesota

A SILO ON EVERY FARM IN MINNESOTA

Corn as Silage Makes 854 Lbs. Nutrients Per Acre.

A silo on every farm in Minnesota would mean a great saving of feed and in feeding values. From 60 to 65 per cent of the feeding value of corn is in the grain; the rest is in the forage. Staff men of the division of agricultural education at University Farm say that one acre will produce 50 bushels of corn containing 2,237 pounds of digestible nutrients, or ten tons of silage containing 3,360 pounds of digestible nutrients. If 8 per cent be lost in the silo, there will still be left 3,091 pounds of high nutritive matter.

"This means that 854 pounds of digestible nutrients per acre are saved by ensiling the corn crop," say the staff men of the divison. "This saving will keep a thousand pound animal 100 days and is about equal to one ton of timothy hay. There is less loss in fermentation than when cured by dry fodder."

A good silo saves room because a ton of silage occupies only 50 cubic feet of space, while a ton of hay fills 400 cubic feet. It also saves labor and provides a summer feed to take the place of or supplement soilage crop or pastures. The desirability of silage as a feed is no longer questioned. It is succulent and palatable and helps to keep the animal in prime condition. One distinctive feature is that it is handled and consumed without waste.

Silos should be of strong construction. As the silage settles it exerts great pressure upon the walls. Interior walls of silos should be smooth. If they are rough, air spaces will be left as the material settles and the silage will become moldy. Moisture must be kept in and air out. This means that the walls must be water and air tight. Experience has shown that the round silos are stronger, more economical of space, and keep the silage better.

The silo should be as frost resistant as possible. Place the silo on the south side of other buildings. The location has more to do with frost than the material.

NEW CHIEF IN HOME ECONOMICS.

The home economics division of the Minnesota College of Agriculture will have a new chief January 1 in the person of Miss Wylle B. McNeal, who was chosen by the university board of regents to succeed Miss Mildred Weigley, now Mrs. H. C. Wood, who resigned several months ago. Miss McNeal was graduated from the Western Kentucky State Normal School in 1908, and received the degree of B. S. from the University of Chicago in 1915, and the degree of M. A. from Columbia University in 1919. Since 1919 she has been state supervisor of home economics with the Minnesota state department of education.

MISS WYLLE B. McNEAL.

As soon as cold weather has destroyed the green vegetation upon which mice and rabbits feed, they will be looking elsewhere for succulent food. Young fruit trees are in danger, after these pests have once tasted the juicy bark. One rabbit can girdle a dozen trees in a day unless precautions are taken to prevent it. Rabbits attack trees that are from one to six years old; mice injure trees of any age. It is better and cheaper to protect the tree trunks this fall than to try to save girdled trees next spring [illegible]

BUTTERFAT YIELD PROFITABLE STATISTICS SHOW

Poor Milker Takes All Profits From Dairying as Business.

The farm management division at University Farm has received a letter from a Minnesota farmer who contends that butterfat prices have declined to a point where dairying is no longer the profitable industry commonly portrayed by agricultural writers and newspaper editors of the day. He submits a table of receipts and expenses for the current year which shows that the return per hour of man labor in caring for the dairy was only 11½ cents an hour. His creamery has averaged 39 cents per pound for butterfat during a year back.

This particular farmer wants to be "shown." In a personal letter to Prof. Geo. A. Pond, co-author with William L. Cavert of Special Bulletin No. 64 entitled, "The Dairy Cow as a Market for Labor," he asks, "Where is the silver lining to the cloud?"

In his reply Professor Pond submits two statements of dairy costs on a cow basis, the figures for which were gathered in the cost of production studies by university men on two neighboring farms in Steele county in 1921. Farm No. 1, where the dairy cows averaged 233½ pounds of butterfat, gave returns of 52 cents per hour of man labor. On farm No. 2, where the average butterfat production was as low as 109 pounds, the return per hour of man labor was only 11 cents.

Calling attention to the much larger return per hour from the high producing cow, Professor Pond says: "It would seem to me that this is the 'silver lining' to the cloud that you see hanging over the dairy enterprise. I do not believe that the common average cow ever has paid good wages for the time spent on her for any considerable length of time, and I doubt if she ever will. The rewards of business go largely to the more efficient producer and dairying is no exception."

Professor Pond holds that the dairy business is about as profitable right now as it has been at any time for the last ten years. Cost accounting investigations, he says, have very uniformly shown that the dairy business on the average farm has never been the source of large profits.

"If communities have continued to maintain evidence of prosperity in spite of low returns from the dairy," he says, "it is because the dairy man has profited even on a low return per hour for his labor for the reason that much of that labor is performed at a time when he has no other work to do.

"The dairyman may also be accepting less than the market rate of interest on his investment and less than the market price for feed. He may be pasturing his cattle on rough land that would otherwise have no value. It is these facts that have enabled him to enjoy a fair income even though the cost accountant has told him that he is producing at a loss."

BETTER CREAM, BETTER PRICE.

Reports from 50 Minnesota co-operative creameries for September showed a difference of 15 cents a pound in prices paid the farmers by the creameries for butterfat. This was partly due to the difference in the volume of business transacted, but chiefly on account of the difference in price received by the creameries for butter, this difference amounting to eight and a fraction cents per pound.

"The sad part of this loss in the price of butterfat is that it is entirely unnecessary," says A. J. McGuire in the September report as published by the agricultural extension service of the university. "There is no difference in the value of butterfat for buttermaking when it is produced by the cows. The loss in quality takes place in the handling of the milk and cream on the farm, in the delay before it is delivered to the creamery and in the workmanship in the creamery. Milk should be run through a clean separator, the cream cooled immediately after separating and kept where the air is pure and free from odors until it is delivered to the creamery.

"For the highest quality butter, cream must be delivered every other day. This can be done by co-operation between a number of farmers in hauling their cream. The price is constantly widening between good and poor butter. The greatest danger to the success of co-operative creameries is the manufacture of low grade butter."

American Farm Bureau

J. S. EDWARDS, PRESIDENT

A. R. RULE, GENERAL MANAGER

These are the officers of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, Inc., the new grower-owned and controlled distributing organization which opens in New York City next January.

FARMERS ASKING FOR INCREASE ON LOANS

Limit of $10,000 Now Existing Is Too Low to Meet Obligations at First of Year.

Letters and resolutions from farm organizations, petitions bearing the names of every farmer in a county, and scores of personal letters from farmers in all sections of the country are pouring into the office of the American Farm Bureau Federation asking that the $10,000 limit existing on loans made farmers through the Federal Farm Loan banks be raised to $25,000.

Farmers who have large farms, they say, and who must have larger amounts to meet their mortgages, are unable to get them through the Federal Farm Loan banks. In each case the letters ask for an immediate amendment to the federal farm loan act in order to meet obligations the first of the year at which time many farm mortgages fall due.

An accurate view of the attitude of the county may be obtained by the following extract of communications which are typical of the sentiment:

"Agriculture is the nation's basic industry. Were it not for the present deplorable condition of agriculture it would seem even more than superfluous to state so patent a fact. Yet in the very face of the report of January 21, 1922, of the Department of Agriculture to the effect that the average value per acre of ten crops, constituting nine-tenths of this nation's crop production, dropped from $35.76 to $14.48, or 60 per cent, during 1919-21, a decline unparalleled within the scope of records of that department, dating back to 1866, we see agriculture prevented not only a just consideration as to credit, but denied as well a voice in the councils of credit. This, too, in the face of the fact that we farmers furnish from 56 to 65 per cent of the nation's credit. Such conditions are contrary to the laws of justice and equity, and adverse to the truer business interests of the land."—Frank Nelson, Madison county, Ohio.

If Farming Is to Live.

"The maximum of $10,000 for federal farm loans must be increased absolutely if farming is to live. Around here farmers are being closed out by the interests because of lack of funds. With $20,000 invested in my own farm, I cannot hold out much longer. I have two mortgages and they come due in different years and I am charged 8 per cent by local bankers to renew. North of here I hear it is 5 per cent. Just imagine me paying 8 per cent on $14,000 or $420 for a paper the size of this sheet, and to a shark. Get a raise. We must have it."—W. J. Cody, Brown county, South Dakota.

Wrongful Discrimination.

"We are among the no-doubt numerous applicants for a loan in excess of the $10,000 limit. We beg to register [illegible] fair, inconsistent and wrongful discrimination towards owners of farms who are in need of larger loans. It is the custom among money-loaning institutions to make loans on a given number of acres with or without improvements, basing the size of the loan upon, usually, 50 per cent of a fair valuation of the property securing it. An owner of 100 acres valued at $200 per acre can obtain the present restricted loan of $10,000, but an owner having 160 acres at $200 cannot get the same proportionate loan of $16,000 and is left helpless or in jeopardy when wishing to take up a 10 per cent interest-bearing mortgage or having to pay one under threat that is due of, say, $12,000; this is absolutely unfair discrimination against owners of larger acreage or property of larger valuation."—Lange Bros., Eddy county, New Mexico.

Would Help a Borrower.

"I have a loan of $10,000 from the Federal Land bank on 320 acres. As this is not enough to clear up my indebtedness and the federal loan having first mortgage, it makes it hard to place another mortgage. An increase in the limit of farm loan as advocated by the farm bureau would be a great help to me and a number of other farmers of my acquaintance."—Levi Stephens, Canyon county, Idaho.

"At their regular October meeting, the Pocahontas county farm bureau endorsed the action of the American Farm Bureau Federation in asking congress to raise the limit of federal land loans from $10,000 to $25,000, or to have that limit removed entirely. This motion was carried unanimously. It is the general feeling in this country that some change should be made in the present federal farm loan policy, and we feel that the suggested change would be a great improvement. If the maximum loan for federal loan land banks would be increased so as to meet the average Iowa land owner's needs, it would be a great benefit to the borrower, not only from the standpoint of an increased loan from that source but as a means of stabilizing interest rates on farm loans. The board of directors of the Pocahontas county farm bureau approve of the steps which you, as president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, have taken in this matter and urge that you continue in your work to bring influence to bear on congress for the amendment of this act."—A. H. Richey, President, Pocahontas County (Iowa) Farm Bureau.

Present Form Valueless.

"I am writing you at this time asking you to use your best efforts with congress in an effort to have the federal farm loan act amended raising the maximum loan from $10,000 to $25,000. I believe that a movement of this kind will meet with the approval of practically every member of farm organizations. Personally I feel that the farm loan system in its present form is of little or no value to me. I expect to make a renewal loan some time the first of next year and would like to change to the federal farm loan system. But unless this amendment is made I will be unable to do so."—Robert [illegible]

CHANGES IN BEEF PRODUCTION IN UNITED STATES SINCE 1850

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Beef production in the United States has undergone marked changes since 1850, and chief among them is the difference in age to which animals destined for slaughter are kept on the farms. This is one of the many phases of the industry discussed in the 1921 Yearbook article, Our Beef Supply, prepared by live stock specialists and economists in the Department of Agriculture. This change is discussed in connection with variations in the demands of consumers and the per capita consumption of beef.

With a larger proportion of beef cows kept, and with cattle slaughtered at an earlier age, it is now possible to raise more beef each year than when there were more cattle in the country than at present. However, the system of using younger cattle for beef involves the use of more harvested feed per 100 pounds of beef produced, since a larger proportion of the gains in weight are made in the feed lot than was formerly the case when steers were carried four or five seasons on grass.

Situation Not Serious.

While the total number of cattle in the country has decreased in recent years, the situation is not as serious as might appear, since the number of cattle is greater now than in any year from 1896 to 1917. The census figures for 1900 and 1920 show that there has been an increase in the percentages of beef calves, heifers, cows and bulls, and a decrease in the percentage of steers, especially aged steers. The number of cattle in the country increased 10,200,000 from 1914 to 1919. During the last three years there has been a decrease of 2,000,000 head, but the greater proportion of cows at present makes it possible to grow more beef, especially if more of the calves, instead of being slaughtered, are fed out as yearlings.

That the country can readily respond to a quickened demand for beef was demonstrated during the war when production was so stimulated that during 1917 and 1918 combined more than 1,000,000,000 pounds of beef were exported, which was 7 per cent of our production and 22 per cent of the exports of the world during that period. Since about 1905 South America and Australia have been the chief sources of surplus beef.

Americans are eating less beef per capita than formerly, but the figures show that when demand and prices provide sufficient stimulus the supply can be increased at a surprisingly rapid rate. The consumption of beef and veal in the United States decreased from 87 pounds per person in 1907 to 60 pounds in 1915, a net variation of 27 pounds. Between the periods of 1907 to 1910 and 1911 to 1921 there has been a decrease in consumption amounting to approximately 20 per cent.

The article contains interesting information on the variations in demand for different kinds of beef in various cities and in the different sections of the country. High-class hotels in the larger cities want prime, fat and finished beef, while the average housewife wants beef involving less waste. In warm weather the principal demand is for steak and chops, while the winter trade demands more roasts and boiling beef. The orthodox Jewish trade uses only the forequarters, while Gentiles, as a rule, prefer hindquarter beef.

Beef Consumed in East.

A survey made in 1920 showed that at that time nearly 32 per cent of the beef was consumed in the North Atlantic states, which comprises New England, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The next largest amount, or 24 per cent, was consumed in the East-North-Central division. In other words, more than 55 per cent of the total consumption of beef and veal occurred in the territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio river and Maryland. The smallest consumption occurred in the South Atlantic division, comprising the states of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Per capita consumption varied from 83 pounds in the western division to 39 in the South Central. The North Atlantic division, which was first in total consumption, was second in per capita consumption.

This survey of the beef-cattle situation, which includes, in addition to the discussion of consumption and present trend, information on various factors of production and marketing, leads to the conclusion that the period of liquidation is over, and that when industrial conditions and retail prices permit a normal consumption of beef, cattle producers should be prosperous again.

MEATSCRAP AID FOR LAYERS

Kentucky Experiment Station Obtains Big Increase in Production of Eggs.

For three years the Kentucky experiment station has been studying the effect of feeding various amounts of meatscraps on the egg production of white Wyandottes. The average annual egg production when 5 per cent of the ration consisted of scraps was 109.9 eggs; when it consisted of 15 per cent, 134.5 eggs; and when 20 per cent of scraps were fed, 141.6 eggs.

From the results the station concludes that the mash mixture should contain at least 20 per cent meatscrap to secure maximum production.

GRADING PAYS IN SHIPPING CROPS

Advantage of Standardization Is No Longer a Theory.

Shippers' and Producers' Organizations Which Have Adopted Federal Grades for Fruits and Vegetables Are Pleased.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"The advantage of standardization is no longer a theory but an accomplished fact. Our selling price was from 15 to 50 cents per bushel higher than the other houses in this district, and the greatest advantages of a standard grade and pack will, of course, be secured in coming seasons, provided we maintain our standards."

This is but one of the many letters being received by the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture, from producers' and shippers' organizations which have adopted federal grades for fruits and vegetables. The letter is from a co-operative peach shippers' organization in Ohio.

"We packed out our entire crop on the United States grades," wrote the president of the organization. "All our members are well pleased and, best of all, determined to begin in their own orchards at once to try to produce fruit of higher and better quality. We see no point at which the standards recommended by your department for peaches are not thoroughly practical, and another year we will doubtless eliminate the old markings entirely."

Best House for Poultry.

Makeshift poultry houses may partly answer, but for lasting economy and efficiency a good poultry house, properly equipped, is best.

Remember that plowing done now will not have to be done later when other work is pressing.

Electrical Fixtures

We handle a variety of electrical globes and fixtures. Anything not in stock can be procured in short order. Electric irons in all well known makes, also other appliances.

Get a few electric lamps and a couple fuse plugs to have on hand in case of emergency. The cost is small, and the convenience is great.

Extra iron cord, lamp cord in both silk and cotton cover, also black insulated wire on hand.

FOR HEALTH

What Do You Think About This?

In connection with the opening of the fifteenth annual sale of Christmas Seals, which starts November 22, officials of the Minnesota Public Health Association call our attention to the enormous drop in death rate from tuberculosis. Had the death rate of ten years ago continued, 972 people who are now living would have died this year from tuberculosis. The statement follows:

The death rate in 1921 from tuberculosis was lower than it has ever been in the history of the state. In 1911, 119 people out of every 100,000 in the state died of the disease. In 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died of tuberculosis. As compared with 1911, ten years ago, Minnesota is saving 972 lives a year.

In 1920, 90 people out of every 100,000 and in 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died, a saving in 1921 as compared with 1920 of 276 lives.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, interest, which became due and payable on the 2nd day of October, 1921, and default having been made in the payment of the further sum of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, interest, which became due and payable on the 2nd day of October, 1922, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jack Down, a widower, mortgagor, to Maude G. Mabey, mortgagee, bearing date the 2nd day of October, 1920, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 2nd day of October, 1920, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 62 of Mortgages, on Page 520, and,

Whereas, The said Maude G. Mabey, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and,

Whereas, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Four Hundred Four and 90-100, ($404.90) Dollars, and,

Whereas, The said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, except that an action at law has been heretofore instituted in the Municipal Court of the City of Thief River Falls, in the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, by said mortgagee against said mortgagor, to recover the interest on said mortgage debt that became due and payable thereon on the 2nd day of October, 1921, and on the 2nd day of October, 1922, in which said action the said mortgagee is the plaintiff and the said mortgagor is the defendant, and that judgment was duly rendered in said action in said Court in favor of said plaintiff, (mortgagee) and against said defendant, (mortgagor) together with the costs and disbursements of said action, on the 24th day of October, 1922, and that a transcript of said judgment was thereafter and on said day, duly filed and docketed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of said Pennington County and that an execution upon said judgment was thereafter duly issued out of said District Court upon said judgment, directed to the Sheriff of said Pennington County, in which said County, said mortgagor (the defendant and judgment debtor in said action) now resides and has resided continuously during all the time since said mortgage was executed and delivered as aforesaid, and that the Sheriff of said Pennington County, duly returned said execution wholly unsatisfied and filed the same in the office of the Clerk of said District Court of said Pennington County prior to the date of this notice;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

Government Lots Three (3) and Four (4) and the East One-half (E½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) in Section Eighteen (18) in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty (40) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing 159.70 acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof, in Pennington County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 20th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $404.90, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Twenty-five Dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

NEW SOURCE OF PAPER PULP

East African Bamboo, of Which Immense Supplies Are Available, Said to Answer Purpose.

East African bamboo, one of the latest sources from which it has been found that paper pulp may be obtained, grows on the plateaus and mountains of the colony of Kenya, at an altitude of 7,500 to 11,000 feet. These forests cover large areas, in some cases many square miles in extent. The largest of these are located in the Kikuyu and Mau escarpments, the Aberdare mountains, the slopes of Mount Kenya and Mount Elgon.

The distance of these forests from the railroads is one of the difficulties which must be overcome, if they are to be thoroughly developed, the nearest of them being three miles from transportation facilities. They are well supplied, however, by many streams of sufficient depth and power to float logs down to central points.

Native labor is plentiful, but because of the high altitude at which the forests are located the Africans who live in the warmer parts of the country have difficulty in acclimating themselves to the cooler temperature. Once accustomed to the change of climate, however, the natives do not object to working in the cold districts. For Europeans, of course, the climate is ideal.

—11—

"Where are you going?" Sexton panted, endeavoring to keep beside him. "Have you anything planned out?"

"Not very much; Milwaukee avenue first. There is sure to be an all-night restaurant somewhere in sight. Telephone for a taxi, don't dare to risk a street car, we both look too tough."

"Suppose they will follow us?"

"Hardly; they will have no idea which way we went, or how long we'll have been gone. Once we turn off this street, we'll be safe enough."

It was considerably past midnight when the two men finally reached the University club; they had lunched at an all-night restaurant, washed and made themselves as presentable as possible, yet were hardly recognizable as they entered the club lobby. Neither possessed a hat; Sexton was in his shirt sleeves, while West's coat clung to him in rags. Without waiting to explain anything to the servant in charge, except to state briefly that Sexton would be his guest for the night, the captain hurried into the waiting elevator, and accompanied by his companion, ascended to his apartment above.

The reaction from the excitement of the evening left Sexton dull and drowsy once he felt secure from any possible danger. His only desire was to lie quiet, and forget. Stretched out on a comfortable lounge, he fell asleep almost instantly, making no effort even to remove his clothes. West was of a different temperament, his mind far too active to find sleep possible. His only desire was to think, plan, decide upon some future course of action. With mind busy, forgetful of the very presence of his companion, he indulged in a bath, again dressed himself, and, lighting a cigar, settled back into an easy chair to fight the whole out alone with himself.

The mystery confronting him appeared more difficult of solution than ever. He was more thoroughly convinced than ever that Percival Coolidge had been murdered; that the act had been committed either by Hobart himself, or under his direction. He possessed no proof, however, nor could he figure out a motive for the crime. Who was this Jim Hobart? Was he in any way personally interested in the fortune left by Stephen Coolidge? Or did he hold any special relationship with the murdered man? More important still, what peculiar influence did the fellow exert over the girl? Here was by far the deeper mystery, the one that troubled him most. The others seemed possible of explanation, but the sudden change in Natalie Coolidge was beyond all understanding.

Except in face, form, dress, outward appearance, she no longer seemed to West as being the same woman he had formerly known. His original interest in her had vanished; he had learned to distrust and doubt her sincerity and truth. Beyond all question she was openly playing an important part in this tragedy under Hobart's direction, but for the life of him he could not figure out to what end. Still the very mystery of it had its fascination. While he felt no longer any special desire to serve her, to further risk his life in her cause, yet he experienced a fierce determination to learn what all this really meant; to uncover the object these conspirators had in view. If Natalie was involved it could not be helped, she would have to suffer with the rest; his own duty was clear.

Yet how could he begin action? What clew did he possess which could be followed? Practically none. Before morning, that saloon on Wray street would unquestionably be deserted, except perhaps by its proprietor, and Mike would simply deny everything. Two possibilities remained; the police might have some record of the fellow, might know his favorite haunts, even be able to locate his next probable hiding place. If not, the only hope remaining would seem to be Natalie Coolidge. She would undoubtedly return to Fairlawn; was probably there already, and, by shadowing her, the whereabouts of Hobart would surely be revealed either sooner or later.

But possibly there was a quicker way to learn their purpose than by thus seeking to find either. If it was the Coolidge fortune which was at stake, why not endeavor to learn in whose trust it was being held, and what steps were being taken to safeguard it? He could explain the nature of his interest to an attorney, and be advised how to proceed. Determined to take all three steps the first thing next day, West rested back comfortably in the chair, already half asleep. One hand rested in his pocket, and as his fingers fumbled some object there, he suddenly recalled the knife Sexton had found in the alley.

He drew the article forth curiously, and looked at it under the glow of the electric light—it was a small silver-handled penknife, such as a lady might carry, a rather strange thing to be discovered in a dirt alley back of Wray street. The incongruity struck him forcibly, and he sat up, [illegible] some mark of identification on the polished handle. There was none, not an inscription of any kind, but he noted that the single slender blade did not fit closely down into its place. He opened it idly to learn the cause—beneath appeared the white gleam of tightly folded paper.

CHAPTER XI

What the Telephone Told.

All West's indifference vanished instantly. He had to pry the paper out, so closely had it been wedged in beneath the closed blade, and it required a moment in which to straighten it out so that the writing was discernible. Even then the marks were so faint, and minute, he could not really decipher them until he made use of a magnifying glass lying on the desk. A woman's hand, using a pencil, had hastily inscribed the words on a scrap of common paper, apparently torn from some book—the inspiration of an instant, perhaps a sudden hope born of desperation. He fairly had to dig the words out, letter by letter, copying them on an old envelope until he had the message complete: "Please notify police to search Seminole quick."

West read this over, word by word, again and again. What did it mean? Did it mean anything? Had it any possible connection with the case in which he was interested? There was no signature, nothing to guide him; yet in some way the plea sounded real, was a cry of distress, an appeal for help. It could be given no other meaning, yet how long had it been lying there in the alley? Not any great length of time surely, for the polished silver was far too conspicuous to escape notice. It must have been dropped during the night, within a very short time of its discovery. But what did the words signify? "Notify police" was clear enough, but "search Seminole" meant absolutely nothing. What was "Seminole"—an apartment house? A hotel? A saloon? Perhaps the police would know; evidently the writer so believed, or she would never have used the name with such confidence. A familiar name to her, she assumed that the police would have no difficulty in instantly locating the place meant. The haste with which the message had apparently been written, its short, sharp words, bespoke urgent need, the consciousness of imminent peril. Plainly the writer had used the only means at hand in a hurried desperate effort to gain assistance.

"The police." The request had been for the police; then why not appeal to the police? Why not take the note now directly to headquarters, and let them help solve its mystery? At first West hesitated, yet a moment's thought convinced him this would be the logical course to pursue. His appealing to the police need not necessarily involve any disclosure relative to the Coolidge matter. He had found this note accidentally in an alley in the northwest section of the city; his being there need require no special explanation; he did not understand its meaning, and consequently he placed it in their hands. That all sounded natural enough.

He looked at Sexton, who was sleeping soundly, and decided not to awaken the man. He had no use for his services just now; the City hall was only a few blocks away, and he might not be out more than an hour himself. He would leave a note so that if by any chance he should be delayed, Sexton would understand what had occurred. He scratched this off hastily, placed it in a conspicuous place, and swiftly departed, after extinguishing the light. He was no longer conscious of fatigue, or the pain of bruises, his mind eager to learn the meaning of this new discovery.

It had been a quiet night at the City Hall station, and West encountered no difficulty in reaching the presence of the lieutenant in charge. The officer who had opened the door to the inner office said rather doubtfully:

"This guy wants to see you personally, sir; he wouldn't talk to no one else."

"All right, Slavin; shut the door, and I'll hear what he has to say. What is it, my man?"

West explained swiftly and clearly, his manner of speech, as well as his statement as to who he was, evidently making a favorable impression on his listener. He took the note, spread it out on the desk, and studied it carefully.

"Looks genuine enough," he commented at last, "but not very clear. I don't know any place in this town called Seminole. Wait a minute, though; perhaps one of the boys may have an idea."

He pressed a button on top of the desk, and in response to the summons, a side door opened, and a man in plain clothes entered.

"You rang, sir?"

"Yes, McAdams; this gentleman here—"

"Captain West, as I am a sinner!" he exclaimed. "Gee! but I am glad to see you again, old man. Say, [illegible]"

West grasped the extended hand heartily. "It's a devil of a surprise, that's all. Saw you last at Brest, the day you sailed for home. So this was your job, sergeant?"

"Been with the department ever since I was a kid. Put me in plain clothes since I came back. Lieutenant, this is Captain West, officer across the pond with the engineers; we were buddies for about two months. What was wanted, sir?"

"Well, Captain West has just been telling me a rather peculiar story, and wanted some information I thought perhaps you could give; you know the old town right better than I do. First of all, do you recall any crook by the name of Hobart—Jim Hobart?"

"Hobart? Hobart? No, not off hand, I don't. How old a man is he, Captain?"

"Middle-aged, anyway; an active fellow enough, but his hair is quite gray."

"Do you know where he hangs out?"

"The last I saw of him was in a saloon known as Mike's place over on Wray street."

"Off Milwaukee; yes, I know. Mike is a big Pole, but has never had any serious trouble so far as I know. However, being there is no special recommendation to a guy, but I don't believe this man Hobart has been pulled since I've been on the force."

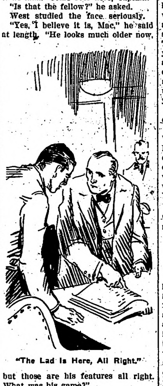
"Look him up in the index, Mac." McAdams drew out a thick volume from a nearby cabinet, and ran his fingers swiftly down a long column of names, indexed under the letter "H." Suddenly he stopped, with an exclamation.

"The lad is here all right—government offense, fifteen years ago, third arrest; mugged number 28113. Let's look him up, and see if he is the same man. Come over here, Captain."

"Is that the fellow?" he asked.

West studied the face seriously.

"Yes, I believe it is, Mac," he said at length. "He looks much older now, but those are his features all right. What was his game?"



"The Lad Is Here, All Right."

"'Con' mostly, according to the record; only one conviction though, two years in Detroit for using the mails to defraud. Oh, yes, here is something different, 'assault with intent to kill'—indeterminate sentence to Joliet for that. Nothing heard of him since. So he is back, and at the old game again. Do you want him brought in, Captain?"

"No, not yet. I haven't anything against the man now but a suspicion. I wanted to learn his record, that's all. This inquiry was only incidental. What I'm really interested in just at present is something I picked up in the alley back of Mike's place three or four hours ago. It's a note in a woman's handwriting, and when I found it, it was hidden in a small silver penknife, such as a lady might carry."

"There is a woman in it, then?"

"Yes; but I haven't got things hitched up sufficiently to talk about it. The note itself is blind."

"In what respect?"

"Well, here it is. Can you make it out? I'll read it for you—'Please notify police to search Seminole quick.'"

"No signature?"

"None."

"But that is plain enough, isn't it?"

"Yes, if you know what she meant by Seminole; what is it? A street? An apartment house? A saloon? Do you know of anything under that name?"

McAdams stood motionless, thinking.

"No, by thunder, I don't," he admitted reluctantly. "There is no street of that name in the city. There used to be a shady hotel over on Ontario street called 'The Seminole,' but that was torn down ten years ago. I never heard of any other, did you, Dave?"

"No," answered the lieutenant slowly, [illegible]

"A boat! Well, that's a straw, anyway, and worth looking up." Mac picked up the telephone. "Who is on at the harbor master's office this time of night?"

"Winchell, usually, and he'll have a record there."

The detective jiggled the receiver impatiently.

"Yes, this is police headquarters calling. Give me the harbor master's office, please. Oh, is this you, Dan? Bob McAdams speaking. Do you know of any boat on the lakes called the Seminole? What's that? A lumber schooner at Escanaba? Never makes this port, you say? And you don't know of any other by that name? Sure, I'll hold the wire; look it up."

"Not a very promising lead," he said over his shoulder, "but Dan will have the dope for us in a minute."

He suddenly straightened up, the receiver at his ear.

"I didn't quite get that, Dan. A medium-sized yacht, you say? Where is it? Oh, at the Jackson Park lagoon. I see, and who did you say owned it? Coolidge? What Coolidge? Exactly; the fellow who killed himself out south. Hold the wire."

He swung about to face West. "This mean anything to you?"

"It surely does," eagerly. "The girl I spoke of was Natalie Coolidge. By all the gods, we are on the right track."

"All right, Dan," resuming his conversation. "What's that? Coolidge had the boat up the river a few weeks ago trying to sell it. That's how you happened to remember the name—I see. Say, is there any one out at Jackson park I could talk to at this hour? Who? Oh, yes, the life saving station. Sure: somebody will be on duty there. Thanks, old man—good night."

He hung the receiver upon the hook, and reached for the telephone directory.

"Some luck, I say. Jackson park—oh, yes, here it is. All right, Central; sure, that is the proper number. This is the City Hall police headquarters again; hustle it up, please. Hullo, Jackson Park life-saving station? Good; this is McAdams speaking from the city detective bureau. Is there a yacht out there in the lagoon called the Seminole? belongs to a man named Coolidge; medium-sized boat, with gas engine. Yes; what's that? Not there now; went out into the lake about two hours ago. The h—ll it did! Who was aboard? do you know? Say that again; oh, you wasn't on watch when she sailed; your partner said what? Three men and a women. All right, yes, I got it. Say now, listen; this is a police matter, so keep your eyes open. It will be daylight pretty soon, and if you get sight of that boat, call up the City Hall station at once. Do you get me?"

He wheeled about, smiling whimsically.

"It's on again, off again, Flannigan. We had it, and we have it not. Dave, I am getting interested; I feel the lure of the chase. Can you spare me for a day or two? You can? Good enough; we'll comb the lakes until we find out who is sailing aboard the Seminole. You're with me, old man?"

West extended his hand silently, and the fingers of the two clasped in a mutual pledge.

CHAPTER XII

The Yacht "Seminole."

There was little to do but wait impatiently for some further message of guidance. Mr. Adams dispatched a few telegrams to nearby lake ports, and briefly outlined certain plans of action for the morrow, provided nothing further was heard from the missing boat; these included a possible visit to Fairlawn, and a city-wide search for Hobart, who both men decided could not be included among the party of the yacht. West told his new assistant the entire story in detail, and Mac's interest in ferreting out the matter became intense. It was the kind of case which fascinated him with its mystery, but no theory he could spin born from long police experience, seemed to exactly fit all the revealed facts. The great puzzle revolved about the strange actions of the girl; her part in the affair presenting an unsolvable riddle. They must have talked for an hour, discussing the situation frankly from every angle, yet arriving at no definite conclusion. The sky in the east was red with dawn when both men fell fast asleep in their chairs, still waiting.

It was nine o'clock, and still no word. The two had eaten a hasty breakfast in a restaurant across the street, discussing the situation again thoroughly, but to no more satisfactory result. It seemed impossible to reconcile certain facts. If the silver knife, with its call for help, had indeed been dropped by Natalie Coolidge, and she was being held a prisoner in the hands of villains on board the Seminole, why had she acted toward West as she did in that house on Wray street? To all appearances there she had been hand in glove with the conspirators, willing even to connive at the Captain's murder if necessary to the success of their crime. Only one theory was possible; that the girl was under constraint, driven to her strange act by personal fear. She dare do nothing else, terrorized by the threats of Hobart, and her own sense of utter helplessness in his power. This, and this only, must be the answer to the riddle.

The BAD CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS

By Ethel Cook Eliot

THIS is a story of last Christmas day; and I will tell you right away that it ended happily. But it begins sadly. It was Christmas day up at the North pole, and as usual on the day before Christmas, St. Nicholas had been hurried and rather grumpy. Only this time, Mother Nicholas thought to herself that he was just a bit grumpier than she had ever known him. And at suppertime she found that she was right.

He came into the kitchen, closing his workshop door with a bang, and sat down with all the little Nicholases to his porridge.

"Well, I've said it before," he growled, "but this time I mean it. The children down there in the world will get nothing from my pack this night. It's time they were taught a lesson."

All the little Nicholases gasped, but Mother Nicholas only asked calmly: "Why, what is the matter now, father? After you've been working for them the whole year, you wouldn't go and disappoint the poor dears would you?"

"Yes, I would," declared St. Nicholas, swallowing his porridge in great gulps, and pretending that he was not a saint at all. "Half of them go around saying that there isn't any St. Nicholas, poking fun at me, and laughing in their sleeves. And the other half think it makes no difference whether they are good children or not, I'll fill their stockings just the same. It's a thankless job, I tell you. And I'm too old a man for it. So!"

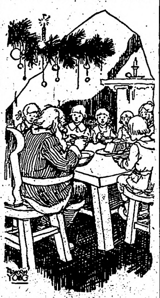
"Come," said Mother Nicholas, soothingly, "here is a plate of griddle cakes. When you have eaten you will see things differently."

"No, when I have eaten I shall go to bed. That's where an old fellow like me belongs, an old fellow who children don't believe in."

Mother saw that he was determined, and that there was nothing to do for it, since griddle cakes wouldn't help. So she put her finger to her lips to motion the children silent, and went on quietly about her work. And when St. Nicholas had finished his supper, he did roll away to bed, only telling the little Nicholases to be sure to hang their stockings, for they had been good children all the year and still believed in him.

The minute the door closed behind him the little Nicholases burst into excited chatter. "Oh, what a pity! Those poor children! Surely there must be some good ones! Oh dear, what fun will Christmas be to us if all the children in the world down there are unhappy!"

"What indeed!" Mother Nicholas shook her head and looked often at the closed door, behind which St. Nicholas could already be heard snoring.



"Yes, I Would," Declared St. Nicholas.

"And the reindeer!" cried the oldest boy, "what will they do without their yearly exercise? It seems as though father might have gone, if only for their sakes."

Mother Nicholas thought so, too. And at that minute they heard the reindeer's little hoofs beating on the hard snow crust at the door. Wise little beasts! St. Nicholas had never delayed the Christmas-Eve journey so long before, and so here they were to save him the trouble of going for them. The Nicholas children felt that they never could face the poor little reindeer's disappointment.

But what was Mother Nicholas doing so busily over there by the cupboard? The children looked in amazement. It was seldom that mother left the snowhouse at any time of day. And here she was, after dark, and Christmas Eve, too, putting on her hood and cape, and pulling on her gauntlets!

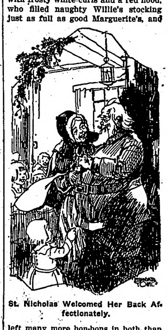
"Are you going to drive the reindeer back to the stables?" asked the oldest boy. [illegible] driving them back to the stables until this night's work is done," she said. "If you're awake when we get back, you may do it as always."

How the children stared! "Was little old mother going all alone on that long, wild drive over towns and forests and oceans and up and down chimneys, and goodness knows where, without asking St. Nicholas if she might?

Yes, that was just what she was going to do! "For, when a good thing needs doing," she said brightly, "no permission is needed."

"Keep the fire going, be sure that the baby has the fur rug well up around his chin, and give your father a good breakfast when he wakes," she called over her shoulder and was away out of the door almost before they had realized that she was going. They heard the scampering of the reindeer hoofs, faster the dimmer they got, and then just the stillness of the North pole.

That was last Christmas Eve. And if you ask any child who lay awake to see St. Nicholas, and peeped out with one eye, all the time pretending to be fast asleep, he will tell you that it wasn't St. Nicholas he saw at all. It was just a tiny, sprightly old lady with frosty white curls and a red hood, who filled naughty Willie's stocking just as full as good Marguerite's, and left many more bon-bons in both than was usual. That peeping child will also tell you that before she went back up the chimney, she gave baby a kiss on his pink cheek, a thing St. Nicholas (who is as afraid of babies as a burglar is, and for the same reason) has never been known to do.



St. Nicholas Welcomed Her Back Affectionately.

And mother, will you believe me, in spite of having stopped to kiss all the babies, was back at the North pole a whole hour earlier than St. Nicholas had ever been able to make it, even in his younger days. Her work was well done, too! But in spite of the early hour, she found the children and her husband waiting for her. St. Nicholas welcomed her back more affectionately than the children.

"I woke in the middle of the night," he said, "out of such a horrid dream—all about crying children and sad mothers. Bless you, good wife, for not letting that dream come true!"

"Oh, don't mention it," said Mother Nicholas. "It was no trouble at all. Indeed, it did me good. I think, father, since you are getting so old, I will take over this job myself from now on."

St. Nicholas looked thoughtful at that. He paced up and down the floor. Then he came and stood in front of Mother Nicholas, straightening up and looking almost as young as in his early days.

"No, mother," he said firmly. "A woman's place is in the home. I'll attend to the business hereafter, thank you."

And mother, who, after all, only wanted everybody to be happy, made him some griddle cakes for his breakfast.

But that was last year, the year you got a stocking full, even though you hadn't been so very good. This year you had better watch out, for it is old St. Nicholas himself you have to deal with.

Party Supper Boxes.

Where there is seating room at the Christmas-time party refreshments are appropriately served in small boxes covered with red paper or holly patterned paper, and tied with gay ribbons in holiday color. Each box contains a sandwich, slices of cake, nuts and candies daintily wrapped in wax paper. A tissue paper napkin, in Christmas design, is folded in each box. When each person has received his or her supper box the coffee and ice cream are served and the contents of the box are eaten with it. The pretty boxes can be retained by the guests as a souvenir, or "favor," if they like such things.

Choosing the Holly.

Superstitious people assert that one should be careful about the choice of the holly for the decorations. Part should be smooth and part prickly. Then providing both kinds are carried into the house at the same time, all will be well. But should the prickly variety be taken in first, then the husband will rule the household during the coming year; if the smooth is brought in first the wife will be "top dog."

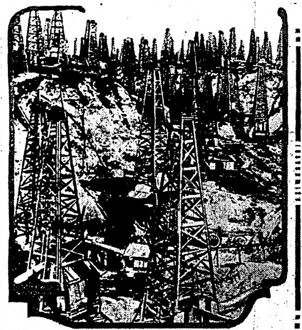
Biggest X-Ray Apparatus in World

Garfield hospital, Washington, D. C., has installed the largest X-Ray apparatus in the world for the treatment of cancer. This machine is so designed that it is unnecessary for the patient, attendants and operator to be protected. A jacket of lead, one-half inch thick, lines the cylinder, effectually preventing the escape of the rays. A six-inch aperture in the bottom permits the rays to play upon the parts of the body selected for treatment. The equipment delivers 200,000 volts, which is 100 per cent greater than has been produced in America by any other such apparatus.

Lots of Oil Wells in Burmese Field



This is Burma, but where are the "elephunts a-pilin' teak" and the "neater, sweeter maiden"? It is a view of the Burmese oil fields, where the wells are so close together that the workmen interfere with one another. According to John Park, a former Dayton (O.) man, who is manager for the British oil company controlling these wells, the number of wells to the acre on this field is from 75 to 150.

MAKES RIOTERS WEEP

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Before you start a riot, examine the above photograph. Capt. L. M. McBride is showing the new tear gas gun with which Washington police will be equipped for riot squad duty. The gun has two cylinders and a nozzle. Compressed air in one cylinder draws tear gas from the other and throws a stream through the nozzle. The stream breaks up into a fine mist, and if it ever reaches you, you are going to cry and cry hard, no matter how stony your heart may be. The gun weighs seven pounds.

Trailing Aurora.

Incidental to his voyage of discovery in the Arctic, Captain Roald Amundsen plans to make movie pictures of the aurora borealis—that wonderful phenomenon, now known to be electrical in its nature, which manifests itself in the form of light-streamers that ascend into the sky all around the Arctic circle.

Occasionally in our latitudes we get a glimpse of it, but only a glimpse; and it seems to us as if the streamers sprang from the surface level of the earth. But they do not. They start from 40 to 50 miles up.

It is the sun that makes the aurora, which varies in size and intensity with solar activity. Once in a while, when it reaches a maximum, its streamers may be seen stretching clear across our night sky, and there is so much electricity let loose that all our telegraph instruments go on strike.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Greeks Execute Six Alleged Traitors and Britain Severs Relations.

LAUSANNE MEET DEADLOCKED

Mosul Oil Fields Subject of Much Dispute—France Reported Ready to Occupy the Ruhr — House Passes Ship Subsidy Bill.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE revolutionary government of Greece has tried, convicted and executed three former premiers, two former cabinet officers and a general for conspiring to commit high treason, in connection with the Greek debacle in Asia Minor. Great Britain protested against the executions and has broken off diplomatic relations with Greece. Do you think this is justified, or do you believe the affair is no business of Britain's any more than was the execution of Erskine Childers by the Irish Free State?

MORE trouble looms for Greece. Last week the military court-martial in Athens found guilty a number of those accused of conspiracy to commit high treason in connection with the defeat of the Greek armies by the Turks, and six of them were condemned to death. These were former Premiers Gounaris, Stratos and Protopapadakis; former Cabinet Members Baltazzi and Theotokis and General Hadjanestis, who commanded the Asia Minor armies. General Stratigos and Admiral Goudas were condemned to life imprisonment. Great Britain, through Minister F. O. Lindley, was quick to protest against the carrying out of the death sentences, but the Greeks ignored this and within a few hours the six were lined up and shot.

Minister Lindley at once notified the Greek government that Great Britain had broken off relations with it and he departed for Lausanne to confer with Lord Curzon, the British foreign minister. Just why the British felt it their duty to pursue this course was not revealed in the dispatches, but a good guess is that they were glad to find this opportunity to sever a relationship that had become exceedingly irksome and that had brought on them little but abuse and ridicule. Now they are able to quit Greece with a gesture, of righteousness. But the results for Greece are likely to be very serious, for Great Britain has been her financial mainstay and if she cannot form other close friendships she may find herself practically isolated. At this writing no other nation has followed the lead of Britain, but it was said in Washington that the incident might cause the indefinite postponement of recognition of the Greek government by the United States. Before the execution Jefferson Caffery, the American charge d'affaires in Athens, on his personal account, advised against it.

King George did not approve of the executions and asked permission to leave the country. Instead, he was held under strict surveillance in the royal palace just outside of Athens.

EXACTLY what is going on in the Lausanne conference is being carefully concealed, the official communiques being brief statements from which the important facts are all omitted. The correspondents, reduced to conjecture, send out many stories of dissension, and there is good reason to believe some of these are based on truth. It is certain that the two committees handling the questions of the frontiers of Turkey and the possession of the Mosul oil fields are making little progress. The Turks, refusing to recognize the Mudros armistice of 1918, decline to accept responsibility for the cost of maintaining allied troops in Constantinople, which some weeks ago reached a total of half a billion dollars. They also insist they are the owners of the Mosul oil fields, which are in the Mesopotamian territory mandated to Britain. This oil question is perhaps the most troublesome one the conference has to deal with. It is reported the English may finally consent to throw over Feisal and his kingdom of Iraq and let Turkey have the territory, provided they are assured of concessions for the development of the oil fields. Several other European nations claim a share, however, and Americans have large interests in the region, which Messrs. Child and Grew are trying to safeguard by insisting on the open door. The Angora government seems rather partial to the Americans in this matter. It also is desirous that the American schools and colleges shall continue in operation in Turkey.

Eastern Thrace and Adrianople have been turned over to the Turks and they are with difficulty being held back from crossing the Maritza river and seizing Karagatch, which they claim because it is the terminus of the railroad from Constantinople. The Greeks have two army corps posted along the western bank of the river.

THERE were important developments in Paris last week concerning the possible occupation of the Rhineland by the French when the expected default in reparations payments by the Germans comes in January. Cables from Paris almost flatly asserted that the government had completed its arrangements for such action, including plans for both military and civil administration of the territory to be seized, and it was assumed that there would be no objection by Great Britain, since France was supporting the British program in relation to the Near East. On Wednesday, however, Premier Poincare cabled to Ambassador Jusserand in Washington directions to state that there was not the slightest foundation in fact for the report that the French government was contemplating a forcible entry into the Ruhr.

Chancellor Cuno had notified the allies that his government fully indorsed the "final" demand of Doctor Wirth for a moratorium of three or four years on all reparations payments and a huge international loan. Berlin was greatly disturbed by the reports from Paris, but could only reiterate that fulfillment of the treaty of Versailles would ruin both Germany and France. Questioned in the house of commons, Prime Minister Bonar Law said he had no information that would justify him in saying the French occupation of the Ruhr was imminent; but just before that he had a long conference with the French ambassador, and this was significant because heretofore he has insisted on leaving foreign affairs to the foreign office.

IN HIS American addresses, especially the one delivered in Chicago last week, M. Clemenceau insists that, although France does not desire to crush Germany, she has the best of reason to fear another attack on her by the Germans when, through alliance with soviet Russia and Turkey, they think themselves powerful enough to seek revenge. He called attention to 45 grave violations by Germany of the disarmament provisions of the treaty discovered by the allied authorities, mainly in the form of large hidden stores of war material. Clemenceau charged that Germany, in her efforts to evade her responsibilities, had bankrupted herself intentionally to keep from paying France; that the average tax in Germany is only $14 in contrast to an average of $45 in France. He denied again and again and at length that France is militaristic.

WHEN the ship subsidy measure came to a final vote in the house, late Wednesday, the administration forces were out in full strength and the bill was passed by a comfortable margin. During the several days given to its consideration many amendments were accepted by the Republican majority. One of them necessitates the authorization by congress each year of payments from the merchant marine fund to operators of American ships, this being generally viewed among members not only as doing away with a permanent appropriation, but also as affording a check on expenditures. Other amendments would exclude from receiving government aid concerns operating ships for their own benefit, except where they transported cargoes of other shippers; reduce from 1,000 to 500 gross tons the minimum tonnage for sailing vessels eligible for government aid, and eliminate the income tax credit to shipper equal to 5 per cent of amounts paid for the transportation of goods in American vessels.

IN THE senate the Democrats staged a determined and openly avowed filibuster to prevent the passage of the Dyer anti-lynching bill, which was passed by the house. Senator Underwood, their leader, warned the Republicans that all business, even the confirmation of presidential appointments, would be blocked until efforts to pass the measure were abandoned.

JAMES COUZENS, now mayor of Detroit, is to be the new senator from Michigan, succeeding Truman H. Newberry. He was appointed by Governor Groesbeck on Wednesday and wired his acceptance from New York, where he had gone to spend Thanksgiving day with his daughter. He will take his seat as soon as his Detroit affairs can be arranged. Governor Groesbeck said: "Mr. Couzens becomes senator with not a single string attached. He made no promises; I exacted none." Mr. Couzens, who was born in Ontario fifty years ago, began active life as a newsboy and between 1903 and 1916 he acquired a large fortune through association with Henry Ford in the manufacture of automobiles. As mayor of Detroit he gained prominence by his municipal railway venture.

UNCLE SAM is getting exceedingly annoyed by the prohibition enforcement question. Several recent occurrences have "got under his skin." President Harding's expressed opinion that liquor would long be a factor in politics was so misinterpreted that he felt the necessity of letting the country know he is and has been absolutely in favor of enforcing the Eighteenth amendment. Then came the orgy in Philadelphia, following the Army-Navy football game, in which the violation of the law was flagrant. Now the government has instructed federal authorities everywhere to co-operate closely with the prohibition enforcement agencies and the federal attorneys are told to push all pending liquor cases and, when proper, to urge the imposition of the heaviest penalties on conviction. Fifty new prohibition agents were added to the force in Philadelphia.

JAPAN moved out of the Shantung peninsula on December 1, according to her promise and after having made large concessions to the Chinese in the amount to be paid her. Next day China took over Kiaochow. Tsingtao at the same time became an open port and the municipality is autonomous under Chinese sovereignty. China will let the Japanese participate in public enterprises in Tsingtao.

THE Italian chamber of deputies, by a vote of 275 to 90, gave to Premier Mussolini full power to bring about economic reforms and carry out a rehabilitation of Italian finances. He is, in fact, in the position of receiver for a nearly bankrupt country. The extent of his support by the people is indicated by the fact that many labor organizations have offered to work one extra hour a day for the benefit of the government.

GOVERNOR SMALL of Illinois, guided by the dissenting opinion of Justice Carter of the state Supreme court rather than by the opinion of the rest of the court, has pardoned William Bross Lloyd and 15 of the other Communists who had just been put in the penitentiary and jail for violation of the state espionage law. Comment is unnecessary.

IN THE death of James R. Mann of Chicago the nation has lost one of its best informed, most courageous and most valuable congressmen. He had served in the lower house for 13 consecutive terms, or twenty-six years, and was re-elected last November. His knowledge of legislation, pending and past, was extraordinary and he was absolutely independent in his attitude toward measures in congress.

"I am sorry to leave you this afternoon, Nathaniel," Mrs. Haynes was saying, 'but, you see, our Sewing Circle is way behind in their work for the South Sea Islanders. Anyway, Anne will be here soon and she can sit with you until I get back." As an afterthought she added, "Don't encourage her to do anything for you, as she is sure to have an accident—you know we call her 'Awkward Anne.'"

Nat smilingly acquiesced, and when his aunt had trotted off to her circle Nat drifted into a light nap.

He was brought abruptly back from dreamland by an exclamation of "Oh, my!" followed by an avalanche of missiles, some of which landed on his knees, while more of the same lodged on his chest. The air seemed to be full of wild squawks of "Murder! Murder!" As he endeavored to sit up and speak, a warm, furry object was thrust into his mouth, while a frantic mewing arose, accompanied by wrigglings and squirmings about his neck and chin.

"Oh, my!" continued the human voice, while its owner stumbled over his feet. Now fully awakened, Nat inquired of the voice, "Who are you and what is this?" struggling with several objects. Then, with a laugh, he remembered his aunt's warning. "Are you Anne?" and a faint "Yes" was his answer.

"Well, I am sorry, but you will have to dig me out of this avalanche, for you see my eyes are off duty for a while."

Hurriedly, hands worked to relieve him of his burden, the mewing died down and the rasping cry of "Murder" was changed to an approving "Very fine, you are progressing." To break Anne's embarrassed silence, Nat asked "What is this?" lifting a flat, bulky object.

"My poems," answered the meek voice again, with a touch of pride.

A flash of wonder crossed Nat's mind as he tried to construct the picture in his mind of "Awkward Anne," about whom he had heard countless laughable tales, in the role of poetess. In an interested way, intended to be soothing, he said, "Well, now, I guess we can spend a pleasant afternoon waiting for auntie to return from her Sewing Circle if you are willing to hear my complaints of the way fate has laid me low with strained eyes, and I would be delighted if you would read me some of your poems, although I could only offer an amateur's judgment on them."

Anne's meekness evaporated as she joyously exclaimed, "How fine! You know I have been trying for a week to get into the proper mood to write a poem on my impressions of how a person must feel when the light has gone out of the windows of the soul.

"When I walked into Auntie's parlor and there you sat, with your eyes all bandaged, it startled me so that I said: 'Oh, my,' so suddenly in Polly's ear that she screeched and grabbed my ear in her beak. It hurt so that I lost my grip on my basket of kittens and my poems." Here her voice lost its joyous note.

While he suppressed his desire to laugh, Nat explained how his "blamed old eyes broke down" on him and in her sympathy over his misfortune, Anne forgot her unfortunate arrival on the scene and confided to him how hard it was to keep her poems out of sight of her ridiculing relatives, and of course no one could get the proper effect of their lines unless she read them aloud, so naturally Polly made a fine assistant when trained to say, "That is exquisite."

When Auntie arrived, she was much pleased with the state of affairs, and a tiny hope stirred in her matchmaking heart that these two would be attracted to each other. Nat was progressing in his profession and Anne might be waked out of that abstract manner which fixed on her the handicap of awkwardness.

Auntie approved of the long afternoons down in the orchard which followed, with Anne reading to Nat in an earnest manner, while Nat sat with his lap full of sleepy kittens, and Polly with her sage head on one side, offered her compliments.

Anne posted big, mysterious, business-like envelopes and Nat was fairly caught with his bandages pushed up over his forehead, writing feverishly in a notebook on his knees. When discovered, Nat begged her to keep his secret, but her curiosity became acute when Nat returned from one of his trips to the city to see his specialist with a large parcel under one arm.

After supper he called Auntie and Anne into the sitting room, where he opened the package, displaying two slim, blue covered books with the title, "Poems of Arcady, by Anne Brown." While Auntie gazed in wonder at her copy, recollecting the afternoons in the orchard, Anne exclaimed; 'Oh, my, if I could only help you in your lifework as you have helped me," to which Nat made the astonishing reply, "You have, Anne," and forthwith offered for her inspection a compact, brown-covered book entitled, "Personal Experiments in Overcoming the Handicap of Nerves, by N. M. Thayer, M. D."

But, as Auntie said, Anne needn't have been so indignant at being used as a subject for Nat's experiments, for it was all going to be in the family now, anyway.

Chas. Brink Drops Dead

Charley J. Brink passed away suddenly Monday afternoon in his place of busines at Thief River from an attack of apoplexy. He was in the act of waiting on a customer when he dropped to the floor and expired.

Charley was one of the pioneers in this village having come here with his brothers in the early days. He was for a time in the machine business and later operated the Hotel Markham with his brother, Emil. In later years he was in the saloon business here until he took a position at Thief River. He worked at both Thief River and Red Lake Falls until he bought his present place of business, a confectionery store formerly owned by Joe Roleau, also an oldtime St. Hilaire resident.

Known by everybody as an honest and upright man, Charley made a host of friends in this part of the state who will be grieved to learn of his sudden death. His place at Thief River was a popular gathering place, especially for little children with whom Charley was a great favorite and he will be sadly missed by his little friends. Charley was a single man, and is survived by three brothers and two sisters, who are: Ole, of Eight Point, Mont., Emil and Oscar, who are out west, Miss Emma Brink of Jordan, Mont., and Mrs. L. P. Thyren of this place.

No details as to time of funeral or place of burial can be learned at this writing.

Predicts Good Year

A Chicago man whose name is known thruout the nation as a forecaster of business conditions, and who generally hits fairly close to the mark, says that 1923 is going to be a banner year. He claims the lack of housing in industrial centers, which is due to stoppage of building during the war, will bring about a building boom which, in turn, will create activity in all kindred and allied lines. He also expresses an opinion that prices will be better for farm produce, and that conditions in general will be better for the farming communities.

Will Build Road

Among a number of new road projects on which the Minnesota Highway department will let contracts in early spring is that for the new grade between here and Thief River Falls. The new grade will follow on the east side of the Great Northern railroad tracks the entire distance, according to plans.

The organization meeting was held in St. Paul, Nov. 15, under Farm Bureau Federation auspices. Since, special committee have completed drafting a constitution, by-laws and other details that had to be prepared before the permnent organization could be formed.

Navagation Closes

Navagation on the great lakes was closed this week following a terrific storm which swept over Lake Superior. Several coal laden boats docked at Duluth after being buffeted about by the storm, and a number of others had not reported in yesterday. Close of navagation puts the quietus on expectation of the Northwest receiving its usual supply of hard coal this winter.

Drainage Meet Held

Hearing on the Red Lake drainage and flood control case, which hearing was held before Judges C. Stanton of Bemidji and Andrew Grindeland of this district, at Thief River Falls, was adjourned Saturday after both sides had submitted their arguments. The project under consideration is that of dredging the Red Lake River from its outlet at Red Lake, to near Highlanding and building a dam at the outlet to control flood waters in the spring months. Some opposition was voiced at the hearing by farmers in the assessed area, but it is not expected that this opposition will continue when once the matter of taxation is fully explained. A decision by the judges is expected in a short time.

W. S. Stamps Due Soon

War saving stamps and certificates purchased during the war, and on which redemption date seemed ages away at that time, are redeemable after the first of the year. In order to promote further savings, the government is offering a new series bearing the same rate of interest. A good plan is to cash in the old stamps and buy the new ones with the proceeds.

Mrs. T. Tinsman Dies

Word was received here yesterday from Grand Forks stating Mrs. Thos. Tinsman of that city had passed away Tuesday afternoon at a Grand Forks hospital, from blood poisoning.

Mrs. Tinsman is a daughter of John Anderson who resides four miles south of this village, and well was known to a number of local people since she resided here before her marriage a few years ago. From the little information we are able to secure at this time, it is understood that the remains will be shipped to this place and interred beside those of her mother and brother in the East-side cemetery.

To mourn her sudden death, she leaves her husband and three small children, the oldest being only four years of age and the youngest about six months. She is also survived by her father, John Anderson, and five brohers, Philip, of this place, Gustaf, of Thief River Falls, Carl, at Rockford, Ill., Ernest, at Joliet, Ill., and Iver at Chicago.

Heartfelt sympathy of many friends in this vicinity is extended to the bereaved husband and other relatives in their dark hour of trial and sorrow.

Surprise Party

A number of young folks enjoyed a suprise party on Miss Martha Swenson last Friday evening. The guests were treated to a sleigh ride after which games were played. Lunch was served at midnight. Those present were:—Misses Ivanette and Marion Wilson, Martha Swenson, Gunbild Nelson, Esther Anderson, Blanche de Cathelineau, Pearl Simonson, Helen Peterson, Mae Kenney, and Lewis Hackett, Oscar Nelson, Alvin Svenson Gerald and Delford Stephens.

Car Movement

The railroad and warehouse commission states in a circular letter to newspapers that they have secured movement of enough freight cars to insure shipment of potatoes from the Northwest before spring. While there is a considerable amount of potatoes in storage houses thruout the territory which will have to be moved by spring, thousands of bushels have frozen for lack of storage facilities and car storage.

Chas. Brink Drops Dead

Charley J. Brink passed away suddenly Monday afternoon in his place of busines at Thief River from an attack of apoplexy. He was in the act of waiting on a customer when he dropped to the floor and expired.

Charley was one of the pioneers in this village having come here with his brothers in the early days. He was for a time in the machine business and later operated the Hotel Markham with his brother, Emil. In later years he was in the saloon business here until he took a position at Thief River. He worked at both Thief River and Red Lake Falls until he bought his present place of business, a confectionery store formerly owned by Joe Roleau, also an oldtime St. Hilaire resident.

Known by everybody as an honest and upright man, Charley made a host of friends in this part of the state who will be grieved to learn of his sudden death. His place at Thief River was a popular gathering place, especially for little children with whom Charley was a great favorite and he will be sadly missed by his little friends. Charley was a single man, and is survived by three brothers and two sisters, who are: Ole, of Eight Point, Mont., Emil and Oscar, who are out west, Miss Emma Brink of Jordan, Mont., and Mrs. L. P. Thyren of this place.

No details as to time of funeral or place of burial can be learned at this writing.

Predicts Good Year

A Chicago man whose name is known throut the nation as a forecaster of business conditions, and who generally hits fairly close to the mark, says that 1923 is going to be a banner year. He claims the lack of housing in industrial centers, which is due to stoppage of building during the war, will bring about a building boom which, in turn, will create activity in all kindred and allied lines. He also expresses an opinion that prices will be better for farm produce, and that conditions in general will be better for the farming communities.

Will Build Road

Among a number of new road projects on which the Minnesota Highway department will let contracts in early spring is that for the new grade between here and Thief River Falls. The new grade will follow on the east side of the Great Northern railroad tracks the entire distance, according to plans.

FOR SALE:—Wood heater, large size. In as good condition as when new. If interested, call at this office.

Wool Meeting Called

Delegates from all county wool growers' associations in the state and other persons interested, will meet at the University Farm, St. Paul, Thursday, Jan. 4, in connection with Farmers' and Home-Makers' week, to complete organization of permanent state wool marketing association. The organization meeting was held in St. Paul, Nov. 15, under Farm Bureau Federation auspices. Since, special committee have completed drafting a constitution, by-laws and other details that had to be prepared before the permnent organization could be formed.

Navagation Closes

Navagation on the great lakes was closed this week following a terrific storm which swept over Lake Superior. Several coal laden boats docked at Duluth after being buffeted about by the storm, and a number of others had not reported in yesterday. Close of navagation puts the quietus on expectation of the Northwest receiving its usual supply of hard coal this winter.

To Issue Almanac

This paper has arranged to issue an almanac this year which is expected will be ready for distribution to our readers by first of January or shortly thereafter. INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

The Case and The Girl

By Randall Parrish

Copyright 1922 by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc.

—12—

McAdams, unable to remain quiet, departed to get his police search started in an attempt to discover Hobart in his new hiding place. The fellow could not be on the yacht, as that had sailed from Jackson park at far too early an hour for him to have possibly made one of the party. He would still be in the city then, securely concealed in some dive of the underworld, perfecting his plans, whatever they might be, and, perhaps, arranging to join those on the boat later. The detective even thought this unlikely, his theory being that Hobart merely desired to get the girl safely out of the way for a length of time sufficient to enable him to complete his nefarious scheme. He argued that Natalie was in no real danger; she would be held, no doubt, kept out of sight as long as was necessary, but otherwise left uninjured. This was no strong-arm crime, but a high-class confidence game, and the important thing was to quickly lay hands on Hobart. With him once in the toils, the whole conspiracy would instantly collapse. With this end in view, McAdams took up the man's trail, leaving West to stand guard over the telephone.

The latter called up Sexton, and hurried him out to Fairlawn, with instructions to find out all he could from the servants there relative to any late developments. This accomplished, nothing remained for West to do but sit down and wait for something else to happen.

The delay was shorter than he anticipated. There was a sharp ringing of the bell, the police operator responding quickly.

"Police headquarters. What's wanted? McAdams; no he is not in just now. Who is calling him? Harbor master's office; all right; hold the wire a minute."

He turned his head around.

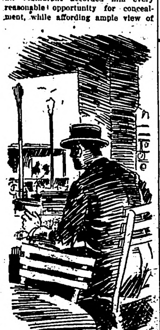
"Must be your case, Captain; better hear what they have to say."

West grasped the receiver eagerly.

"Is this the Seminole matter?" he asked swiftly. "Certainly, I understand about it. What's that. Oh, Winchell told you to call up if you learned anything. Of course; what is it? Yes, I hear; just found her tied up at north side of Municipal pier. What's the trouble? Engine working bad, and had to come in, hey? All right—thanks; I'll go straight over and see them."

This was great luck, yet there was very little he could hope to accomplish alone, without the help and authority of McAdams. Even if the vessel had been stolen—which was probably not true—he possessed no power of arrest. All he could hope to do would be to keep the fellows in sight until Mac showed up, and, if possible, prevent them from putting out into the lake again. Even in that he needs must be cautious not to be seen by any of the gang who might recognize him. An alarm, proving they were being followed, would doubtless send them scattering instantly.

West thought of all these things as a taxi bore him across the city to the pier, and acted accordingly. The open air restaurant accorded him every reasonable opportunity for concealment, while affording ample view of whatever was going on. A pleasure boat, a band aboard, and with a barker, industriously busy, was close by, surrounded by a bevy of women and children. Beyond these, on the same side, snuggled close against the cement wall, lay the yacht.



There Was a Woman on Board, Then!

The Seminole was a much larger boat than West had anticipated seeing, yet he could not doubt her being the vessel sought. The name was plainly stenciled on the bow, as well as upon the dingy towing astern. The cabin appeared tightly closed, even the windows being heavily draped. Some mechanics were evidently working below; there was a sound of hammering, and occasionally a fellow in overalls appeared at the hatch opening. No one wearing any semblance of a yacht uniform, was visible, although four or five men lounged about the deck, [illegible] nected with the vessel. While an air of carelessness was assumed by all these, yet West, watching them closely, felt that they were very much on their guard, anxiously waiting an opportunity to depart. He left the table, and strolled out on to the promenade. So far as he could observe, this movement attracted no attention, although a moment later his eyes plainly caught a bit of drapery drawn slightly aside at one of the cabin windows of the Seminole, and, he felt convinced, the quick gesture of a woman's hand.

There was a woman on board, then! This certainty of knowledge by evidence of his own eyes, set his blood leaping. Whatever the purposes of these people he was again upon the right trail. A little later one of the fellows loafing on the pier, a rather heavily built man, with closely clipped red mustache, and a scar over one eye, slowly crossed the deck, and entered the cabin. He came forth again a moment later, asked some question of the workmen below and then clambered back carelessly over the rail, joining his companion on the pier.

"A half hour yet; it was quite a job the boys had, but they are making time. Come over here a minute."

They walked forward, out of earshot from where West sat on a bench in the sun. He watched the fellows closely, yet without neglecting the boat, but they neither glanced toward him, or seemed aware of his existence. His whole thought centered on the early arrival of McAdams. Until the detective came, there was nothing he could do but sit there quietly and wait. But what if the necessary repairs were completed, and the Seminole sailed before Mac got there? Was there any means in his power by which this could be prevented? The only suggestion which came to him was the picking of a quarrel in some way, with the two men ashore. The boat would never depart unless they were aboard, as they were evidently the leaders of the gang, yet this would be a most desperate expedient, to be resorted to only when all other effort had failed. Besides it would put them on their guard, and possibly avail nothing. Why not speak to the fellows pleasantly, and naturally? They had no reason to be suspicious of him; he was but one of many others lounging idly about the pier. His curiosity would seem reasonable enough, and he might thus gain some clue as to their destination. Then, even if they did sail before Mac appeared, they could be safely intercepted in time for a rescue.

Circumstances seemed to work to this end, the two men strolling carelessly back toward where he sat, pausing within a few feet of him, all their attention apparently riveted upon the yacht.

"Had some hard luck?" he ventured. "Engine give out?"

The red-mustached one glanced about, his eyes surveying the speaker indifferently.

"Broke a piston, and had to be towed in," he replied carelessly, "We'll be off again presently."

The very indifference of the fellow led West to take a chance.

"Some nice boat you've got there. The Coolidge yacht, isn't it? Haven't seen it out lately."

"Are you a yachtsman?"

"A bit of an amateur, yes; have a cat-boat I play with some. Belong to the Columbia club."

"Off Grant park; this boat quarters in the Jackson lagoon. We left there last night. You know Coolidge?"

"No, never met him; recognized the boat, though. Has it been sold?"

"Not yet. It wasn't his, anyway; belonged to the estate. I'm one of the trustees; that's how I've got the use of it—see? Ever looked it over?"

West shook his head.

"No, but I wouldn't mind; she's a dandy."

"She sure is; better inside than out to my notion. Come aboard; we've got time enough. Come along with us, Mark; we'll take a look at the cabin first, and then go forward."

The three men stepped over the low rail, and moved aft across the deck, the leader talking fluently, and pointing out various things of interest. The other man never spoke, and West gave no thought to his presence. He had been rarely fortunate so far, and was looking for an opportunity to question his guide on the purpose of their voyage. The man opened the cabin door, and West stepped inside, the interior darkened by drawn curtains. The dusk was confusing, and he stood still after the first step, hearing the latch click behind him.

A hand gripped his shoulders as though in a vise, and swung him around; the muzzle of an automatic confronted him, and behind it the threatening eyes of his guide glared directly into his own.

"Not a move, you d—d spy," a voice said coldly. "Now, Mark, frisk the cuss, and be lively about it. Had a gun, hey; I thought so. Give it to me. Now get the cord over there and give him a turn or two. A very good job, old boy; the fellow is safe enough, I should say."

He turned his eyes away, searching the cabin, confident that West was sufficiently secured.

"Come on out, Mary," he said sharply. "Who is this guy, anyhow?"

A woman came forward through the shadows. West had a glimpse of her face, but the features were unfamiliar. A woman of forty, perhaps, still attractive in appearance, with [illegible] had seen on board; not Natalie Coolidge at all. There had been a mistake of some kind; but if so, why had these people given him this sort of reception aboard? These thoughts swept his mind in a flash, as the woman peered forward to see his features more clearly. For a moment she said nothing, and the man broke out impatiently.

"He's the lad, ain't he?" he asked. "We ain't gone and picked up the wrong guy?"

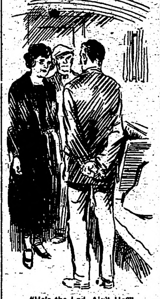
"No; he's the bird, all right. I never lamped him but once before myself. I heard his name then, but forgot it. He's her friend, there ain't no doubt o' that, Joe, and it ain't likely he's hanging around here just for fun, is it? My idea was it would be safer to take him in."

"Sure; what's yer name, young fellow?"

Concealment was useless; they evidently had him correctly spotted; to lie would do no good.

"Matthew West."

"That's the name, Hogan," the woman exclaimed eagerly. "He is a soldier—a captain, or something like that. Jim told me about him; he's the same fellow who was snooping about Mike's place last night, before we pulled out."



"He's the Lad, Ain't He?"

"Is that so? How the h—l did you get out of there?"

"We had a little trouble," West admitted, "but they let me go."

"Yes, they did! I know better than that; Hobart don't do business that way. I reckon we've played his game all right taking you in. Well, you don't get out of here so easy, let me tell you. How'd you come to get onto us?"

"That's my business."

"Oh, is it? Well, we'll make it ours from now on. There is one thing pretty sure—you were here playing a lone hand. So it don't make much difference what yer idea was. We'll take the bird along with us, Mary; then he'll be out of temptation."

The woman nodded.

"Jim will know what to do with him," she said. "All we got to do is keep him safe."

"I'll attend to that; come on, Mark, let's throw the d—n sneak into that left-hand stateroom. He'll stay there all right. Aw, take hold; don't be afraid of hurting the fellow."

They roughed him forward, but West made no attempt to resist; his hands were bound, and he was helpless. The woman threw open the narrow door, and he was bundled unceremoniously across the threshold, and thrown heavily to the floor. He struggled partially upright, protesting against being left in that helpless condition, but the red-mustached man only laughed, shutting the door tightly, and locking it. The single porthole was covered by heavy drapery, the stateroom in total darkness.

West could distinguish the movement of feet in the outer cabin, and then the closing of a door. Undoubtedly the two men had gone on deck, leaving the woman there alone. His feet were not tied and he could sit up, although the hands were tightly bound behind him. With eyes accustoming themselves to the gloom, he could discern something of his surroundings. He was in the ordinary stateroom of a small yacht, with barely space in which to move about comfortably. Two bunks were at one side, with a metal stand at their foot for washing purposes. A rug covered the floor, the beds were made, and a stool, screwed to the deck, occupied a position just below the porthole. A few hooks were in evidence on the opposite wall; but no garments dangled from them to tell of previous occupancy. Indeed the place was scrupulously clean, as though unused for some time.

West made his way to the port, pushed aside the curtain with his shoulders and looked out. The smallness of the opening made any hope of escape in that way impossible; nor could he expect to attract the attention of any one ashore. Convinced of his complete helplessness, he sat down on the stool to consider the situation.

He had been a fool; there was no doubt as to that; the only thing now was how he could best retrieve his folly. He had walked blindly into a trap, suspecting nothing, confidently relying on his own smartness, believing himself unknown. Now he must find [illegible] struck; no opportunity even for him to cry out an alarm—only that dark cabin, and the threatening revolver shoved against his cheek. He wondered where McAdams was; perhaps hunting him even then on the pier; and Sexton, what had he succeeded in discovering out at Fairlawn? That Natalie Coolidge had returned home, no doubt. At least he no longer believed she was with this yachting party—evidently there was but one woman on board. Yet, whether she was there or not, it was clear enough from what he had heard that this sudden voyage of the Seminole had some direct connection with the mystery he was endeavoring to solve. That was why he had been decoyed aboard, and made prisoner—to keep him silent; to get him securely out of the way. Yet this knowledge revealed nothing as to what their real purpose was.

What did they intend doing with him now that he was in their hands? Joe had declared his fate would be left with Hobart. Then it must be that they had a rendezvous arranged somewhere with that arch-conspirator, some hidden spot along the lake shore where they were to meet shortly, and divide the spoils, or make further plans. Hobart unquestionably was the leader of the gang; but who was the woman? She had evidently been in Mike's place the night before, and had a glimpse of his face. She must have left, with that party in the automobile, yet she surely was not the one who had dropped that note begging the police to search this vessel.

What then had become of the other? If she was being held prisoner, it was not at all probable she had been left somewhere ashore; apparently she had reason to know where she was being taken—to the Seminole; otherwise she would never have written as she did. She must have overheard their plans, before she hastily scratched off the note desperately; and yet those plans might have been changed. However, if so, why were these people—accomplices of Hobart no doubt—fleeing in the yacht, seeking to conceal their identity in an effort to disappear? What were they fleeing from? Why were they so fearful of discovery by the police? What would cause them to kidnap him, merely on suspicion that he was a friend of Natalie Coolidge? The very act was proof positive of the desperation of their crime. It could be accounted for on no other theory.

West paced the narrow space, his brain whirling, as he attempted to reason the affair out, his own helplessness becoming more and more apparent. What could he do? There was but one answer—absolutely nothing as he was then situated. He could only wait for some movement on the part of the others; his fate was out of his own hands; he had been a fool, and must pay the price. The cords about his wrists chafed and hurt with each movement. The metal wash-stand gave him an inspiration; its upper strip was thin, and somewhat jagged along the edge; possibly it might be utilized to sever the strands. It was better to try the experiment than remain thus helplessly bound. With hands free he could at least defend himself.

He made the effort, doubtfully at first, but hope came as the sharp edge began to tear at the rope. It was slow work, awkward, requiring all the strength of his arms, yet he felt sure of progress. He could feel the strands yield little by little, and redoubled his efforts. At last, exercising all his muscle, the last frayed strand snapped. His wrists were bleeding, and the hands numb, but the severed cord lay on the floor and he again had the free use of his arms. The sudden freedom brought new hope and courage. He listened at the door, testing the knob cautiously. There was no yielding, and for the moment no sound reached him from without. The woman was doubtless there on guard, and any effort he might make to break down the door would only bring the whole gang upon him. Unarmed, he could not hope to fight them all. As he stood there, hesitating, unable to determine what to attempt, he became aware of a throbbing under foot, increasing in intensity. West knew instantly what it meant—they were testing out the engine; if all worked well, the boat would cast off.

He sprang back to the port and stared out, eagerly hoping that, as they swept out into the lake, he might find some opportunity to communicate with some one on the pier. Perhaps by this time Mac would have arrived, and be watching their departure, unable to intervene, as he had no warrant for arrest, or any definite knowledge that the yacht was being used for a criminal purpose. He had not long to wait. Hurrying steps echoed along the deck; a voice shouted out some order, and the end of a loosened rope dropped splashing into the water astern; the boat trembled to the pulsations of the engine, and West realized that it was at first slowly, then more swiftly, slipping away into the broad water. He still stood there, gazing back at the fast receding pier; gradually becoming blurred in the distance, but hopelessly. He knew now he must face his fate alone.

Origin of "Hustings."

Husting was the name of an ancient court held in the city of London. In its present sense the word denotes the place where members of parliament were nominated before the ballot act of 1872 rejected the form of nominating openly. From this it has come to be applied to any electioneering platform.

Making Things for Christmas

Human Nature vs. the Christmas Spirit

By Mary Graham Bonner

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

WE WERE full of the Christmas spirit. We were going to be more kindly, more charitable, more friendly with the whole world. The Christmas spirit had penetrated. We could feel its warm glow. And so—after a glorious Christmas in the old homestead—we were on our way back to the city where lately our work had taken us.

The travel was heavy, of course, and we found ourselves waiting at the end of a long line to get into the dining car. We waited for an hour by our watches. We were exhausted from having stood and from annoyance at the slowness of others and because we were very hungry.

Finally the line grew shorter. Soon our turns would come. But it seemed not. For those who had gone into the dining car at last to eat took time about it even though their absence made the waiting line a shorter one.

At last we were at the head of the line. It had been a long process to work up to this point and we smiled at one another.

"Only a moment now and we'll be eating," we fairly beamed the words.

But again it seemed not so. For those at the tables were eating and eating and eating. They would never finish, it appeared. When they approached the end of their meal and we almost bounded to the nearly-vacant table we discovered they were taking their time over their coffee.

"How selfish people are," we said to each other. "How much they lack the unselfish Christmas spirit. It means nothing to them! They know there is a great line waiting and they don't hurry in the least. Why, just think of the length of time we've waited and there are more to follow us. And yet those people can be as leisurely as though they were in their own homes. It's outrageous, simply outrageous, how utterly selfish people are. And you would think at this time of the year they'd be a little more thoughtful."

And to our exhaustion was added the sorrow we felt in the thoughtlessness of human nature.

And then—the head waiter summoned us to a table. Two persons had at last arisen and at last our turns had actually come!

We sat back and luxuriously perused the menu. Well, we were hungry. We'd have a good meal!

And we began to order.

"And I'm just going to take my time about it, too," I said. "Just because people stand there and glare at us, as though we almost had no right to be eating our meal, isn't going to make me hurry."

"I should say not," said my companion. "We'll take all the time in the world in spite of their ugly looks!"

It was some time later that we remembered the Christmas spirit we had been so full of before!

"Human nature vs. Christmas spirit," we said sadly to each other.

Dead Broke.

"Are you going to hang up your stockings this Christmas?"

"I am more likely to hang up my [illegible]"

THE FAILING FLASH

THERE was a pattering of feet through the hall and a small spot of light approached the big fireplace. A long and bulbous stocking was clasped to a beating heart and an eager little face was half revealed as it turned bedward again in the faint glimmer. Then a sudden darkness overwhelmed the small pilgrim, and, as she lost her way and bumped into a chair, the stuffed Christmas stocking fell to the floor with a bang. The wail that followed brought father down stairs in a hurry and comfort to the lost traveler. "What is the matter, baby, what are you doing here?" said the rescuer. "The 'lectricity fell out," was the tearful answer.

The Deaf Ear That Heard

By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

MRS. BEGONE was not giving anything that Christmas. The announcement of her limited purposes had sent a chill through the house that froze the hopes of several young people. A shower of one-cent cards, registering good wishes that were rather cheap, had gone out. The bag of candy for the eager, but insincere, well-wishers that ring Christmas bells year by year had not been provided. The outlook was not promising.

Besides, Mrs. Begone was very deaf in one ear and could, upon occasion, be very deaf in two ears. It was difficult to make her hear anything that she didn't want to hear. There wasn't much chance for persuasive argument. She could be as deaf as an adder, when she had concluded not to be a multiplier.

Nevertheless, Susy did not despair; choosing a favorable after dinner time, she advanced to the attack with a well prepared Christmas appeal which was flavored with anticipations.

But as soon as the old lady heard the word "Christmas" she became wholly unable to hear more. Susy continued from behind her back, got down on her knees, peered up from the floor, peeped up through her fingers, without effect. Finally, remarking in an aside, "Wouldn't she wear you out?" the child was about to give up, when she was encouraged by the beginning of a smile that seemed to promise to spread all over Mrs. Begone's countenance. This hint of success was reflected in a broader smile upon the child's face that in turn found registry upon the face of the other and certified that the battle was won.

It was a costly smile for Mrs. Begone; six very empty stockings asked for contributions the next evening, but I dare say that she was happier in filling them than she would have been if her deafness had not been cured. She was even happier than the children, and that is saying a good deal. She was so happy that she changed an old saying in her mind and, instead of "True happiness, if understood, consists alone in being good," she made it "True happiness, if understood, consists alone in doing good."

Allies Propose Plan for the Freedom and Control of the Dardanelles.

POSITION OF U. S. STATED

France Perfects Program for Occupation of the Ruhr—Irish Free State Formally Established—Daugherty and Mellon Hit Back at Critics.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CHARGES against Attorney General Daugherty have been filed with the house committee on judiciary, and his impeachment is asked. What is your opinion of the attorney general and his official acts?

UNABLE to reach an agreement just yet concerning the Mosul oil fields and the Asiatic frontiers of Turkey, the delegates to the Lausanne conference devoted most of their time last week to the problem of the control of the Dardanelles. Here the Russians came in, and they did it in a way that almost disrupted the conference. M. Tchitcherin, head of the soviet delegation, went so far in apparently backing up the Turkish claims for sole control of the straits that even Ismet Pasha could not agree with him, and Lord Curzon was bitterly resentful. The Russians demanded the restoration of the 1914 regime giving Turkey full sovereignty over the straits with right to fortify them and the convention of prohibiting the passage of warships at any time. This plan would make of the Black sea a Russian lake, since it included the provision that Turkey must permit the passage of Russian warships except under exceptional circumstances.

For several days neither the allies nor the Turks could be persuaded to offer a definite plan, each side insisting the other should speak first. Ismet took what seemed like the consistent position that, as the straits are really Turkish territory, the allies ought to present their plan first. At last the British, French and Italians reached an agreement among themselves and submitted their proposals. Briefly, these provide for free passage through the straits for both merchant shipping and warships, both in peace and in war, excepting only when Turkey is a belligerent. They provide also for a demilitarization of the straits, comprising the Dardanelles and Gallipoli, of certain islands in the Aegean sea, of all islands in the Sea of Marmora and of both sides of the Bosporus with the exception of Constantinople, in which the Turks are to be allowed to hold 10,000 troops. No fortifications will be permitted in the areas affected and no battery emplacements allowed.

It is stipulated that the total tonnage of war vessels of any one foreign power in the Black sea must not exceed the naval strength of the most powerful Black sea power, and if the Black sea powers should carry out naval disarmament plans the allies would have the right to keep there three warships apiece. It is provided that control of the straits shall be vested in a military and naval commission representing the powers interested and invited, including the United States.

Ambassador Child now came forward with a detailed statement of the views of the United States government. He made it plain that America's chief purpose is to protect American citizens and insisted that American warships must have the right to follow American merchantmen and citizens everywhere. On the matter of fortifying the straits Child's statement [illegible] supported the position of the allies, but he [illegible] the allies, except that it provided for the passage through the straits of warships singly at intervals of not less than one month.

Rafet Pasha, military governor of Constantinople, had some more trouble with the British last week. His police confiscated the passports of a hundred Armenians as they were about to board a ship, on the ground that they were Turkish citizens and must not leave the country without Turkish passports. British troops thereupon took possession of the custom house, posted machine guns and protected the embarkation of the refugees. Rafet has refused to permit Greek vessels to take any more refugees from Asia Minor, and gave notice that within a few days all Christians remaining in Black sea coastal towns would be removed to the interior. Rafet insists the allies are not in occupation of Constantinople and have no right to interfere between him and native Christians.

COUNTING on the probable support of Belgium and the possible support of Great Britain, France has formulated a definite plan for obtaining the payment of reparations from Germany, and Premier Poincare was to lay it before the supreme council of the allies Saturday and Sunday in London. This plan, as obtained by a Paris correspondent, is:

First—Occupation of the entire Ruhr district by French troops as a guarantee. If necessary eventually, the actual exploitation of coal mines by the French ministry of public works.

Second—Strict allied control of revenues and expenditures of the reichstag and all German states.

Third—Allied control of the reichsbank and absolute stoppage of the manufacture of German paper money.

Fourth—Collection of import and export duties under allied supervision to be devoted to reparations.

Fifth—Issuance of external loans as soon as the German financial situation is improved.

France's ministers of finance and foreign affairs and her reparations delegates collaborated in this.

Britain's objection to the plan as a whole is based on the facts that she is now selling great quantities of coal to France which would not be needed if the Ruhr is seized, and that it would demoralize Germany at a time when England is trying to sell that country more goods and provide work for some 1,500,000 unemployed men.

Chancellor Cuno, meanwhile, has devised a new scheme which he hopes will serve to prevent radical action by the French. He proposes an internal gold loan of between 20,000,000,000 and 30,000,000,000 gold marks to be used for stabilization and cash reparations payments, and he was expected to tell the allies that represented Germany's total capacity to pay.

Some days ago the allies notified Germany it must apologize and pay an indemnity for attacks on allied officers in two Bavarian towns. It was understood the Berlin government would remain passive in this matter.

QUIETLY and with almost entire lack of ceremony, the Irish Free State came into being on December 6—a historic date for the Emerald Isle. In the presence of President Cosgrave and his cabinet, Timothy Healy took the oath of governor general in his home in a suburb of Dublin. Then the Dail Eireann met and all its members except two who remained away, swore allegiance to the king. President Cosgrave named seven of his ministry as members of the executive council and delivered an address in which he praised the British for their good faith in carrying out the terms of the treaty and argued for the inclusion of Ulster in the Free State. About the same time King George was holding a privy council in Buckingham palace and affixing his signature to the proclamation establishing the Irish Free State. It is said in London the king may go to Dublin to open the new parliament if the Irish so desire.

PRESIDENT HARDING is for the [illegible] mittee the President said this provision would jeopardize the entire program for aiding the merchant marine because banking interests would not finance shipping companies under such conditions. He declared he would rather have the measure fail entirely than for congress to pass a bill "which will bring us to extreme disappointment because we have entered upon a program in a half-hearted and rather indifferent way."

Some members of the committee supported the Madden amendment, so a compromise was suggested eliminating the annual appropriation requirement but providing that no increases in the specified rate of compensation shall be made without the authorization of congress.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY is getting "fed up" with the continual attacks made on him and his official acts and in his answer to the fourteen specifications filed with the house committee judiciary committee in support of the resolution proposing his impeachment he uses vigorous language. He denies seriatim every one of the charges of failure or refusal to enforce anti-trust and other laws, of unwarranted exercise of clemency in the cases of influential offenders, of neglect to prosecute war profiteers and of unconstitutional and unjust procedure in the railroad injunction case.

Mr. Daugherty says in his reply: "The attorney general cannot escape the conclusion that the sole object and purpose of this proceeding is not to remove him from office, but is in the nature of an attempt . . . to compel the publication and the disclosure in advance of the evidence upon which the government relies, and must rely, in the investigation and prosecution of important cases."

THE administration is out in the open to fight several items in the program adopted by the recent caucus of so-called progressives of the senate and house. For instance, President Harding has let it be known that he is opposed to the suggested constitutional amendment providing for the direct election of president and vice president and for convening a new congress immediately after election. He thinks the Constitution should not be continually tampered with.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon was roused by the charges, made by Governor Blaine of Wisconsin at the progressive meeting, that he was protecting rich tax dodgers and permitting huge corporation surpluses to escape taxation. Denouncing this as "an appeal to class prejudice in a selfish effort to obtain some political capital," the secretary declared that income taxes are being assessed to the full extent permitted by law, and that if the government is to go further in that line, congress must enact new legislation.

IN HIS annual report Secretary Mellon recommends, among other changes:

Reduction in maximum surtax rates, which now reach 50 per cent, to not more than 25 per cent.

Placing of a limitation upon the amount of capital losses which may be applied as a deduction from net income in computing taxes.

Limitation of cases in which securities may be exchanged for other securities without the realization of taxable income to those cases where the exchange has a connection with the consolidation or merger of two or more corporations.

As for general conditions, the secretary says the volume of business has been mounting to higher levels, labor throughout the country is again fully employed and the severe depression in agriculture has been relieved. Banking conditions generally are sound, he says, money rates are reasonable, and there is sufficient credit available to meet all legitimate demands.

'Bout Christmas

THE kindling's all cut, and the basement swept,
And everything is where it should be kept;
In lesson's he's most perfected,
Does other things least expected:
That's my Son,
On the run
For his dad,
'Bout Christmas!

I have never to look for coat or hat,
Neither to wonder where's this or that;
My ties hang neatly on the rack,
And my soiled linen's in the sack.
That's my Girl,
She's a pearl
For her dad,
'Bout Christmas!

My slippers I find beside my chair,
Kind attentions for me there—
At times I feel "Almost a King,"
So petted o'er, and everything:
That's my Wife,
Bet your life,
"Dear Old Dad!"
'Bout Christmas!

A TUNE for a PENNY

by Martha B. Thomas

© 1922, Western Newspaper Union

IS IT any wonder that the man with the tin whistle felt a trifle discouraged? Is it any wonder when the pavements were so cold, the wind so keen and his coat so thin? It seemed, on that shivery Christmas Eve, as if everything was trying to make life as dreary as possible, instead of as merry. It would not even snow. A fine, sharp drizzle swept in under the bridge where the man with the tin whistle stood, and managed to get inside the tops of his boots and his collar and up his coatsleeves; it was very disappointing indeed.

Holiday season was usually a jolly one for pennies. Either people had a great deal more at that time, or they were bent on getting rid of those they had. The man with the tin whistle kept a little cup that possessed a most remarkable appetite for coppers! It could hold as many pennies at one gulp as a boy eating raisins out of a plum pudding; and that's saying a great deal! But today the little cup was almost empty. Nobody had time to stop and dig around in pockets for loose coins; it was too cold, and their gloves bothered and they wanted to get home, where their children were waiting to clap their hands over the packages from the stores. The man with the tin whistle wanted to get home, too. He did not have any children waiting for him, and they would have had no bundles to squeal over if he did, but there was a funny, raggedy dog that always expected something, and danced around in a dizzy, delightful way that was very cheerful. But how could the man with the tin whistle go home when his tunes brought him nothing but numb fingers and a feeling in his feet as if they had turned to wood?

However, he screwed up his mouth, took a long breath, pretended that pennies were making his little cup ring like sleigh bells and played the gayest little tune you ever heard! It laughed its way up the windy stairs into the station; it chuckled along the cold stones on the gray wall; it capered about the pavement like an elf doing a polka and was altogether the merriest piece of business in that particular spot that had happened for years. The man with the tin whistle was thinking about Ravelings, his dog at home, and I'm convinced it put something into his tune that was irresistible. For let me tell you! In two minutes who should come running down the steps in front of him but a young lady with the pinkest cheeks and the laughingest eyes he had ever seen. She was smiling at him as though she had known him all her life.

"I love that tune!" she said. "It always make me want to skip my feet. You can't think how nice it is to hear it this miserable night. Thank you!" And the little cup had the surprising mouthful of a quarter.

"There's supper for me and Ravelings," thought the man with the tin whistle, as he tipped his hat.

And before he could decide whether it would be hot dogs or soup, somebody else was smiling at him. This time it was a quiet man with gray hair.

"I always look for you when I come down the stairs," said the man, "and I like to hear those rollicking little tunes you play. It cheers a man up after a [illegible] Merry Christmas [illegible] if you'll believe me, [illegible] the little tin [illegible] tin whistle almost forgot how cold his feet were and that the rain had succeeded in making his stockings very wet and wretched. It really must have been the tune, for everybody had a coin and a bit of greeting. So he played and played and played. He thought his luck would change if he changed the tune, and he very nearly blew the breath out of him, keeping the notes dancing about in that dismal place. Ravelings and he were going to have the finest supper in all Christendom, if whistling could do it.

Some people threw in pennies, and some threw in dimes, and an occasional one dropped a quarter; but the best surprise of all came at the last (which is the way it should be, especially on Christmas Eve).

The man with the tin whistle was just about to take it away from his mouth and start home when a little, old lady, with white hair, stopped in front of him. Her eyes twinkled like frosty stars and there was something about her that made one think of a chickadee. Perhaps it was her bright, quick eyes, or maybe the way she put her head on one side and looked so exceedingly wise and happy. The man with the tin whistle thought she was the nicest old lady he had ever seen. And this was before she had said a word.

"Somebody," chirped the old lady (her voice was like a chickadee's, too, only it did not say what a chickadee does), "Somebody who went through here last year about this time has sent you a present. That somebody was very discouraged over a lot of things. And the day was discouraging, too, just like this. But you were playing away here for all you were worth, just as if the sun were shining and your feet were warm as toast. The tune was the same one you are tootling now. And that somebody decided that if you could stand and whistle a jolly air in all the cold and wet and drizzle, that it was time to make himself brace up and do something. And he did." The old lady twinkled harder than ever. The man with the tin whistle wondered what in the world she was going to say next. But she did not say anything for a minute. She whipped out a pocketbook, snapped open the top, took out a small, folded piece of paper and handed it to the man with the tin whistle. Then she snapped her pocketbook together, put it in her bag, perked her head on one side and chirped, "Merry Christmas! The man was my son." And she was gone before you could say Jack Robinson!

Ravelings and his master had a supper worth talking about that night, I can tell you! For what do you suppose that folded bit of paper was? A new, rattling ten-dollar bill! Yes, sir! And Ravelings will remember that particular Christmas Eve as long as he can wag his tail or gnaw a bone. And the man with the tin whistle declared he would never get discouraged again, no matter how dreadful the weather was. Ravelings approved of this determination and ate another chop at once.

And the man with the tin whistle still plays tunes all the way from a penny up to ten dollars!

Hermit Cookies.

One and one-half cupfuls sugar, 3 eggs, 1 cupful of butter or shortening, 3 cupfuls flour, 1 teaspoonful baking powder, 1 teaspoonful salt, 1 teaspoonful cinnamon, 1 teaspoonful allspice, 1 teaspoonful cloves, 1 teaspoonful nutmeg, ½ teaspoonful soda, 1⅓ cupfuls raisins.

Add sugar and eggs to melted butter. Beat well. Sift flour, baking powder, salt, spices and soda together. Add to butter mixture and mix well. Add plumped raisins. Drop by teaspoon on greased pan and bake in moderate oven until brown, about 20 to 25 minutes. This makes about 36 cookies.

HIS FIRST CHRISTMAS

HOGS DOWN TEN CENTS

Stock Prices Steady While Wheat Shows Small Recovery.

U. S. Bureau of Markets, Washington, D. C., for week ended Dec. 8, 1922.

LIVESTOCK AND MEATS: Chicago hog prices declined 10-15c for the week. Beef steers were 15-25c higher; butcher heifers 25-40c higher while butcher cows ranged from 35c lower to 15c higher; feeder steers 25c net higher with veal calves steady to 50c up. Fat lambs and fat ewes steady with a week ago, feeding lambs 25-50c higher with yearlings steady to 25c up. On December 8th hogs strong to 10c higher than Thursday's average. Beef steers and butcher cows and heifers active, strong to 15c higher; veal calves steady to 25c lower; stockers and feeders about steady. Fat lambs strong to 15c higher; sheep steady. December 8th Chicago prices: Hogs, top, $8.40, bulk of sales $8-8.35; medium and good beef steers $7.40-12; butcher cows and heifers $3.25-11; feeder steers $5.50-8; light and medium weight veal calves $8.50-10; fat lambs $13.25-15.50; feeding lambs $12.50-14.75; yearlings $9.50-13.25; fat ewes $4.75-7.75. Stocker and feeder shipments from 12 important markets during the week ending December 1st were: Cattle and calves 102,738; hogs 18,891; sheep 90,772. In eastern wholesale fresh meat markets beef, lamb and better grade of mutton were unchanged from prices of a week ago; veal was $1 to $2 higher with cheaper cuts of mutton weak to $2 lower and light pork loins $1 and heavy loins $1 to $2 down for the week. Dec. 8th prices good grade meats: eBef $14-17; veal $14-19; lamb $23-27; mutton $11-17; light pork loins $16-19; heavy loins $12-16.

GRAIN: Grain prices declined during the first half of the week but then worked higher. Wheat showing a fractional net advance, and corn prices a slight decline. Declines were due to selling influenced by lower Liverpool market, weakness in stock market and absence of buying support. Advances resulted from oversold condition and bullish crop news from Argentina. Prices unsettled on the 8th but closed firm, influenced largely by expectancy that President Harding's message to congress would be bullish regarding agriculture. Closing prices in Chicago cash market: No. 2 red winter wheat $1.31; No. 2 hard winter wheat $1.22; No. 2 mixed corn 72c; No. 2 yellow corn 72c; No. 3 white oats 44c. Average farm prices: No. 2 mixed corn in central Iowa 60c; No. 1 Dark Northern wheat in central North Dakota $1; No. 2 hard winter wheat in central Kansas $1. Closing future prices: Chicago May wheat $1.17¼; Chicago May corn 70c; Minneapolis May wheat $1.16⅞; Kansas City May wheat $1.08¼; Winnipeg May wheat $1.08.

DAIRY PRODUCTS: Butter markets steady to firm although markets are out of line with each other. Demand very good despite high prices. Possibility of foreign imports regarded a disturbing factor. Some Danish butter has arrived; other shipments reported on way. Domestic production holding steay for season. Closing prices 92 score butter: New York 54½c; Chicago 55½c. Cheese markets steady to firm but very quiet. Trading has been somewhat slow since further slight advances on Wisconsin cheese Boards Monday. Distributors appear confident but buyers are on market only for immediate needs. Cheese prices at Wisconsin primary markets December 7th: Twins 26½; Daisies 27¼; Longhorns 27¼; Square Prints and Young Americas 27½.

Minneapolis Closing Cash Prices.

Spring wheat—No. 1 dark northern, 1.25@1.31; No. 1 northern, 1.16@1.23; No. 1 dark hard, 1.19@1.24; No. 1 hard, 1.14@1.15; No. 1 amber durum, 1.06½@1.09; No. 1 durum, 91c@97c. ST. HILAIRE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The 8th grade boys have secured a basketball and are doing some practising.

Due to the cold and stormy weather many of the pupils of this school were absent last week.

Howard:—Ah! I have now reached the height of efficiency, I can put my socks on from either end.

The second of the series of the high school programs will be given this week by the Junior class.

The Juniors had a meeting last Thursday for the purpose of getting selections for their program which they will give this week.

Last Friday during assembly hour Supt. Anderson gave a very interesting talk on Education Week. Due to the school being very busy at present, little observance has been made of that week.

Last Thursday after school, Supt. Anderson spoke to the high school boys on the problem of athletics. Methods of raising money for the basketball team was discussed. [illegible]

Last Thursday morning the Seniors gave the first of a series of programs during the assembly period. The program was in the form of a newspaper and contained the various sections of an ordinary paper. These sections were read by several of the ones who formed themselves into a company before the audience.

Last Friday evening the English 1 class was royally entertained by Miss Moen at the Hovet home. The entertainment was in the nature of a "dress up party" each guest being dressed to represent some character in "Silas Marner." The girls did justice to the characters they represented, but the boys [illegible] were their own every day selves. Several contests formed the [illegible] amusement, after which a [illegible]

LEGAL NOTICES

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, interest, which became due and payable on the 2nd day of October, 1921, and default having been made in the payment of the further sum of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, interest, which became due and payable on the 2nd day of October, 1922, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jack Down, a widower, mortgagor, to Maude G. Mabey, mortgagee, bearing date the 2nd day of October, 1920, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 2nd day of October, 1920, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 62 of Mortgages, on Page 520, and,

Whereas, The said Maude G. Mabey, the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and,

Whereas, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Four Hundred Four and 90-100, ($404.90) Dollars, and,

Whereas, The said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, except that an action at law has been heretofore instituted in the Municipal Court of the City of Thief River Falls, in the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, by said mortgagee against said mortgagor, to recover the interest on said mortgage debt that became due and payable thereon on the 2nd day of October, 1921, and on the 2nd day of October, 1922, in which said action the said mortgagee is the plaintiff and the said mortgagor is the defendant, and that judgment was duly rendered in said action in said Court in favor of said plaintiff, (mortgagee) and against said defendant, (mortgagor) together with the costs and disbursements of said action, on the 24th day of October, 1922, and that a transcript of said judgment was thereafter and on said day, duly filed and docketed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of said Pennington County and that an execution upon said judgment was thereafter duly issued out of said District Court upon said judgment, directed to the Sheriff of said Pennington County, in which said County, said mortgagor (the defendant and judgment debtor in said action) now resides and has resided continuously during all the time since said mortgage was executed and delivered as aforesaid, and that the Sheriff of said Pennington County, duly returned said execution wholly unsatisfied and filed the same in the office of the Clerk of said District Court of said Pennington County prior to the date of this notice;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

Government Lots Three (3) and Four (4) and the East One-half (E½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) in Section Eighteen (18) in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty (40) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing 159.70 acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof, in Pennington County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 20th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $404.90, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Twenty-five Dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated December 2nd, 1922.

FOR HEALTH

What Do You Think Abou This?

In connection with the opening of the fifteenth annual sale of Christmas Seals, which starts November 22, officials of the Minnesota Public Health Association call our attention to the enormous drop in death rate from tuberculosis. Had the death rate of ten years ago continued, 972 people who are now living would have died this year from tuberculosis. The statement follows:

The death rate in 1921 from tuberculosis was lower than it has ever been in the history of the state. In 1911, 119 people out of every 100,000 in the state died of the disease. In 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died of tuberculosis. As compared with 1911, ten years ago, Minnesota is saving 972 lives a year.

In 1920, 90 people out of every 100,000 and in 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died, a saving in 1921 as compared with 1920 of 276 lives.

Dog Talk.

Our neighbor's dog came to our porch one day last week and my little sister, aged four years, was stroking his head and saying, "Maude, do you like me?" She repeated it several times, when mother said: "Maude can't talk, dear." Then Mary answered, quickly: "He can shake his head, can't he?"—Exchange.

Moon Absolutely Without Water.

There is no water on the moon. The mountains there are as dry as powder. They are desiccated far beyond the extremes of the most parched of earthly deserts. On this globe there is always a little water to be found, even in the most baked and unpromising spots. Only a few drops, perhaps, but water. On the moon there is not even one drop.—S. F. Maxwell, in the Chicago Tribune.

To Preserve Sandstone.

To preserve sandstone against decay, two methods have been suggested that have proved effective. If a piece of rotten sandstone is treated with certain chemical compounds of alcohol and silica and then exposed to moist air, the silica is deposited and forms a protective cement coating. Limewash has also been found very effective for the same purpose.—Popular Science Magazine.

REPARATIONS PARLEY ENDS

Another Meeting Is Scheduled for January 2nd, to be Held in Paris.

DIPLOMATS WORRIED

No Pact Is Signed—England Believes Occupation of Ruhr Valley Would Precipitate Another European War.

London—The London conference on German reparations, generally described as the critical conference, ended in agreement only on another conference. The next link in the long chain of the allies' struggles to get together will be forged at Paris on January 2. There will be a fortnight then left for the allies to agree upon some program.

The moratorium granted the Germans expires January 15, and the next payment on account of reparations, which Germany protests she is unable to meet, will be due on that date.

Britain Opposes French Demands.

Another futile round table session of the diplomats would seem to mean only fulfillment of the French plan for independent action, which British opinion believes would spell calamity for the tottering edifice of European prosperity and sow the seeds for a future great war.

The agreement to disagree—only temporarily, the diplomats assert—was consummated in three days, embracing four meetings of the allied premiers. The rock on which harmony foundered was the British refusal formally to countenance the French project for partial occupation of the Ruhr and important German industries. The British cabinet met and registered its refusal to co-operate with France in such measures.

Premier Mussolini's proposals for a settlement were treated courteously, as was due the head of a powerful nation, but were not taken seriously as a panacea for the German sick man of Europe. The German note was rejected unanimously with the general comment that it meant merely sparring to gain time.

LAW BREAKERS HIT TWICE

Court Holds Both Federal and State Authorities Can Prosecute.

Washington—Two cases considered by the government of major importance in the enforcement of national prohibition have been decided by the supreme court. In one of them, coming from the State of Washington, the government scored a sweeping victory, the supreme court holding that both the federal and state government can prosecute and punish the same unlawful act in the manufacture, possession, transportation or sale of intoxicating liquors.

The other case coming from California the government lost in its contention that in the enforcement of national prohibition an executive officer can impose and collect as taxes the assessment and penalties imposed by those sections of the revised statutes whic hremain unrepealed by the Volstead act and which became law while the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor was not prohibited.

Both Can Punish Same Offense.

The United States district court for western Washington dismissed a federal indictment charging manufacturing, transporting and possession of intoxicating liquors on the ground that the defendants had been tried and convicted in the state courts for the same offense. In reversing this action the supreme court held that "in the absence of special provision by congress, conviction and punishment in a state court under a state law for making, transporting and selling intoxicating liquors is not a bar to a prosecution in a court of the United States under the federal law for the same acts."

DEMS OPPOSE SUBSIDY BILL

Washington — The administration shipping bill was taken up by the senate and was subjected immediately to a baptism of fire at the hands of Democratic opponents.

Senator Jones proposed first that the senate proceed to immediate consideration of the ship bill but objection from the Democratic side blocked this until after the regular calendar had been disposed of. The commerce committee chairman next suggested that the senate meet an hour earlier, but withdrew the proposal in the face of objections.

Clara Phillips Thought Captured.

ASSASSINATE DEPUTIES

One Legislator Dead—Ulster Votes to Stay Separate.

Belfast—A bill read in the house of commons by Premier Sir James Craig of the Irish Free State, "contracts Ulster" out of the Free State government. Sir James Craig state it as useless to hold out any hopes that Ulster would go under the Dublin parliament.

Dublin — President Cosgrave announced to the Parliament that Deputy Sean Hales had been shot and killed and Deputy Patrick O'Maille, who was deputy speaker, had been wounded while they were on their way to the Parliament session.

The two victims of the shooting were on a car proceeding along the quays when they were attacked by four men with revolvers.

Both houses of the Ulster parliament, meeting in Belfast, voted unanimously to "contract out" of the Irish Free state as permitted under the Anglo-Irish treaty.

Ford Wants Permit Despite Assurance He'd Wait Joint Twin City Bid.

Minneapolis—Henry Ford, automobile manufacturer, has gone directly to the federal waterpower commission with application for a preliminary permit to develop the federal high dam in the Mississippi river between Minneapolis and St. Paul, according to a telegram from Washington.

This action was taken despite assurances given Minneapolis business interests that he would make no application unless a joint invitation were extended to him by the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul. Possibility of such an invitation is remote.

HAYNES ASKS FOR $9,000,000

Dry Chief Declares 'Crisis in Enforcement Fight' Has Been Reached.

Washington—The crisis in the federal prohibition enforcement fight has been reached, in the opinion of Commissioner Haynes, it was disclosed in reports of recent hearings before a House appropriations sub-committee.

In asking $9,000,000 for the next fiscal year for his department, Mr. Haynes told the committee that if a similar amount was allowed for prohibition enforcement continuously for five or six years, a reduction then ought to be possible, but that the critical period for enforcement was now at hand.

MEN CRUSHED—CAR CRASH

Sixty-Five Gallon Tins of Alcohol in Auto, Sheriff Says.

Albert Lea—Lying dead under their overturned automobile, bodies of W. M. Steihm, Minneapolis, and L. R. Thorpe, Spring Park, Minn., were found near here.

In the car was found 65 gallon tins of alcohol, according to county authorities. The wreck was discovered on the Jefferson highway two miles from Albert Lea by two passing residents of Northwood, Iowa.

The accident occurred on a curve in the highway, glazed by rain and cold winds. The destination of the men was believed to be Mason City, Iowa.

HARDING SPEAKS TO CONGRESS

President's Message to Congress Urges Amendment Covering Child Labor.

Washington—President Harding in his message delivered to Congress in person dealt with nearly a score of subjects, chief among them prohibition, farm credits, the transportation problem, child labor and immigration.

The executive announced his purpose to invite the governors of the states and territories to an early conference with the federal executive authority with a view to adopting definite policies of national and state cooperation in administering the prohibition laws. He says the day is unlikely to come when the prohibition amendment will be repealed and that the nation should adopt its course accordingly.

HARDING'S PROGRAM.

Greater credit facilities for agriculture and livestock interests.

Abolition of the railroad labor board and substitution of a labor division of the interstate commerce commission with power to enforce its decisions against both carriers and employees.

As an alternative, reorganization of the board by removing all but the public representatives.

Steps to prevent strikes that threaten the public welfare.

A conference of governors to discuss prohibition enforcement; a strict enforcement of the prohibition law.

Pooling of freight cars under a central agency.

Merger of railroad lines into systems for the purpose of economy and interchange of equipment.

A constitutional amendment to abolish child labor.

A constitutional amendment to restrict issuance of tax exempt securities by states.

Federal registration of immigrant aliens and establishment of immigration boards abroad to bar undesirables.

Attention to the wide difference between the cost of production and the price paid by the ultimate consumer.

FREE STATE EXECUTE SEVEN

Government Executes De Valera's Lieutenants as Reprisal for Parliament Leader's Assassination.

London—The Dublin correspondent of the Evening Standard reports that a party of men entered the Mercers hospital and shot a Free State soldier lying in one of the beds, in reprisal for the executions of Rory O'Connor and Liam Mellowes.

Dublin officials announced that Rory O'Connor and Liam Mellowes, together with two other Irish insurgents, were executed in Mount Joy prison.

O'Connor and Mellowes were leaders of the band of Irish insurgents that held the Four Courts building in Dublin in its stand against the Free State troops last June. Each was taken prisoner when the building was captured after a three day siege.

WHEAT CONCERN ORGANIZED

Minneapolis Co-operative Agency Expects to Handle 100,000,000 Bushels First Year.

Minneapolis—The largest co-operative wheat sales agency in the world, established, its organizers said, to handle 100,000,000 bushels of wheat its first year, was formed in Minneapolis at a meeting at the Curtis hotel of the trustees of the Northwest Wheat Growers association, representing five states, and the trustees of five other co-operative bodies, representing five other states.

The 30 trustees decided upon the sales agency and were discussing the location of the headquarters, division being upon whether it should be at Minneapolis or Kansas City.

27 BLOCKS SWEPT BY FIRE

Shipping District Periled; Damage May Be in Excess of $15,000,000.

Astoria, Ore.—The business district of Astoria was laid in ruins by a fire and despite efforts of the fire department and reinforcements from Portland, swept 27 blocks, causing a los. estimated at between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000.

The fire district from the river, five blocks south to Exchange street, and east and west between Fourteenth and Tenth streets, has been wiped out, and the flames have extended beyond Exchange street. Most of the city's business houses are in that district.

AUTO STEALING RING TRAPPED

Two Months' Hunt Clears Mystery of Inter-State Traffic.

Minneapolis—An automobile theft ring which took orders for cars, stole them in the Twin Cities to keep the supply equal to the demand, and delivered the automobiles to customers in North Dakota was uncovered after two months' work by the police.

According to Frank Brunskill, captain of police, the stolen cars were all of expensive makes and brought good pirces.

Twenty cars out of 40 alleged to have been stolen by the ring have been recovered in North Dakota during the last three days, and three others have been turned over to the police by customers who believed they had been stolen.

The ring has used business methods, stealing only expensive cars and then only after a market had been established. Investigation, carried on in North Dakota by Detectives Bryant and Ohman, and in Minneapolis by Detectives Glarum and Wicklund, led to a garage where the work was done.

ZBYSZKO WINS TWO FALLS

Giant Pole Loses Second Fall in 16 Minutes, 20 Seconds.

Minneapolis—Winning by two falls out of three, Stanislaus Zbyszko, the "master," defeated John Freberg, heavyweight wrestling championship contender, at the Kenwood Armory. The end came with Freberg in agony on the canvas while Zbyszko threatened to break his leg with a toe hold.

The third and deciding fall came in 9 minutes and 42 seconds, but for at least two of the minutes Freberg tried to loosen the merciless hold the giant Pole had clasped on his left leg and toes. The Swedish champion finally was forced to concede the fall, and the match.

Zbyszko took the first fall in 38:35 with a reverse arm lock and crotch hold after Freberg had been the aggressor all the way.

REWARD STUDENT'S HEROISM

V. E. Smith's Feat of Stopping Runaway Car Reported to Officials.

Minneapolis—An act of heroism by Vernon E. Smith, University of Minnesota student who earns his way through school by being a tower man for the Great Northern railway, is to be rewarded by the company.

Smith saved the company the probable loss of thousands of dollars when he climbed upon a runaway freight car and stopped it within 100 feet of a train. The incident, which occurred at Granite Falls, Minn., on Thanksgiving day, was brought to the attention of Ralph Budd, president of the Great Notrhern.

Compromise is Substituted for Madden Amendment in Committee.

Washington—Consideration of the administration shipping bill was virtually completed by the Senate commerce committee with the elimination of the Madden amendment attached by the House and substitution of the Willis-Lenroot compromise, and with the approval of more than half a dozen other important changes.

The measure will be approved finally by the committee and presented by Chairman Jones to the Senate and the long and hard Senate fight will begin.

FOR "WAR TO THE DEATH"

Free State Issues "Shoot to Kill" Edict—Troops Continue Drive.

Dublin—Ireland prepared for a "war to the death" between Free State forces and the republican insurgents.

While the public was still stunned by the "eye for an eye" executions of Rory O'Connor and other insurgent leaders, full significance of the insurgent manifesto that "we will fight to the last man" was reached.

Free State troops, continuing their drive against republican strongholds, recaptured Kenmare. They staged a successful "enveloping" attack from land and sea.

WAGES OF TELEGRAPHERS CUT

Decision Corrects Inequalities Arising Under U. S. Operation.

Chicago—A decision lopping about $1,500,000 a year from the hourly rates of the pay of 11,000 telegraphers on 11 Western railroads was handed down by the United States Railroad Labor board. The decision, effective January 1, 1923, was given at the request of the railroads to correct existing inequalities in the rates of pay of employes in the station and telegraph service on the roads affected.

Lespedeza Seeding Machinery at Work on Farm of E. M. Percy, Secretary-Treasurer of the Lespedeza Seed Growers' Association, St. Francisville, Louisiana.

More than 20,000 bushels of high-grade lespedeza, or "Japan clover," seed was marketed during the season of 1922 by the Louisiana Farm Bureau Lespedeza Seed Growers' Association, Inc., the first functioning commodity marketing organization organized under the direction of the farm bureau in Louisiana.

Lespedeza seed growing is a highly specialized industry, confined to a limited area of Louisiana, Mississippi and certain sections of Tennessee and Alabama. The 20,000 bushels handled by the Louisiana association is approximately one-third of the entire production of the South.

Many Orders Filled.

Under the direction of A. G. Hamilton, marketing specialist of the Louisiana State university, the association filled a total of 1,250 orders from all sections of the United States, and although selling on a falling market managed to maintain a fair percentage of profit for its members.

FARMERS PROFIT BY POSTING THEMSELVES

Those Who Have Wool on Hand Are Warned Not to Sell Without Knowledge of Market.

Farmers of Minnesota who still have wool on hand are warned by F. L. French, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation, not to sell without full knowledge of market values. Eastern speculators, Mr. French says, are obtaining shipment from Mid-Western states at bargain prices, despite the fact that on the central markets they are bidding against each other for supplies.

"The farm bureau," says Mr. French, "has worked long and hard for a fair tariff on wool and the schedule now prevailing has strengthened the market. Farmers should profit by keeping posted on market values and not selling for less than the wool actually is worth. Recent wool pools have not only netted growers better prices, but they have served to stabilize prices. Every sale now made under the true market value tends to discount this important effect of the pool.

"More than three-fourths of the 2,700,000 pounds of wool consigned by Ohio producers for co-operative sale through the Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers' association have been sold. Sale of a large quantity of fine wool at the top market price on the date of sale was also announced."

"The wool market is strong, and there seems to be an actual shortage in some lines of wool," said Mark Smith, wool marketing expert of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation, on his return from a trip to the Boston market.

U. S. GRAIN GROWERS OPEN SALES AGENCY

Minneapolis Office Placed in Charge of T. H. Hagen, a Farmer of Lakeville, Minn.

resident E. H. Cunningham of the ted States Grain Growers, Inc., announces the opening of a sales agency t Minneapolis. The Minneapolis chamber of commerce approved the application of the United States Grain Growers Sales company of Minneapolis in October to do business through the grain exchange there.

The doors of the Minneapolis sales agency of the United States Grain Growers were opened for business on Wednesday morning, October 11, under the management of T. H. Hagen, Lakeville, Minn. The Minneapolis house of the farmers co-operative grain marketing agency will handle the grain of the Northwestern states under contract to the United States Grain Growers.

Two cars of grain from North Dakota were the first to be sold. They belonged to J. T. Fas of Divide county.

Sales company of Minneapolis is incorporated under the laws of Minnesota.

The United States Grain Growers Sales company of Minneapolis has an initial capital stock of $25,000 fully paid up.

The United States Grain Growers, Inc., has approximately 8,500 members in the spring wheat area, of which number 5,000 are in North Dakota, 3,100 in Minnesota and the remainder in South Dakota. Contracts signed by these members represent more than 15,000,000 bushels of grain, which they have agreed to sell through the agency for at least five years. The agency will handle grain of all kinds.

T. H. Hagen, a farmer of Lakeville, Minn., who has been selected as Minneapolis manager, has had 25 years of successful experience in the grain business at Minneapolis and Duluth. He retired two years ago to operate his farm.

In announcing the policy of the management of the Northwest sales agency, President J. F. Reed says:

"It is the hope of the directors that much of the grain marketed will be handled direct from country elevators to millers and exporters. But in order to dispose of all grain coming to the company, a seat on the Minneapolis chamber of commerce has been obtained.

"It is the hope of directors of the Minneapolis agency that the demand of grain producers for their own marketing agency will be fully met. It will become an important factor in the grain market."

CLUB WORK MAKES BETTER MEN AND WOMEN

Boys' and Girls' Pets at South St. Paul Bring $32,388.24.

Cattle, hogs, and sheep exhibited by Minnesota club boys and girls at their annual livestock show at South St. Paul sold for $32,388.24. The cattle brought $28,455.32; hogs $1,326.03; and sheep $1,606.90. The money paid out in prizes for the juniors over and above the costs of medals, loving cups, watches, and expenses of trips to the International Livestock show in Chicago, amounted to about $1,500.

Of this grand total, $1,000 in cash was paid to Joseph Isaksen of Springfield, Brown county, for his Hereford steer, Bright Lad, which was the grand champion baby beef of the show. Joe is 18 years old, has been in club work three years, and has just entered the School of Agriculture at University Farm.

Financial rewards, important, even necessary, as they may be, are only means to an end in club work, and not the end. The making of better men and women, and not the making of better crops and animals, is primarily the impelling motive and force behind county extension work.

SOME DRAINAGE VERY COSTLY.

Minnesota has 20,000,000 acres on which artificial drainage of some sort will have to be installed, according to G. R. V. Elliott of the agricultural engineering division at University Farm. "It is a job that will cost approximately a billion of dollars before it is finished," says Mr. Elliott, and then he adds that it is the biggest engineering job in the state at the present time.

Drainage problems are of so much importance that the state maintains two departments for their control and study. The first is the department of drainage and waters with offices at the old state capitol, St. Paul, in charge of E. V. Willard, state commissioner of drainage and waters. The second department is in the agricultural engineering division of the college of agriculture. Co-operating with the two service arms is the United States department of agriculture which has delegated D. G. Miller, a senior drainage engineer, to conduct various investigations at the Minnesota Experiment Station.

Two research projects are being carried on under the leadership of Mr. Elliott. The first is work on the drainage of peat lands. This is being done in co-operation with other divisions at University Farm and with various co-operators over the state. The principal project is on the farm of Dr. J. S. Rydell in the Lake Minnetonka country. Expenses of these projects are largely borne by the co-operators.

The second project in charge of Mr. Elliott is an investigation of the various soil types of the state upon which water control is a material factor, and the actual measurement of the movement of sub-surface water in such soils. From this will be worked out an engineering design for each soil type suitable for the general character of the crop that will be grown upon it.

"There has been very little information of this kind in the state up to the present time," says Mr. Elliott, "yet it is the fundamental upon which all drainage works should be based. In brief, it is a working out of the number of dollars it should cost to drain any particular type of soil. If $45 an acre will do the job, the farmer should not be compelled to spend $55. If $15 is enough, he should not have a system costing $60 an acre. On the other hand, he should not be induced to put in an inefficient system costing $35 an acre when the expenditure of a few dollars more would change the inefficient system into a valuable one. In our work through the state we have found the inefficient [illegible]

SIX GOOD RULES FOR WINTER DAIRY FEEDING

Take Chill off Drinking Water, Feed Silage, Clover or Alfalfa Hay.

E. A. Hanson of University Farm, dairy livestock specialist with the agricultural extension division, says that one way to secure a higher production from the dairy cows in winter months is to make the winter conditions for the cows as summer-like as possible. The milk flow is almost invariably increased when dairy cows are turned on pasture in the spring. The conditions then approach the ideal. The weather is neither too hot nor too cold, there is plenty of fresh, cool water and generally an abundance of green, luxuriant grain, furnishing the most palatable and nutritious feed that can be provided for milk cows.

To make the winter conditions as much like those of spring and summer as possible, the dairyman must have clean, well lighted and comfortable barns for his stock, says Mr. Hanson. A succulent feed such as silage or roots must be fed to take the place of grass, and also clover or alfalfa hay and a palatable grain mixture. An abundance of fresh water from water cups in the stall is best. If the cows must drink outside the chill should be taken off the water by the use of a tank heater.

Mr. Hanson has prepared a list of suggested rations to meet feed supplies and conditions on different farms. The extension division will mail copies of this list to dairymen who apply for it. Mr. Hanson lays down six general feeding rules as follows:

1. Feed all the clover or alfalfa hay and silage the cows will eat up clean.
2. Feed one pound of grain for each three or four pounds of milk produced.
3. Provide at least three varieties of grain in the mixture, one of which is fairly high in protein.
4. Weigh the milk from each cow daily and feed according to production. It pays.
5. Provide an abundance of fresh water. Ice water and high milk production do not go hand in hand.
6. Provide access to salt daily. Good results are obtained by adding one pound of salt to the grain ration for each 100 pounds of mixture. Salt increases the desire for water, and makes the feed more palatable.

Mr. Hanson's motto for securing greater efficiency in dairy production is, "Weed, feed, and breed."

Special Fare for Short Course.

The railroad companies have announced half fare from Minnesota points to and from St. Paul and Minneapolis during Farmers' and Homemakers' Short Course week at University Farm January 1 to 6. Persons also planning to attend the annual meeting of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation January 2, 3, and 4 are also entitled to the reduced rate advantage. The one and one-half fare is offered on the "certificate plan," and to secure it persons must first secure a certificate from their station agent. This should be done when the "going" ticket is purchased. No refund of fare will be made on account of failure either to obtain a proper certificate or to have the certificate validated.

The opening session of the statewide farm bureau meeting will be held in the auditorium at University Farm on Tuesday, January 2. Secretary Henry Wallace of the president's cabinet has been invited and will be present if it is not found necessary to revise his plans before that date. Governor J. A. O. Preus will be one of the speakers. J. W. Coverdale and J. F. Reed, farm bureau officials, and other farm leaders of the day will also be on the program.

Alfalfa is the best leguminous crop for ranges which are to be left for several years. It must be cut frequently in order to keep tender growth available.

That corn for seed is stored in a room that is well-ventilated is of more importance than the kind of sling or rack that is used to suspend it, say crops men of the University. Even where artificial heat is used to help dry out the ears, ventilation is no less necessary.

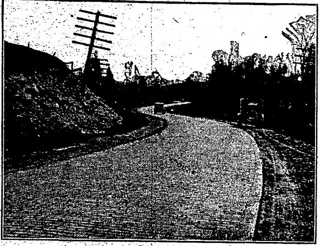
OUTLINE OF BIG ROAD-BUILDING PROGRAM FOR UNITED STATES

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Fifteen to twenty years of building good roads lie ahead of the United States. Under the program which the country has adopted there will be built, during that time, 180,000 miles of improved highways which will constitute the federal-aid highway system and an equal or greater mileage of state and local roads. When the great job is done, the transportation facilities of the country will far exceed those of any other nation, past or present, in the world. The highways of the ancient Romans, whose fame has come down through the centuries, will pale by comparison.

Details of this vast road-building program were placed before the Highway Education board at its recent conference in Washington by state highway engineers and officials of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, to whom has been entrusted the work of planning and supervising the construction of federal-aid highways. The plan was presented to enable the board to proceed authoritatively with its work of devising aids for schools and colleges to which road-builders of the country are turning for competent highway engineers.



An Improved Highway in Muskingum County, Ohio.

Aggregate Cost $3,000,000,000.

Officials of the bureau place the aggregate cost of the federal-aid program alone at about $3,000,000,000, spread over the twenty-year period. They base this estimate on an average cost of $17,000 per mile. The average cost, in turn, takes into consideration all classes of improved roadways from the cheapest to the most expensive types. Approximately one-third of the proposed system, or 60,000 miles of improved highways, already are either built or building.

The program is a new one. Up to comparatively recent years, road-building in the United States had been conducted without special regard to a national system. Highways had been constructed where needed without considering whether they would link up in the most effective manner with the whole network of roads to be spread over the nation. Engineers had sought more to meet immediate and local demands than the broader requirements of the states and nation.

Roads Fit National System.

The present federal-aid road-building program, officials of the bureau state, will contemplate the construction of only such roads as fit into the national program and contribute to the national system. At the same time the roads will be so selected as to serve the most important local requirements. With marked modifications, the system adopted in building the railways of the country will be borne in mind in the construction of the country's new highways. There will be main lines of highway communication between centers and thousands of miles of feeder roads, reaching back into the more sparsely settled regions and into the rich agricultural sections, to tap areas whose population and products will flow over the new system.

New roads will be planned and built—thousands of miles of them—where they will fit in most advantageously with the entire program. The bureau is continuing its research work into most efficient methods of road building, including the character and wearing power of materials, resisting qualities of varying sub-soils, etc., and has amassed a considerable store of valuable information all of which will be available for the highway engineer of tomorrow, whom the board is seeking to have educated in practical and modern methods.

PLAN TO STORE VEGETABLES

Proper Arrangement Means Saving of Much Money for Farmer—Cleanliness Is First.

Proper storage of vegetables means a saving in expense for farmers and also for town people, but vegetables will not keep through the winter unless some attention is given to the way and place in which they are stored. The common storage is the house cellar.

The first consideration should be cleanliness when storing perishable foods, and all left-overs from the year before, rubbish and old sawdust should be removed and the cellar aired and scrubbed before putting in new vegetables. Roots or tubers are better when kept on slats placed a few inches above the basement floor as this allows the air to circulate freely and prevents early rot.

USEFUL GIFT FOR CHRISTMAS

Kansas Agriculturist Suggests Sled Load of Purebred Pigs, Calves and Chickens.

A Kansas agriculturist has suggested a new kind of Christmas present for farm boys and girls. He thinks it would be a good stunt for Santa Claus to bring a sled load of purebred pigs, calves and chickens and leave them for children along with the dolls, red trains, skates, drums and other toys. Purebred poultry farms are often started from a trio of chickens, and valuable herds of cattle from a calf.

MARKET HOME-GROWN FEEDS

Department of Agriculture Says One of Best Methods Is Through Good Dairy Cows.

One of the best methods of marketing home-grown feeds is through good dairy cows, says the United States Department of Agriculture. It displays in a convincing manner the results that come from giving the feed to different herds.

The results show that:

If you sell feeds to dairy cows you have a constant market.

If you sell feeds to high-producing dairy cows you have a good and constant market.

If you sell feeds to purebred, high-producing dairy cows you have a double market—a market for calves and a market for milk.

That it pays to know whether a cow is a good, poor, or high producer is shown by records of cow-testing associations. In one association the poorest cow produced in a year only [illegible] and overhead expenses her owner had only the manure, skim milk, and calf. To get rid of such cows is one of the principal objects of cow-testing associations.

Save Steps on Farm.

Careful arrangement of buildings on the farm means the saving of many steps during the year. If you have to walk 100 yards extra distance in doing chores night and morning, it makes a total of more than 40 miles a year.

Care of Asparagus.

Cut off and destroy the tops of asparagus plants and apply barnyard manure. In this way you'll destroy insects and prepare the field for greater production.

MARIGOLDS

By AGNES GRAHAM BROGAN

(©, 1922, by Western Newspaper Union.)

"It is strange," said Gerry, "the way I love marigolds. I just cannot pass a garden where they grow without stopping; and my paintings are simply full of them. I think it's partly the everlasting cheer of the golden-yellow—or maybe the artistic old fashioned appearance of them. I'm painting a picture now, David, a gray dull old seaside garden—with a glow of marigolds beside the stone wall. What do you think? That Tommy Weston has asked me to marry him; it's the third time."

David slowly removed his pipe;

"And you refused him again, of course, Geraldine. It is odd, indeed, that Tommy cannot realize the importance of art as a career."

"Isn't it?" cried Gerry. "A man of sense would know that when one has decided talent and when one has made all preparations to study abroad that one would not be likely to throw it all up," Gerry laughed, "to darn his socks."

"You are going abroad?" David's tone was casual.

"Oh, yes, indeed; just as soon as mother feels resigned to my prolonged absence and when I have finished my garden picture. David, would it not be wonderful, if it should be hung, next fall?"

"Wonderful," agreed David. He stood up before her, a tall figure in comfortable gray tweed. "But suppose you should happen to fall in love with some good looking chap, Gerry, before that anticipated trip abroad?

"I won't fall in love," Gerry assured him earnestly, "because, you see, David, I won't give myself a chance. Of course no one could possibly fall in love with Tommy. And all other chance-coming men I shall avoid. I have seen too much wasted talent in marriage—take the Winstead girl who went to school with me. She was a true genius in music—and along came that colorless Don Campbell—and now she's his dish washer. Do you realize what the world has lost? No. I shall stick to art, David dear, and some day you will say proudly to your children, "This picture of the—Gerry's laugh rippled— 'well, of the marigolds was done by an old friend of mine, now famous across two continents.'"

"And will the famous lady remember her old commonplace David?" he asked whimsically.

"Always, everywhere, the lonely famous lady will remember David," she said. He sat long after she left him and the smile of consideration upon his face did not sadden it.

"I have been thinking," he told Geraldine, upon her next visit in his hospitable porch, "that I'd like to make this place over, Gerry. A man cannot live always as his people have lived before him. Times change. I need a more modern home. And who can tell? I may not always be alone, dear. So I thought I'd take advantage of any time you might be able to spare, before your departure, in helping me with the details of remodelling.

It was interesting planning the renovation of David's old home—matching quaint blue dishes with lovely dull blue paper; Gerry indulged her dreams as she had not been privileged to indulge them in her mother's comfortably livable house. David preferred to lay out his own garden.

"We will have a stone wall like that of your sea-side picture," he told her, "and marigolds will riot around it."

When David went away on a prolonged business trip, taking him to California, Geraldine began preparations for her own trip to Europe. Strangely she did not feel the overwhelming enthusiasm she had recently known, herself. She wished that David would come home before it should be time for her to depart. No word had come from this friend of her lifetime. She wondered, strangely wistful, if he might have met in California the woman who was one day to occupy his home which she and David had created. Then came a line from him. He was on his way home. It was a disappointingly brief line.

"The marigolds we set out in the garden may need attention," he wrote, "perhaps you might use them as models, while you give them your care." Such an unsatisfactory message, Gerry read it, troubled. Perhaps, she thought, he was bringing the mistress of his home with him, and wished everything to be at its best for her sake. With a man as resolute as David such a thing might happen. Gerry went, rather forlornly, to care for the marigolds. The second afternoon she took her sketching material. David's old housekeeper, inside, looked out at the girl curiously. Afternoon faded into twilight.

"I will stay here," Gerry told the woman. "I've planned to leave tomorrow and I want to say good-by to David's garden."

Her voice caught over the last word—a career seemed very far away, visionary, unreal. Then something very real happened to Gerry. Two strong arms enfolded her—arms so masterful that there was no use trying to loosen their hold. Gerry did not try.

"David," she asked, instead, "did you find the woman you want for your [illegible]

POULTRY

RUNTY HENS NOT DESIRABL

Investigation Shows at Least One F in Fifteen Is Undersized and Hence Unprofitable.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Runtiness is not so conspicuous in the poultry flock as it is among other farm animals, yet it is a factor to be considered, and it is possible that in some cases it is of great importance. Certain it is that undersized fowls are not desirable, and it has been the experience of many farmers and poultrymen that they can be almost, if not entirely, eliminated. This is the conclusion that may be arrived at after a study of the figures and comments obtained by a preliminary investigation of runts and their remedy conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Good Feeding and Care Will Practically Eliminate Runtiness.

The information was obtained from nearly 1,000 farmers to whom questionnaires were sent. Although these farmers were considered to be better than the average, they reported that 7 per cent of their animals were undersized to such a degree as to be called runty. This means, if the percentage holds true for all farms of the country, that more than 14,000,000 animals, not including feathered stock, are runts. In addition 6¼ per cent of the poultry on these farms was undersized, which means that there is, perhaps, even a higher percentage for the total farms of the United States.

Inbreeding and poor matings, as a cause, are the principal factors distinguishing runtiness in feathered stock from that in other farm animals. It is the consensus of opinion of 474 poultry owners, in all parts of the country, that the following causes are chiefly responsible for the runts found in feathered flocks:

	Per cent.
Poor feeding	17.9
Inbreeding and poor matings	13.7
Inferior breeding stock	13.1
Parasites, especially lice	12.4
Neglect	11.4
Poor housing	7.0
Late hatching	6.5
Overcrowding	5.9
Disease (roup, diarrhea, etc.)	5.3
Low vitality of chicks	3.4
Selecting poor eggs	3.4
Total	100.0

Early hatching is of more importance, according to the comments of poultrymen, than the figures in the table indicate. It appears that relatively few flock owners are familiar with the advantages of early hatching, but those who do their hatching early find it a distinct benefit. For instance, one farmer says, "Last year all of my chickens hatched after the first of June were runts. Those before that were normal and were laying in October. The same care and feed were given to all of them." Another observes, "When I get my chicks hatched in April and May I do not have runts in my flock." Still another estimates that one-third of late hatches are runty. "Hatch no chicks later than May 1," he says.

Of equal interest are the warnings against inbreeding. "We have no runts in our poultry" is the statement of a Virginia farmer, who adds, "We buy purebred cocks from a different strain every year." "Keep purebred fowls and change the sire every year" is the injunction of another poultryman, and his experience is typical of many others.

Farmers' experiences with early hatching tally with the results of experiments by the bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. In these experiments the early-hatched chicks showed a marked superiority over those purposely hatched late. There was a noticeably steady degradation in size and type of the late chicks compared with those hatched early.

From these side lights it is easily seen that the questions of runtiness and good live-stock management are closely related and are tied up with economic factors of great importance.

BIRD LOVERS FORM LEAGUE

Two Hundred Thousand Australians in Organization to Promote Knowledge Among Children.

About 200,000 Australians are enrolled in the Bird Lovers' league. Among the ways in which Australian children are brought into line with the ideals of the bird lovers who started this movement are competitions in drawing birds from memory, the imitation of bird calls, and the identification of birds by name. At a public gathering in Melbourne recently, colored chalks were given the children and they were allowed five minutes to do a blackboard sketch. The winner showed an alert and life-like kookaburra, or laughing jackass. In the test which called for imitations of birds one of the best was that of the curious laugh of the kookaburra, which rings through the Australian bush and is often heard in the outskirts of townships. The third test, the identification of birds, was conducted by the showing of 15 lantern slides, each being thrown on a screen for 15 seconds, during which time the competitors had to write down the correct name.

Chas. Sandberg Killed

Charley Sandberg was instantly killed last week at a mine location near Eveleth when he was run down by an engine as he walked along the tracks. From information received it is understood he was on the tracks during a time when no trains were supposed to be moving. Being partially deaf, he did not hear the approaching engine which passed over his body.

Charley, who is survived by his widow and two grown children, was very well known here as he was raised on a farm west of town. For a number of years he farmed his own place until he sold out and bought a residence in town. He resided in St. Hilaire until he and family moved to Eveleth about five years ago. Charley was a quiet, unobtrusive man, well liked by all who knew him, and many friends in this community will be pained to learn of his tragic end.

Funeral services were conducted Monday at Crookston, and interment was made in the family plot there beside the remains of his father and mother.

Sympathy of numerous friends in this community is extended to the bereaved family and other relatives.

Carl Nelson was down at Fargo over Sunday to appear before an army medical board in regard to his application for compensation for injuries received while with the U. S. Army in France.

Walter Soderberg, who has been employed by a power company operating in and near Seattle, the past summer, has accepted a position with the same concern in one of their California plants.

Ernest Johnson has resigned his position at Grand Forks and accepted a place as window trimmer with a Woolworth store at Iowa City, Iowa.

Supt. C. Cartier was up yesterday from Red Lake Falls to read the electric meters.

Basket Social

There will be a basket social at the W. D. Ewings home, south of St. Hilaire, on Friday evening, December 29th, for the school of Dist. No. 227. Girls are requested to bring baskets. All are welcome.

Children's Program

A children's program and festival will be held at the Black River Chapel on Wednesday evening, Dec. 27th. The program will start at 7:00.

Owing to bad conditions of roads, there was not as good attendance at the meeting of the Community Club last Friday as has marked previous meetings. A very good program was given, and an excellent exhibit of the work done by the school children was shown.

Next Saturday evening marks the end of a three months sales campaign at the Nelson Merc. Co., store. The large cabinet phonograph offered as a prize will be given away that evening.

The population of St. Hilaire will be considerably augmented by the end of this week when scores of teachers and others will be home to spend their Christmas vacation.

At a meeting of the creamery board held yesterday, Will Kruse was re-elected to the position of helper for the coming year, which action by the board meets with the approval of everybody in the territory.

A. S. Wilson has had electric light and power service installed at his barn, formerly the old creamery building.

The Musical Coterie was entertained at a sleigh ride party by Miss Martha Swenson last evening.

Why not give a year's subscription to the old home paper to some absent one as a Christmas gift?

Loses Home By Fire

Word was received this week by Mrs. O. Sherva from her son, Albert at Bemidji, stating he had had the misfortune to lose his home by fire. Mrs. Berg went away from home for a short time leaving the children in bed. When she returned the house was a mass of flames, and the children were rescued with difficulty. Nothing of the household effects or clothing was saved. There was no insurance carried on the property.

The loss is particularly hard for Mr. Berg as he had but lately bought the home, and had gone to considerable expense in matter of re-finishing and for new furniture.

THE LOCAL FIELD

Happenings of the Week, Briefly Told

A. Satterberg received a carload of egg size coal this week.

Miss. Hattie Johnson was at Thief River last Friday afternoon and evening.

Miss Blanche Hoff, who teaches at Litchfield, arrived home Monday to spend her Christmas vacation.

Look over the money saving prices on groceries as advertised by Oscar Evenson in this issue.

The north-bound train was over two hours late Saturday due to late connections from the main lines.

Miss Hulda Gigstad, who teaches at Moorhead, is expected home the last of the week for her holiday vacation.

There will be no show next Sat. & Sun. Don't forget "MOONLIGHT FOLLIES" December 30th.

The postoffice force will appreciate very much if Christmas package mailing is done early, both as to date and time of day.

J. S. Roy left Saturday for Fergus Falls where he was called to serve on the federal jury during winter term of court.

In spite of rather uncertain roads, the Crookston—Thief River bus made its regular trip again Monday after being off a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Omlid and family arrived from Aneta, N. D., for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. Reiersgaard.

There is no morning passenger train on this line this week for the very good reason that the morning train arrives during the afternoon usually from two to three hours late.

Christmas Program

The M. E. Church will have its annual Christmas program and tree at the Imperial Hall next Sunday evening. The program will start at 8:00.

Steenerson Ill

Congressman Halvor Steenerson was taken suddenly ill while on the floor of the house at Washington Monday. It is feared he suffered a stroke of apoplexy.

A later report states Mr. Steenerson had suffered from an attack of indigestion from which he was recovering and was able to be up again.

Arragements are being made for supplying the Northwest with 60 per cent of its usual hard coal supply by shipping it over an all rail route in lieu of over the Great Lakes where navigation is officially closed.

In contrast to the bitter weather which has prevailed the past two weeks, the mercury crawled up to above freezing this afternoon.

Ed Dahl and Melvin Sherva, who are attending the University of Minnesota, arrived home on the late train today to spend their holiday vacation.

Ernest Wheeler drove up today from Red Lake Falls to attend to some small wiring jobs about town.

Misses Olympbia Moen and Lulubell Jerpe were at Thief River between trains Saturday.

School closes Friday for the annual holiday vacation. Miss Moen leaves for her home at Clarkfield, and Miss Jerpe for her home at Hector to spend Christmas. All other members of the teaching staff reside locally.

And. Norander Is Dead

Word was received yesterday that Andrew Norander had passed away Monday at the home of his sons near Roosevelt where he had resided the past three years. Mr. Norander was one of the pioneer citizens of this community, he having homesteaded along the river above what is now the Anton Aubol farm, close unto forty years ago. Being a carpenter by trade, he moved into town during sawmill days, and made his home in the Addition until he sold out and went to live with his sons at Roosevelt.

Mr. Norander is survived by his widow, four sons and two daughters. The sons are Albert, Ernest, George and Andy, all living in vicinity of Roosevelt. The daughters are Mrs. Chas. Sandberg, Eveleth., and Annie, who resides in Iowa.

The remains will be shipped here Friday, and funeral services will be held Saturday. Interment will be made in the family plot in the cemetery north of town.

Schedule Game

The high school basketball team have scheduled a game with the Greenbush high school team to be played on the local floor Thursday evening, Dec. 28. Greenbush has a fast team this year, and a real fast game is in prospect.

Miss Lilly Gunstad, who has taught school at Cottonwood S. D., is expected home this week after having visited briefly at the home of her sister Mrs. O. Young at Forest Lake while enroute.

R. E. Stephenson went Monday afternoon to Crookston to attend to business matters in connection with his position with the G. N. He returned Tuesday morning.

CHAPTER XIII

—13—

The Fate of a Prisoner.

The Seminole headed straight out into the lake. No sound of movement or speech reached West's ears from the cabin, and he settled down into moody forgetfulness, still staring dully out through the open port. What was to be, would be, but there was nothing for him to do but wait for those who held him prisoner, to act. He was still seated there, listless, incapable even of further thought, when the door was suddenly unlocked. He had barely time to arise to his feet, when the man with the red mustache stepped within, facing him, as he pushed tightly shut the door behind. The fellow's eyes saw the severed rope on the floor, and he smiled, kicking the strands aside contemptuously.

"Smart enough for that, were you?" he asked. "Well, I would have taken them off myself, if I had thought about it. How did you manage? Oh, I see; rather a bright trick, old man."

The man's tone, and air of confidence was impressive; beyond doubt he felt that the cards were all in his hands. West drew in his breath sharply. "May I ask a question or two?"

"Fire away; I'll answer as I please."

"Who is the woman on board?"

"Mary, you mean? Hobart's wife."

"She came from the place on Wray street last night in an auto?"

"Yes; I brought her along myself."

"Alone?"

"There were two of us, Mark and I—why, what are you driving at?"

"Just putting some broken threads together. Then Natalie Coolidge is not on this yacht?"

"I should say not. What would we be doing with her out here?"

"Where is she, then?"

"Oh, I begin to see what brought you aboard so easily, West. You thought we had the lady kidnaped, and was sailing off with her. Some stunt, that. What put the idea in your head?"

West hesitated a moment, but decided a truthful answer would do no harm.

"I knew an automobile had driven out of the alley back of Mike's place; and that a woman was in it. When I got away a little later, I picked up a message—a note which had been dropped. It was written in a woman's hand but unsigned—"

"The little cat! She dropped it?"

"It seems so. You forgot yourself that time. So she was with you, was she?"

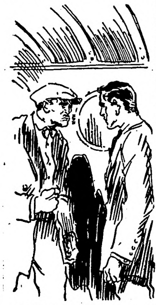
"I don't know what you mean. I told you who were with me. Go on; what did the note say?"

"It was only a request for the police to search the Seminole at once."

"Oh, that's the way the wind blows. But you preferred to tackle the job yourself. I am certainly obliged to you, West."

"You have no reason to be. I took that note to the police, and they are on the case. They are combing the city right now for Hobart, and if they get him, this bubble of yours is likely to be pricked."

"H—l, they won't get him. There isn't a fly-cop in Chicago who could locate Jim in a week, and as for Natalie, believe me she is quite able to take care of herself."



"If You Want to Live, Keep Quiet."

"But where is she?"

"At home, of course, if you must know—'Fairlawn,' isn't that the name of the place? We left her there on our way to Jackson park."

"Then the girl was with you?"

"Spilled the beans, didn't I? That comes from talking too much. However, there is no harm done. Sure she left with us, but we dropped her out at Fairlawn. It was her machine we were riding in. Say, you've questioned me about enough, so let up. Listen now—you will stay in this stateroom until we get ready to let you out. Don't try any funny business, either, for if you do, you are going to get hurt. There is a guard outside in the cabin, and we are not afraid to shoot out here on the lake. Nobody knows where you are, West; so, if you want to live, keep quiet—that's my advice."

He slipped out, closing and locking the door behind him. West, more thoroughly confused than ever over the situation in which he found himself, paced the brief length of the narrow stateroom, and then paused to stare moodily out of the port.

He had learned little of the slightest value; merely that Natalie had been of the party leaving in the automobile the night before. She, undoubtedly, had been the one who had dropped the note. Then, in spite of all they said about her, in spite of what she had told him, she was actually a prisoner, desperately begging for assistance to escape. As to the other things Hogan had told him, the probability was they were mostly lies. West did not believe the girl had returned to "Fairlawn," the story did not sound natural. The longer he thought it all over, the more thoroughly was he convinced the girl and he were both prisoners on the same vessel. Yet what could he do? He sank down, with head in his hands, totally unnerved—it was his fate to attempt nothing; only to wait on fortune.

Mark brought in food, merely opening the door slightly, and sliding the tray in on the floor. No words were exchanged, nor was the tray removed until just at twilight, when the fellow appeared again on a similar mission. It became dark, but no light was furnished. Outside the clouds had thickened, and a heavy swell was tossing the vessel about rather roughly. Seemingly the engine was merely endeavoring to maintain head-way, with no port in immediate prospect; they were steering aimlessly into the promise of a stormy night. No sound reached him from the cabin, and finally, worn out mentally and physically, West flung himself on the lower bunk, and lay there motionless, staring up into the intense darkness.

Lying there motionless, yet wide awake, his senses alert, he could feel the labored efforts of the vessel, the slap of waves against the side, the rush of water astern. The Seminole rolled heavily, yet there was nothing at all alarming in her actions, and West felt no premonition of illness, or fear as to the sea-worthiness of the little craft. He endeavored to arouse himself, to keep awake, but finally fatigue conquered, and he sank into a deep sleep. He had no knowledge of how long this slumber lasted, or what suddenly awakened him, so startled at the moment that he sat up in the berth, staring into the blackness. Was it a dream, or a reality? Had some one spoken? He could neither see nor hear anything; the boat seemed to be motionless, not even throbbing now to the beat of the engine—the silence was uncanny. Something was wrong, must be wrong. Where were they—at anchor in some harbor or helplessly adrift on the lake? The yacht rocked gently, as though the swell of the sea no longer buffeted her; there was no sound of action on the deck above. Then he heard a voice again, outside, reaching him this time plainly through the open port.

"All set, Mapes," it said sharply. "Come on down. You finished the job?"

"Ay, ay, sir," the answer gruff, but with a tinge of excitement in the tone. "She's fixed all right. Hold hard, now, mate."

West leaped to the port-hole, and, endeavored to gain a glimpse without. If land was near it remained invisible, nor could he even be sure of the close proximity of a boat. There seemed to be a smudge there at the left, a black, lumping shadow, shapeless against the background of sea; yet he could not be sure. Even as he gazed at it doubtfully, the dim object disappeared, fading away like a mirage. Something told him that mysterious shadow was a boat, a boat filled with men, creeping away silently into the night, fleeing from the yacht, and vanishing into the darkness.

What could such action mean? Had every one gone, leaving the vessel totally abandoned, a wreck buffeted by the surges, doomed to go down, unseen, its final fate unknown? Unknown! The word rising to his brain was the answer. There was the crest of the plot. What could be easier, or safer, than this ending? Who would ever know the truth? Who could ever prove anything, even if they suspected? And who was there to suspect? It was a plot infernal.

But if Natalie Coolidge was also prisoner on board, what of her? Wasn't that the very thing most probable? Of course it was; how foolish he had been. These men, recklessly criminal, as they were, would never sacrifice the yacht, and risk their own lives, merely to put him out of the way. He was not important enough for that; he was but an incident. While this was—must be—a carefully arranged plan. The girl then must be the real victim—his own plight arose merely because [illegible] there, and the villains dare not leave him alive to tell the story.

The certainty of this acted like an electric shock. He must find the girl, and serve her. Surely she must welcome his coming to her assistance now. She would be alone, free to reveal the truth of all this strange mix-up of affairs; perhaps the old trust, the old confidence between them would be renewed. The hope instantly inspired action. His eager eyes searched the narrow confines of the stateroom for some possible weapon with which to assail the door. The stout stool alone seemed available. Swinging this over his shoulder, hampered by the narrowness of space, he struck again and again, with all his strength, until suddenly the lock gave, and the door burst open.

He stepped cautiously forward, with hands outstretched, and his groping fingers came in sudden contact with the cabin wall, which he followed, circling to the left. In this manner he succeeded in finally locating the door opening out on to the deck, and weaved his way across to the right-hand stateroom door. It was locked, the key gone. He must break a way in; but first he must explain to her, so as to spare her the sudden fright of such an assault. He rapped sharply on the panel.

"Miss Coolidge: you are there, are you not?"

"Yes; who is that?" almost a cry of delight in the voice. "You—you have a voice I know."

"I am Matthew West; but do not ask questions now. The yacht is going down, and I must break this door in to release you. Stand back while I smash the boards. You hear and understand?"

"Yes—yes; I am safely away; have no fear."

A lantern's flickering light revealed the weapon he required—a heavy hatchet, and he snatched it up, and began to splinter the wood with well-directed blows. He worked madly, feverishly, swinging the sharp blade with all his strength and skill, gouging out great splinters of wood, and finally forcing the lock to yield. He sprang eagerly through the opening, the hatchet still in his grasp, and faced her.

An instant both paused, and then she cried out in sudden relief. "Oh, it is really you, Captain West. I know now. What has happened? How did you come to be here?"

"Not now," he insisted. "Don't ask me now. Just come as quick as you can. There is no time for anything but action. Quick; let me take your hand."

She permitted him to draw her through the door on to the black, deserted deck. West, bracing himself to the sudden plunging, managed to reach the rail. He drew back, sick at heart at the sight of the waves lapping the side almost on a level with the sloping deck on which he stood. The sight brought him home as never before, the drear deadly peril in which they were. He would find some means of rescue; he must! He was back instantly, grasping her arm.

"Quick," he cried. "You knew this yacht; what small boats did she carry?"

"Only the one; the other was so warped it had been taken ashore."

"Was there no life-raft? There must surely be something of that kind."

"Yes, there is; I remember now. It is forward there, near the engine-room hatch."

The deck was already sloping to port in a dangerous degree, and West was compelled to cling to the rail, as they slowly made passage forward through the darkness. He located the life-raft at last, securely fastened to the side of the deck house, and, leaving the girl to hold herself upright as best she could, began to hack it loose. Working with feverish impatience, he realized suddenly that his companion had deserted the place where he had left her and was also tugging and slashing at the lashings of the raft. These finally yielded to their blind attack. Without the exchange of a word the two grasped the sides and shoved the thing hard down against the port rail.

"Wait now," he cried exultantly. "Stay behind, and brace yourself against the hatch-cover. I'll get underneath and lift. Once on the rail the two of us must shove it free overboard."

She understood instantly, and, with a single swift glance at her dimly revealed figure, West straightened up, bearing the full weight on his shoulders, every muscle strained to the utmost, as he thus pressed it over inch by inch across the wooden barrier. Suddenly the great unwieldy mass slid forward, poised itself an instant on the rounded rail. The yacht rolled sharply to port, flinging both on to the deck together, but sending the raft crunching overboard, clear of the side. West grasped Natalie, and dragged her to her feet, but, even as he held her in his arms, ready to leap out into the black water, the shuddering vessel, with a last despairing effort, partially righted herself, and staggered on.

"[illegible] rail?" he asked. "It is either that, or the water. Are you afraid to try?"

"Afraid—no. Hold me; yes; that way, but—but what are you going to do?"

"Follow, of course; but I shall take to the water. There are no oars here. Nothing to use as a substitute for them. I'll have to swim, and push that old ark as far away as possible. Are you ready?"

She poised herself, held steady by the grip of his hands, her eyes on the dark outline of the floating raft. There was no hesitancy, no questioning.

"Say when," he said sharply.

"Now."

She sprang forward, and came down, sinking to her knees, and clinging fast, as the raft bobbed up and down under her sudden weight, dipping until the water rolled completely over it.

CHAPTER XIV

The Coming of Dawn.

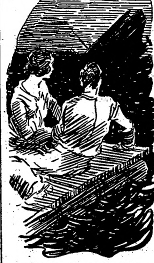
West leaned far out, and could perceive little except a bare, shapeless outline.

"Did you make it? Are you all right?"

"Yes, I'm safe enough. But—but Captain West, I want you to come."

"I'm coming. Watch out now—good! Here goes."

He made the plunge, coming up to the surface close beside the raft, the edge of which he quickly grasped with his hands. He swam steadily, urging the unwieldy raft away from the menacing side of the vessel, driven by the necessity of escaping the inevitable suction when she went down. Gradually the distance widened, until there extended a considerable waste of water between the two. Satisfied that they were far enough away for safety, he clambored cautiously upon the platform, the girl as carefully making room for him on the few dry planks.



She Went Down Bow First.

There was nothing to say, nothing to do; for the moment at least they were safe, and perhaps morning would bring rescue. Suddenly West straightened up, aroused by a new interest—surely that last wave went entirely over the yacht's rail; he could see the white gleam of spray as it broke; and yes, there was another! Then, almost without warning, the end came. She went down bow first, the stern lifting until West could discern the dark outlines of the screw, and then dropped like a stone, vanishing almost instantly.

"That is the last of the Seminole," West said, feeling the necessity of strengthening her. "But it is nothing to frighten you. We are safe enough here. But you must keep your nerve; we may be afloat for hours yet before we are picked up."

"You are sure we will be?"

"The probability is altogether in our favor," he insisted, as much to encourage himself as her. "This is Lake Michigan in summer time, and boats are plying everywhere. We shall surely be sighted by something when daylight returns."

She was silent a moment, with head again bent forward.

"What do you suppose became of the men who deserted the yacht?" she asked, her voice natural and quiet.

"Ashore, perhaps, by this time. They were certain they had done a good job, and eager to get away safely. Hogan never deemed it possible for us to get away alive. As it was, the escape was almost a miracle."

"A miracle!" softly. "Perhaps so, yet I know who accomplished it. I owe my life to you, Captain West," she paused doubtfully, and then went on impulsively. "Won't you explain to me now what it all means? How you came to be here? and—and why those men sought in this way to kill me?"

"You do not know?"

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

St. Vincent—Turkeys are the best paying crop a man can raise in this section, providing he can protect them from the wolves.

Littlefork—Farmers in the Littlefork valley are receiving exceptionally good prices for their clover seed this year.

Winona—Hannibal Choate, 87 years old, a veteran Winona merchant, observed the 61st anniversary of his firm.

Austin—At a recent public sale near here some cows were sold for $125 each, and corn sold for as high as 66 cents a bushel.

St. Paul—The state this week received $33,003.24 inheritance taxes on payment of the settlement on three Minneapolis estates.

Mankato—In a competitive hunt held by the Mankato Lodge of Elks, two teams brought in 166 cottontail and eight jack rabbits.

Windom—The city of Windom will work in conjunction with the state highway department in the matter of bridging the Des Moines river here.

Duluth—Dr. M. N. Triplett, aged 68, pioneer physician, newspaper publisher and former editor of the Floodwood Broad Axe, is dead at his home here.

Duluth—Jessie Dennerly, a pupil, is recovering from burns received when two alcohol lamps being used in the chemical laboratory were overturned and exploded.

Albert Lea—Hans P. Jenson, residing north of here, who was severely burned when he attempted to revive a fire by pouring gasoline onto it, died at a hospital here.

St. Paul—St. Paul police completed installing a powerful radio receiving set at Central station, to be used in picking up descriptions of criminals and stolen automobiles broadcast from Chicago and other eastern cities.

Willmar — The Kandiyohi County War Records committee has announced the publication of a war records book which will show the services of Kandiyohi county in the World war.

Minneapolis—Action was started in Hennepin county district court to collect thousands of dollars in personal property tax on automobiles in the hands of Minneapolis automobile dealers.

Duluth—Because two men each claiming her as his wife, had met and quarreled, Mrs. A. M. Johnson went to the lake docks and attempted suicide by shooting herself. Her recovery is doubtful.

Minneapolis—Three brothers began a search for a will in Minneapolis which will give them claim, they believe, to 40,000 acres of Northwest farm lands, valued at upwards of a million dollars.

Tracy—At the John Peterson farm south of this city, an old fashioned husking bee was conducted when Peterson's neighbors gathered and husked 670 bushels of corn and stacked his corn fodder.

Minneapolis—Celebrated Minneapolis Week with the announcement that it passed Los Angeles and Pittsburgh in November postal receipts, and now ranks 11th among postal centers of the United States.

Faribault—Elias Gatlin, aged 80 years, thought to be the oldest man yet arrested on a charge of illicit liquor making in Minnesota, was taken into custody at his home here and in court paid a fine of $50.

Hibbing—Gross inequalities favoring the Oliver Iron Mining company in the real estate assessment of Hibbing village were corrected by the state tax commission, in approving a reassessment made under its authority.

St. Paul—Reports of a statewide plot to destroy schools, colleges and universities by fire were partly confirmed when state fire marshals said the $500,000 Winona Teachers' college fire Sunday, Dec. 3, was of incendiary origin.

Winona—A three months' search which enlisted the services of authorities in many cities ended when Archie Moore, 15-year-old Winona high school boy who disappeared from his home last September, was located at Vancouver, Wash.

Austin—As if she had a premonition of death, Floy Naoma Earl, 4 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Earl of this city, who died as the result of eating rat poison, a few days before death told her mother she was going to join her brother Charles in heaven.

Albert Lea—Reports coming from citizens who visited Lower lake, a section of the state game preserve, Sunday, are that hundreds of mallards, teal, spoonbills and other ducks are being found on the ice and along the soil line. It was at first believed that the ducks were wounded by guns but on examination very few were found with any wounds. It is now believed the city sewage dumped into the lakes poisoned the water, and the ducks, eating the vegetation, having been made the victims.

St. Paul—Prohibition agents, during November made 161 arrests in Minnesota and confiscated 11,000 gallons of whisky and whisky mash, according to figures made public by S. B. Qvale, state prohibition director.

Pipestone—Plans are being made for a celebration here April 19, in honor of the memory of Henry W. Longfellow, the poet, and his daughter, Alice Longfellow, of Cambridge, Mass., has been invited as the honored guest of the occasion. The celebration is being planned because of the association of Pipestone with Longfellow's famous poem, "Hiawatha."

Duluth—Two fires here damaged four store buildings causing a loss estimated at $7,000.

Canby—Fire of unknown origin destroyed the residence of Helmer Anderson on his farm here.

A Christmas Eve In Camp

By F. H. Sweet

© 1922, WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

HALF a dozen unshaven, red-shirted miners were gathered about the dingy counter of Bilger's, the one store in camp. It was Christmas eve, and they wanted something extra for their dinner on the morrow—just to keep them in mind of the day, they said. But there was little novelty in the forlorn remnant of cans upon the shelves, or in the half-empty barrels and boxes under the counter and massed in the corners of the room. One man found a stray box of sardines, and took possession of it with the remark that, while it was not "Christmasy," he could have the satisfaction of knowing he was eating the only sardines in camp; another drew out a can of Boston baked beans from behind a squadron of tomatoes; while a third, of more investigating and determined turn of mind, hunted among the boxes and barrels until he actually discovered a can of Cape Cod cranberries.

This brought the entire group of Christmas hunters into a compact, envying circle; and while they were anxiously debating the pro and con—especially the con—of a division of spoils, the door opened quietly and a stoop-shouldered, watery-eyed man entered.

"Have you got any toys?" he asked, hesitatingly.

The storekeeper stared, and unanimously, as though by preconcerted arrangement, the group around the canned representatives from Cape Cod turned and stared also.

"Any—what?" the storekeeper asked blankly.

"Toys," the man repeated looking at the encircling faces with abashed embarrassment—"things to play with, I mean, like children have at Christmas. You see," with a curious mingling of apology and pride in his voice, "my little ten-year-old boy came in on the stage just now—clean from his grandma's, back to Missouri. I've been sendin' for him these two years, but couldn't seem to get to it. [illegible]"

He lurched heavily against the counter. His watery eyes began to fill, partly through his condition and partly from some long dormant tenderness which was beginning to reawaken.

"The boy's consider'ble childish," he went on, rousing himself a little at the consciousness of being listened to by men who usually passed him without recognition, "an' likes things to play with. So, bein' it's Christmas, an' he jest comin', why, I thought mebbe I'd better hunt some toys."

"Of course," cried Dobson, the sheriff, heartily; and "Of course," "Of course," came promptly from others of the group.

And then they looked about the store inquiringly, eagerly, in search of something that would please a ten-year-old boy who was childish. But there was little they saw; only huge miners' boots, pyramids of picks and shovels and blankets, barrels of flour and beans and pork; and on the shelves, tobacco and canned goods, and a small assortment of earthen and tinware; and then, at the far end of the store, a bar for the accommodation of those who were thirsty.

There were no dry and fancy goods and notions upon the shelves, no showcases upon the counter, no display in the one dingy window. Such things would begin to make their appearance only with the coming of the first woman, and that was not yet.

"Rather a slim show for playthings, Dobson," said the owner of the cranberries, after a fruitless search with his eyes from one end of the store to the other. Don't s'pose a pack o' playin' cards would do?" as his gaze paused hopefuly on an extensive assortment of that popular article. "They has pictures on 'em."

"Wouldn't do at all," answered Dobson decidedly. "They ain't moral; an' the first kid who patronizes us has got to be brought up moral. Say, you," to the watery-eyed man, who was edging towards the bar at the far end of the store—"none o' that!"

"None o' what?" asked the man querulously. "I ain't steppin' on your toes."

"No, but you are on the kid's. See here." His voice had an incisive ring which had made many stronger men tremble. "You ain't walkin' the same line you was [illegible] ard, who'd a right to dig his grave without opposition from nobody; now you're markin' out a trail for that kid to foller. See? Me an' my friends here ain't no call to interfere between father an' son," dropping his voice to an easy, familiar tone, and placing a hand encouragingly upon the tremulous shoulder, "so long as the father makes a good deal; but when he slumps,"—his voice was still soft, but the steely glint returned to his eyes—"then me an' my friends step in. Sabe? Bein' the first kid in camp, we've constitooted ourselves his guardian—just like every man in the place will do soon's they hear of his bein' here."

He turned back to his companions. The watery-eyed man, after one long, wistful, farewell glance toward the bar, resumed his fruitless search of the goods. There was nothing now to divide his attention; he knew the men with whom he had to deal, and realized that henceforth the bar was to be as far removed from him as though a wall of granite intervened. But, to his credit be it said, even with the realization came a new firmness to his eyes.

"What's that on the top shelf?" he asked suddenly.

"That? Oh; that is—I dunno," hesitated the storekeeper, as he took down the object in question and examined it critically. "It got in with some goods a year ago, an' has been up there ever since."

"Why, you chump!" cried the cranberry owner derisively, "not to know a jumpin' jack when you see one! I've bought lots of 'em to home for the children. See!" and he pulled a string which sent the acrobat tumbling up over the top of his red pole. "Just the thing for a kid."

"Just the thing," repeated the watery-eyed man, drawing a small bag of gold dust from his pocket: "It'll make the boy laugh."

As he was going out, the owner of the cranberries stepped to his side.

"Here, take this along with you," he said, relinquishing the can to which he had been clinging so fondly. "It'll help to make out a Christmas for the boy."

"And this, too." "And this," added the owner of the sardines and the owner of the baked beans; and then Sheriff Dobson pushed before them and slipped something bright and heavy into the hand which held the jumping-jack.

"It's a nest-egg for the kid," he said gravely. "Now you better go home an' fill up his stockin'; an' to-morrer you can tell him Merry Christmas from us all."

Great Savers.

How our mothers and grandmothers would have appreciated the wonderfully efficient electrical appliances of the present day. Probably most of all the electric washer and ironer, because, if the proper machines are selected, they represent the greatest economy. Not only do they save money, time and backbreaking drudgery, but the very clothes themselves.

A Pair of Stockings

By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

BUDDY SMITH had three ideas about his stockings—they were full of feet, full of holes, and they could be full of presents. It was with regard to the third idea that he was paying attention to the second. Willing to go barefoot under the circumstances, he was tieing up the holes in his best stocking, with a view to the Christmas possibilities. His sister, Agnes, had already hung up a much longer stocking, with a note attached in which she informed all who might be concerned that this one was hers. But Agnes, like the monkey that used a rabbit for a muff and kept himself warm by hugging it, was a little selfish. Not only had she hung up one of her mother's stockings, but she had got an advantage over Buddy in the matter of the chocolate cake in the cupboard, for there were holes all round it the size of her little finger.

So it was that on Christmas morning the shorter stocking had the most in it.

His Luck

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

"WELL, I'll be getting lots of presents soon," he said. He had just met some pleasant new friends.

"Yes," he continued, "Christmas is a good time for me. You see I'm popular with wives. I get notes from hundreds of them; there are any number who write to me, and when Christmas comes they knit ties for me or buy a handsome silk handkerchief or two, or a fine muffler—a little thought of me at any rate. And I've never been in a divorce case yet," he ended.

"You must be a diplomat or luckier than you deserve," someone remarked.

"Neither," he answered. "I'm a milkman and a milkman's Christmas is apt to be full of cheer and the good-heart[illegible]"

THE MAIL CARRIER

FOR many years, in good weather or bad, day after day, he had followed his chosen job faithfully and well. He had carried many, many Christmas presents in his day, too. This year one of the families he had served so regularly prepared a Christmas box for him and for his wife and for his children.

"It is the first Christmas box I ever received from one of my families," he said. "Wasn't it thoughtful of them to have remembered their mail carrier?"

But the people were saying, "To think that we haven't done something of this sort every year. The mail carrier does so much for us and we, at times almost seem to forget he's even human."

The Evergreen Tree

By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE servants had retired and left the old lady alone. She sat before the decorated and lighted tree that was burdened with gifts that seemed to have no destinations. For Mrs. Stone was long past the wanting of gifts and no companions, young or old, sat with her, because she wished to be alone with her memories.

She was not as alone as she seemed to be, for, in the great chair opposite to hers memory placed the fairy figure of the child who had glanced and danced about the house and under the Christmas tree of long ago. Beside her there sat one who seemed to lay his hand again upon hers in happy and satisfied affection, while there bent over her the strong and tender youth who was once her hope for later years. Again the old house seemed full of joy, and noisy merriment drove out the deathly stillness, while the tree that is always green spoke of the immortality of happiness.

The next day, when the servants dismantled the evergreen tree, it was found that every gift was marked with a name, and they were busy that Christmas morning in distributing new happiness about the neighborhood.

Easily Managed

YOU must believe in Santa Claus
If in neglect you would not pause
And see the holidays drift by
And bring you nothing but a sigh.

He may not grant you if you wait
In idleness and selfish state
For him upon his way to start
To grant the wishes of your heart.

For he his ways makes known to men
By means that are beyond our ken,
And as his journeying vast is made
He uses many a masquerade.

So if a scarcity you fear
In the supply of Christmas cheer,
Just hustle like a willing elf,
And be old Santa Claus yourself.

FOR HEALTH

What Do You Think About This?

In connection with the opening of the fifteenth annual sale of Christmas Seals, which starts November 22, officials of the Minnesota Public Health Association call our attention to the enormous drop in death rate from tuberculosis. Had the death rate of ten years ago continued, 972 people who are now living would have died this year from tuberculosis The statement follows:

The death rate in 1921 from tuberculosis was lower than it has ever been in the history of the state. In 1911, 119 people out of every 100,000 in the state died of the desease. In 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died of tuberculosis. As compared with 1911, ten years ago, Minnesota is saving 972 lives a year.

In 1920, 90 people out of every 100,000 and in 1921, 77 people out of every 100,000 died, a saving in 1921 as compared with 1920 of 276 lives.

I believe in Santa Claus. ✿ I believe no hair is snowier, no cheeks redder, no smile merrier and no eyes more twinkling than his. ✿ I believe the heart of him is big enough to encompass the world—if people would let it! ✿ I believe in the jingle of his sleigh bells, the swiftness of his reindeer, the sound of their tapping feet on the roof. ✿ I believe in chimneys, big, broad, deep-throated chimneys that will not cramp the Merry Gentleman with his bulging pack. ✿ I believe in solemn rows of stockings hanging by the fire—father's short one, mother's long one and the dangling ones of the children, all waiting and expectant. ✿ I believe in the invisible blossom of happiness that Santa Claus leaves at every house, and I believe that it will grow through all the year if people try to keep the spirit of Christmas every day!

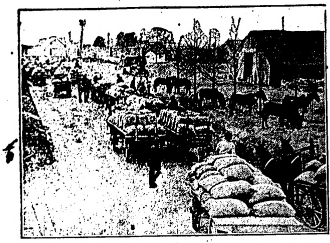
American Farm Bureau



Delivering Rice to the Mill, a Typical Fall Scene.

A section of country in Arkansas has been almost wholly neglected and undeveloped—that was often referred to as the "Cattlemen's Paradise"—with a very limited and scattered population, has been transformed, since the discovery that the soil was especially and peculiarly adapted to the raising of a particularly fine quality of rice. It is now producing a yield far above the average and has grown and developed and prospered until the population in the towns, as well as the ...ural communities, has doubled and, ...me places, even trebled within a score of years. These people ...gotten together about 80 per cent ...the rice growers of that state ...ve organized the Arkansas Rice ...ers' Co-operative association.

...e section is fairly buzzing with ...perity. Everybody has money and ...of it. Store after store has sprung ...in the towns. Towns themselves ...ave become regular beehives of activity. Almost as if by magic, this country was, in the course of a few years, transformed from a sparsely settled and almost entirely undeveloped section into a rich, productive, prosperous country, with an investment and equipment running upwards into the thirty millions of dollars. Rice mills have sprung up throughout the section, representing another two and one-half million investment.

Crop Was Overlooked.

The rice farmers of Arkansas had never given much thought to what happened to their product after they had threshed it and sold it "in the rough" ...the natural state) to the mills, which ...roceeded to mill it and get it in shape ...or the ultimate consumer. As had ...een previously stated, a big investment was put into mills in Arkansas, ...ollowing the establishment of the in...ustry in that state; and, while prices ...ere good, the rice farmers did not ...other themselves about the fortunes ...hat others made from the handling of ...heir product. The result was a very ...aborate system of handling the product, after it had left the farmers' ...ands; which necessarily took a heavy ...oll from the profits in the product. ...here was a long, expensive list of ...ce buyers, rice graders, millers, and so on; and these all had to be taken care of in handsome style, whether the farmer made money, or lost money, or whatever happened to him. Almost without exception, the rice growers had the habit of making their crops each year on borrowed money; and when the rice industry faced the financial situation of the latter part of 1920 there was a panic in all circles in the rice sections.

At this point the farm bureau came into Arkansas and abruptly told the rice farmers of Arkansas, surrounded as they were by the wreck and ruins of their industry, that with a proper system the rice industry of Arkansas, and of the whole country, could be revived, rebuilt and put on a real foundation—a structure that would abide through the years. That system, said the farm bureau, was "Co-operative Commodity Marketing." It was thus that the Arkansas Rice Growers' Co-operative association of Stuttgart, Ark., was born, under the most depressed, the most unfavorable, the most difficult conditions that ever faced any men anywhere.

Membership Doubled.

The membership of the Arkansas Rice Growers' Co-operative association has doubled itself in the course of the first season, and they are a well-pleased set of men who make up the association. These rice farmers are finding use for their organized strength and they are demonstrating the fact that they have the ability to be their own business managers—that the reason they have gotten so very little of the consumer's dollar is because the handling of the "business end" of their business has been in the hands of others than their own.

The Arkansas rice industry has been restored by this co-operative association, which has re-established it on a solid, substantial basis, and blazed the trail for the salvation of the American rice industry. The first year of organization for the co-operative marketing of the rice has resulted in better prices to growers. Prospects for the second year are better still, and the future holds promise of fulfillment through the organization of every hope and dream of the rice growers.

...ONG STAPLE COTTON IN SHORT SHIPMENTS

Experts Unearth 142 Bales, Representing Additional $4,890 to Growers.

Through expert grading the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton association has found 142 bales of long staple cotton in the shipments of short cotton handled to date by the organization this season. Based on quotations of October 5, this represents an additional $4,890 to the cotton growers.

Experts Grading Cotton.

Out of 19,462 bales graded this fall only 1,835 are below middling in grade. Heretofore, before the advent of the association, cotton was generally bought as "middling" and the grower informed by the buyer if the grade did not show that good. Other information as to grade was not always given. The grading showed 2,579 bales of good middling, 6,413 of strict middling and 6,638 of middling. Other grades showed insignificant figures in the total. This does not represent total bale receipts.

Steadied and influenced by the presence of the Farm Bureau Cotton associations throughout the South there has been no "fall slump" in the market this season. Cotton has been picked and baled more rapidly this season than at any time in the last 14 years. Also there has been the constant threat of war in Europe this fall. Despite these influences, the price has held and appears to have an upward tendency.

The Alabama Farm Bureau has bought an additional 3,000 tons of nitrate, bringing the total to 10,000 tons, representing an investment of more than $500,000. This saves the farmer several dollars a ton on fertilizers.

Popcorn Record Is Unique.

Two hundred and forty-five pounds of popcorn from one ear of seed is the record made this season by Mrs. Lincoln Warner of Cedar township, Iowa. Writing of her experience she says: "I wonder who can beat this for a record? This spring I planted seed from one ear of popcorn. The ear measured ten and one-half inches long. I have just gathered the corn and found the yield to be 245 pounds. There are 922 ears. Some of them measure eleven inches in length."

FARM STOCK

REMOVE HORNS FROM CATTLE

Where Clipper Can Be Used Strong Stanchion Is Satisfactory—Casting Is Different.

There are many ways of confining cattle that are to be dehorned. Where the horns are removed with a clipper a strong stanchion may be all that is necessary, or a dehorning chute can be made if a number have to be removed, but for one or two animals and where a saw is used a convenient method is to cast the animal. For this purpose a casting harness such as the one shown in the illustration and known as the English hobble has been used with good results. In fact in throwing an animal for any purpose it will be found a convenient and easy method.

You can make this by placing a rope hobble around each pastern. Have the hobble tight enough so that it it won't slip down over the hoof, but loose enough to slip a rope between it and the leg. After a hobble has been applied to each of the four pasterns, tie a rope into the hobble on a fore limb, then pass the rope through the hobble on the opposite fore limb. Then run it backward through the hobble on the hind leg of the same side, then across through the hobble on the opposite hind limb, and then forward through the king hobble, or hobble in which the rope was first tied.

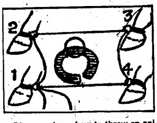


Diagram shows how to throw an animal. The rope nearest to the left side of the drawing should be tied into the ring hobble at 1, passed through rings at 2, 3 and 4, and then back into 1 again. Then the rope, indicated on the right, should be slowly pulled. In the center shows the hobble, with the ring attached.

When you pull up on the rope this will bring all four legs together, and as one person does this have some one gently push the animal over (away from the one pulling on the rope). Then tie the rope around the feet so the animal cannot get free. As soon as the animal is down have an assistant keep the head down by holding the neck against the ground. After the operation is over, untie and remove the rope and hobbles. A leather strap just large enough to go around the pastern and which can be buckled, with a large ring on one side, makes a good hobble, and one that is easily put on and taken off.

NO MORE BLACKLEG VACCINE

Distribution of Virus Was Discontinued July 1, but Frequent Requests Are Made.

Distribution of blackleg vaccine by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, a practice which has prevailed for many years, was discontinued July 1, and public notice was given at the time.

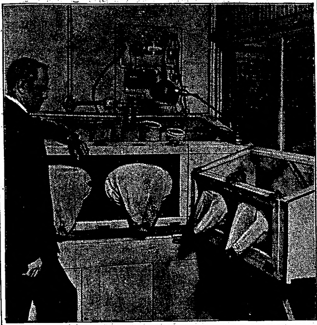
Discontinuance was the result of an item in the agricultural appropriation act for the year beginning July 1, 1922, which reads as follows: "Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for the manufacture, preparation, or distribution of blackleg vaccine." Frequent requests for vaccine continue to reach the bureau of animal industry, however, and applicants necessarily are advised to obtain the vaccine from other sources. Since the blackleg vaccine is no longer distributed by the bureau of animal industry, live stock owners are advised that applications for it cannot be granted, and they will avoid delay by applying direct to commercial concerns or other sources.

BUTTERMILK GOOD FOR PIGS

It Is Rich in Protein and Ash, the Muscle and Bone-Building Materials.

Buttermilk is an excellent food for swine, particularly growing pigs. It is rich in protein and ash, the muscle and bone-building materials. Various experiment stations have demonstrated that when properly supplemented with grain, from five to six pounds of undiluted buttermilk has a feeding value equal to one pound of corn as a feed for growing pigs.

WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS IN CATTLE



John T. Bowen of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and the apparatus that he designed for controlling atmospheric conditions in the manufacture of medical tablets for fighting tuberculosis in cattle. The government, by use of this moisture-regulating device, can manufacture "cow pills" 12 months in the year whereas formerly only 28 days were suitable.

NOXIOUS WEED SEEDS IN WHEAT

One Bushel of Dockage to Every 22 Bushels of Grain.

Foreign Material Commonly Found in Government Investigations Consisted of Wild Oats, Buckwheat, Mustard, Etc.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Thrashed spring wheat usually contains much foreign material, consisting almost entirely of noxious weed seeds. Investigations conducted by R. H. Block and C. R. Haller of the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture, show that in the 1920-21 crop there was approximately one bushel of foreign material, or "dockage," in every 22 bushels of spring wheat thrashed. This represents over 9,500,000 bushels of dockage for the spring wheat crop.

More than 200 kinds of weed seeds are found in spring wheat, but less than 20 of these appear commonly. The foreign seeds most commonly found in the department's investigations, named in the order of their frequency, were wild oats, wild buckwheat, cultivated oats, mustard, lamb's-quarter, barley, green foxtail, hare's-ear mustard, flax, rye, cow cockle, pigweed, yellow foxtail, sunflower, corn cockle, wild rose, kinghead, and wild pea (vetch). Wild oats appeared in over 99.0 per cent of the lots of wheat examined. Grain inspection statistics show that the percentage of dockage found in spring wheat is gradually increasing.

Several factors tend to increase the foreign material in spring wheat, the more important of which are the sowing of wheat on land that is already foul with weed seeds, and the use of seed wheat contaminated with weed seeds. Both of these practices are common in the main spring wheat area.

Foreign material in wheat is objectionable because it is an economic waste, says the department. The growing of weed seeds with the wheat reduces the yield of wheat and increases the cost of harvesting and thrashing. Foreign material occupies valuable space in wagons and freight cars in country and terminal elevators and mills, and it often has a bad effect on the milling and baking qualities of the wheat. That clean seed combined with good cultural methods will produce clean wheat is being demonstrated constantly on many farms, and that the marketing of only clean wheat is profitable, there can be no doubt. The farm is the logical place to clean wheat, preferably as part of the thrashing operation. When the cleaning is done on the farm, the cleaned wheat will bring a better price on the market, the freight on the dockage will be saved, and the screenings will be available for feed, and when finally ground can be substituted for the higher priced feeds, such as oats, corn, and commercial mill feeds.

Two methods of cleaning wheat are common. One method uses sieves and air blasts for separating the foreign material from the wheat, and the other method separates the grain according to the size and shape of the kernels. The former method is used in the general-purpose cleaning machines, such as fanning mills and receiving separators, and the latter method is used in machines designed to make special separations, such as cockle cylinders, ring graders, and disk machines.

Farmers Bulletin, 1287, Foreign Material in Spring Wheat, just published by the United States Department of Agriculture, describes methods of removing foreign material in spring wheat on the farm and at the country elevator. Copies may be obtained from the department at Washington, D. C., or from any office of federal grain supervision in the field.

Uses for Sweet Clover.

Sweet clover can be utilized for pasture, hay, seed and green pasture.

TOAD USEFUL IN CURBING PESTS

Little Creatures Not of Great Economic Importance.

While They Assist in Combating Abnormal Increase of Local Pests, Their Influence Is Not Always Strongly Felt.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Toads have been reputed to aid in curbing the numbers of injurious insects and other similar pests. To ascertain the facts in the case the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture has analyzed the contents of the stomachs of 502 common toads, and reports that while the findings regarding the choice of food are of interest they thus far fail to demonstrate that toads are of great economic importance. Toads go constantly about their own work of gaining a livelihood, and so undoubtedly fill their proper place in nature. They are never very numerous in one locality, however, and as they cannot adopt the methods of birds and traverse wide stretches of land to aid in combating abnormal local increases of crop and garden pests, their influence is not strongly felt. The investigation shows that a certain portion of the toad's food is made up of injurious insects and other pests of growing plants, and that the toad performs some service in such places as greenhouses, gardens, fields of small grain, and golf courses. Any harm that toads do in the consumption of beneficial beetles and other insects useful to man is of little economic importance and does not warrant their indiscriminate destruction.

Surplus Seed Corn.

The farmer who saves more than enough seed corn for his own planting next year should be able to dispose of the surplus at good profit.

POULTRY

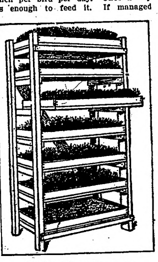
SPROUTING OATS FOR FOWLS

Essential Where Roots or Other Green Feeds Are Not Available for Poultry.

Sprouted oats is rather a necessity than a luxury for poultry in winter, particularly if roots or other green feeds are not available. Only the best grade of oats, plump and heavy, should be used. They should be handled in such a manner as to reach maximum growth quickly. Six quarts of oats are placed in a ten-quart galvanized tin pail which is filled with water of a temperature not over 100 degrees Fahrenheit, to which has been added ten drops of formalin to prevent mold.

The oats are allowed to soak in this pail for 48 hours during which they will have absorbed all the water. They are next spread evenly in the trays of the sprouting rack to the thickness of about an inch. The rack is kept in a room the temperature of which is maintained at not less than 60 degrees, and the oats are thoroughly sprinkled with water twice a day. In from seven to ten days, according to the temperature of the room, the sprouts should be from four to six inches in height, which is about right for feeding. By this time the nutrients of the seed will have become exhausted and the sprouts will depreciate in food value if not fed quickly.

The oats will form a mat nearly four times the weight of the original seed. It should be fed in the tray, as it grows, at the rate of one square inch per bird per day. Once a day is enough to feed it. If managed carefully a new tray can be ready every day. A little experience will show how this can be done as it is purely a matter of measurement, a certain quantity being prepared daily. For small flocks less than six quarts could be prepared at a time. Overfeeding tends to cause diarrhoea. Of course, the sprouts must not be allowed to freeze and it is too valuable to be wasted. Anyone handy with tools can make a rack in the farm workshop.



Stand for Sprouting Oats.

FINISH POULTRY FOR MARKET

Plump, Well Fattened Fowl Will Bring More Money and Sell Far More Readily.

No up-to-date farmer would think of marketing his cattle or hogs in a poor or unfinished condition, because to do so would mean a loss of money; but on many farms poultry is seldom properly finished before marketing. A plump well-finished bird will sell more readily and bring a few cents more per pound, besides being worth more on account of the increase in weight, than a poor, scrawny fowl. Moreover, producing finished poultry is a quick business and profits are soon realized.

PROFITABLE TO CULL FLOCK

It Is an Art Anyone Can Acquire, and the Sooner Unhealthy Fowls Go the Better.

Culling chickens is to the poultry keeper what milk testing is to the dairyman. Fortunately it is an art anyone can acquire. The sooner the flock is culled the sooner expenses are cut down. Then, too, the prices are higher earlier in the season. The man who is making the most of his poultry, systematically culls. Birds lacking in health, and general purpose breeds not laying and two years old, or over, should go. The older the bird, the less profitable she becomes.

Indians Get "Sacred Dirt."

Albuquerque, N. M.—Something brand new in the line of tribal superstitions has just been discovered among the Acoma Indians. Each year the tribe makes a pilgrimage to the peak of Mount Taylor, 11,380 feet high, where each tribesman and his squaw fills earthenware jars with "sacred dirt," to be carried back to their pueblo, 60 miles away. Earth from a certain area at the peak of Mount Taylor is believed by the Acomas to possess medicinal and supernatural qualities.

HONOR PAID TO BRAZILIAN

General Rondon, Famous Explorer, Elected to Membership in the National Geographic Society.

The National Geographic society has elected to honorary membership Gen. Candido Mariano da Silva Rondon, famous explorer, often called the William Penn of Brazil.

General Rondon won this popular characterization for his peaceful penetration of the practically unknown Matto Grosso wilderness, for its rubber, where he so successfully won the confidence of the natives by his fair treatment and human assistance that they even helped him string telegraph wires through the jungle of their hitherto forbidden land.

General Rondon is the ninth man elected to honorary membership in the National Geographic society, one of the other eight being the late Theodore Roosevelt, who, upon his return from his Brazilian explorations, made known Rondon's work in this country by his high praise of the Brazilian's achievements.

The Squirrel on the Tree.

The question of the squirrel on a tree is almost as old as that of the chicken crossing the road. If a squirrel is on the side of a tree and you go around the tree, the squirrel keeping on the opposite side of you, you would not go around the squirrel because you would never be on more than one side of him. You would describe a large circle and the squirrel a small one about the tree as a center.

Chemicals Used in Warfare.

The employment of pitch and sulphur, burned at the walls of ancient cities, was the earliest recorded human use of noxious chemicals in warfare, according to an inventor. The use of combustibles, he said, originated in sea battles, fought by ships that had come to grips, while burning sulphur was contemplated by the English as a means, of driving the Russians out of Sebastapol during the Crimean war.

DOMESTIC NOTE

"Poor Mrs. Jones!" sighed the sympathetic neighbor. "She must lead an awful life. She tells me her husband hasn't a single fault; he is a perfect man."

"But that should make her happy!"

"Not any. Why, what on earth could she have to keep up a conversation with him?"

Up to the Minute.

"So your son Bill is going to law school?" asked a neighbor of Farmer Furleigh.

"Yep," answered the farmer. "But he don't pay no attention to his books. I reckon mebbe he's goin' to be one of these unwritten lawyers I've read about."

An Appropriate Title.

Perkins—I wonder why they named this picture theater the Beehive?

Parkin—Have you ever seen any of their pictures?

"Never."

"Well, if you ever do you'll know the reason, all right, because after each one you feel as though you'd been stung!"—London Answers.

Official Paper of the Village.

Entered as Second class matter July 8th, 1882, at the postoffice at St. Hilaire Minn., under the act of July 16th, 1881.

Published every Thursday at St. Hilaire, Pennington Co., Minnesota.

Subscribers should notify the publisher on or before expiration of subscription if discontinuance is desired, otherwise the paper will be continued.

REMITTANCES should be made by postal money order or express order, short-time subscriptions in 2-cent stamps.

Statements Out

The management of the Spectator is just completing its annual task of making out and mailing statements to subscribers.

In looking over the statements, we find a number that are for more than one year. At present cost of material that goes into making up a newspaper there remains but a very narrow margin on subscriptions and that margin is erased entirely on subscriptions in arreas. During the tight times since 1920 we have gladly extended credit to all who asked for and were entitled to it, and, we have even refrained from sending statements to those who we knew were in straightened circumstances.

As our running expenses are fixed and it requires a certain amount of ready cash to meet expenses every month, we are asking all those who receive statements to give them attention at earliest convenience. None of the amounts are large and the average subscriber can pay his without hardship. We have several hundred accounts, none of which for but small amounts, but as an aggregate, they mean considerable to us

Watch for the weekly list of those who are paid up, and be sure your own name is on the list.

Mr. Fred White Says, "Don't Idle Becaues You Only See One Rat."

Legislators Gather

Members of the 1923 session of the Minnesota legislature, which opens at the state captiol on Tuesday, January 2nd., have already commenced to gather at St. Paul to secure quarters and get in readiness for the opening. Among the most important matters to be considered at this session is passage of legislation to carry out provisions of the rural credits amendment voted at the fall election. Changing the method of distributing state aid to schools so that the large and wealthy districts will not receive the major portion, is another proposition that will be considered. Several other matters of prime importance such as passage of legislation permitting the state to issue bonds for trunk road construction, will have attention of the lawmakers at this session.

Harold Holmes had the misfortune to badly slash his hand while operating a wood saw last Saturday. The saw cut an ugly flesh wound, which required a dozen stitches to close, besides damaging the knuckle. Dr. Regner dressed the wound and Harold is getting along nicely, although the wound is quite painful.

Mr. and Mr. Hesby and baby arrived Saturday from Fargo to spend Christmas with Mrs. Hesby's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hooper. Mr. Hesby returned home Monday afternoon, but Mrs. Hesby and baby will visit another week.

A letter received from Washington says there has been 18 below weather in the fruit growing districts out there which just about equals the official figures here thus far this winter.

One of the north country papers says the outstanding feature of the county division vote in Beltrami County was that Baudette, a town of 900 people, cast over 600 votes for division.

A club dance will be given immediately after the basketball game this evening. The dance will be at the Imperial Hall.

Exceptionally mild weather has prevailed throughout this section since commencement of the holiday season.

Basket Social

There will be a basket social at the W. D. Ewings home, south of St Hilaire, on Friday evening, December 29th, for the school of Dist. No. 227. Girls are requested to bring baskets. All are welcome.

At Gov't Hospital

A lettter was received today from Joe Hauge stating he was at Fairview the government hospital at Minneapolis, receiving treatment for ailments which developed while he was in the U. S. Army in France. Joe says he is being treated well, and that he has gained in weight. He was examined a number of times by government doctors after being discharged from service, but seemingly without result. The fact that he has been admitted to the hospital is evidence that his case has finally received the attention it deserved.

Many local friends will rejoice to learn that Joe is improving and hopes to eventually regain his former good health.

Small, but Powerful.

Germs are not little animals. They are tiny plants, the smallest living things known. They are sometimes called bacteria or microbes. You might have some idea of the size of a germ if you could take a grain of sand and split it into a million pieces. Of course, some germs are larger than others, but the largest cannot be seen without the aid of a powerful microscope.

Game Tonight

—14—

"Only in the vaguest way; is it my fortune? I have been held prisoner; lied to, and yet nothing has been made clear."

"It is a devilish conspiracy that has been plotted for a long while. There must be a dozen involved in it, one way or another, but, as near as I can learn, the chief devil, the brains of the gang, is the fellow named Hobart. Have you known him—long?"

"No," she said doubtfully, "not unless his other name was Jim. There was a fellow they called Jim. He was my jailor after that woman locked me into a room."

"Where was this?"

"Why surely you must know. In that cottage where we stopped with Percival Coolidge."

He drew a deep breath, more thoroughly puzzled than ever. What could be her purpose to make so bold an effort to deceive? His heart sank, but he determined to go on, and learn how far she would carry this strange tale. Perhaps out of the welter he could discern some truth.

"The fellow's name is Jim, all right, Jim Hobart. The woman passes as his wife. You knew nothing of all this?"

"No; I only saw the man twice; he was very rough then, and swore when I questioned him."

"And the woman?"

"She would not talk, either; only once she told me that Percival Coolidge had committed suicide. That made me wonder, for I believed he had something to do with my being held there. What did he say when he returned to the auto without me? What explanation did he make for my absence?"

"Explanation! He needed none; you came out of the cottage with him."

"I? What do you mean?"

"But I saw you with my own eyes, talked with you, and all three of us drove back to 'Fairlawn' together. My G—d, Miss Natalie, have you lost your mind? Do you even deny dismissing me from your service?"

She gazed at him through the gloom, utterly unable to comprehend.

"I must have, if what you say is true," she admitted. "For I certainly have no such recollection."

He stared off into the black night, his lips pressed closely together. Could this be false? Could she sit there calmly, in the midst of such peril as surrounded them, and still deliberately endeavor to deceive?

"And you knew nothing of the death of Percival Coolidge, except what was told you by that woman?"

"She brought me a newspaper which I read; that was all I knew."

"And in that house on Wray street where I met you again last night. And you talked with me; tried to get me to quit following you. You surely haven't forgotten that already?"

She dropped her face wearily into her hands, and her voice sounded listless.

"I—I almost believe you are the crazy one, Captain West. I swear I have never knowingly met, or spoken to you since we drove to that cottage on Sunday. I cannot believe what you say."

"Yet it is true, every word true"; he asserted stoutly. "Why else should I be here? You returned with us to 'Fairlawn,' and we chatted together pleasantly all the way. Later you seemed to change, and discharged me rather rudely. Then Percival Coolidge was killed—shot down by an assassin. You were at the inquest, and testified. The next day you discharged Sexton, and later he learned, and reported to me, that some one called you on the phone from Wray street, and wanted you to come over there at once. I found you there, and this fellow Hobart with you."

"But, Captain West, I never saw you; I never left the room in the third story where I was locked in, except when they took me away in a machine to the yacht."

"You dropped a note in the alley, enclosed in a silver knife?"

"Yes, I did. Did you find it?"

"Sexton did, and that was what brought me here."

"But it is all so strange," she exclaimed despairingly. "How could I have done all these things, been in all these places, and yet know nothing about it? Could I have been drugged or influenced in some way by those people?"

"I do not believe you were either hypnotized or drugged. Good G—d; why did I not think of this solution before? I must have been blind; that was not you; I can recall a hundred little things now to convince me."

"What is it you mean?"

"Another woman played your part; a woman most wonderfully like you, even to the voice. There is no other solution of the problem. And that reveals the plan of robbery—to get you out of the way, and then have her take the fortune."

She sat silent, motionless, apparently unable at once to grasp all the meaning in his words. Then she pointed away into the distance.

"See, there is light over there," she exclaimed eagerly. "That must be the east, and it is morning."

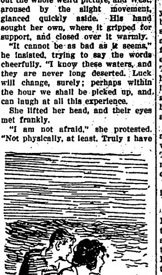
He lifted his head, and looked where she pointed. A dull, gray light topped the waters, and the sky above held a faint tinge of crimson. The wan glow accented the loneliness and for the moment left him depressed. Nothing appeared within range of vision to break the drear monotony of gray sea and sky. Neither felt any desire to speak; they could only stare out silently across the desolation of waters, feeling their helplessness and peril.

Her head sank forward into her hands, as though she would thus shut out the whole weird picture, and West, aroused by the slight movement, glanced quickly aside. His hand sought her own, where it gripped for support, and closed over it warmly.

"It cannot be as bad as it seems," he insisted, trying to say the words cheerfully. "I know these waters, and they are never long deserted. Luck will change, surely; perhaps within the hour we shall be picked up, and, can laugh at all this experience.

She lifted her head, and their eyes met frankly.

"I am not afraid," she protested. "Not physically, at least. Truly I have not felt fear since you joined me, Captain West."



"See, There Is Light Over There."

"But you are very tired?"

"Perhaps so, yet I have not thought about that. There are other things; you do not believe in me."

"Why say that?" he asked in astonishment. "There is no question of the kind between us now."

"Truly, is there not? What was it you believed of me—that—that I was part of this conspiracy?"

"I do not know what I believed, if I actually believed anything, Miss Natalie," he explained rather lamely. "I cannot make the situation altogether clear even to myself. Under the circumstances, you cannot condemn me justly."

"Condemn! I do not. How could I? You must have kept faith in me, nevertheless, or you would never be here now. That is what seems marvelous to me—that you actually cared enough to believe."

"I realize now that I have," he said gravely. "Through it all I have kept a very large measure of faith in you."

"Why should that faith have survived?" she questioned persistently, as though doubt would not wholly leave her mind. "Surely there was never a madder story told than the one I told you, and I couldn't have proven an item of it."

"Yet it has shown itself true," he interrupted.

"You actually believe, then, that there is another woman—a counterfeit of myself?"

"It is the only theory feasible; you have convinced me of that. Will you believe what I say?"

"Implicitly."

"Perhaps it sounds like a fairy tale," he spoke frankly, his eyes seeking her own, all their surroundings forgotten in the eagerness of the moment, "but I will tell you the exact truth. Before this misunderstanding occurred you had confided in me, trusted me, although I was a stranger and I believed absolutely in your story. I had that basis to rest on. Then I got hold of various odds and ends of evidence which convinced me that something was wrong—that you were actually being conspired against. I even gained a suspicion that Percival Coolidge was the actual leader of the conspiracy. You could never have been made prisoner in that cottage without his connivance; he must have lured you there for that particular purpose, so that this other girl could take your place without danger of discovery. The reason for Percival's participation is only a guess, but my theory is the fellow had so juggled your fortune, and the time for final accounting was so near, he had to take a desperate chance in order to save himself.

"My own theory is that when Hobart learned what Percival Coolidge proposed doing, his own criminal tendencies told him that here was some easy money. The girl was undoubtedly wholly under his control; some denizen of the underworld probably. She had already played her part sufficiently well to convince Hobart of success. Why then, shouldn't he have this money instead of Percival? There was no reason except that Percival was in the way. That was why he was killed."

"And," she questioned breathlessly, "the man meant to murder me also?"

"Not at that time, in my judgment," West answered thoughtfully. "Such an additional crime was not a part of the original plan. Once the money, and other property, were delivered to the fake Natalie, the cashing in, and get away would be easy; even the identity of the thieves would be concealed."

"But they did try to kill me."

"Yes, later, by the sinking of the yacht. Probably I am largely responsible for that. My appearance in Wray street must have been quite a shock, and when I succeeded in escaping from their trap there, Hobart very evidently lost his head completely. The knowledge that I was free, perhaps in communication with the police, led to your night trip to the Seminole, and the secret sinking of the yacht. He had gone too far by then to hesitate at another murder."

"I—I think I understand now," she admitted, "how all this occurred; but why—why were you so persistent? There—there must have been a reason more impelling than a vague suspicion?"

"There was—the most compelling impulse in the world."

"You mean faith in me?"

"Even more than that; love for you. Natalie, I love you, have loved you all the time, without fully realizing exactly what it meant. There have been times when I have doubted you, when I could not wholly escape the evidence that you were also concerned personally in this fraud. I have endeavored to withdraw from the case, to forget, and blot everything from memory. But something stronger than will prevented; I could not desert you; could not believe you were wilfully wrong. You understand what I mean."

"Yes," the words barely reaching him. "It was the other girl; she undermined your faith."

"That is the truth; yet how could it be, do you suppose? My very love should have enabled me to detect the difference."

She touched his arm with her hand, and under the slight pressure he looked aside at her.

"You know now," she said softly, "and I know. All this is past and gone between us. We are here alone, the sport of the waves, and I have no reason to be other than frank. I believe in you, Matthew West; in your honesty and manhood. You say you love me?"

"With all my heart and soul; it seems to me now I have always loved you—you came to me, the lady of my dreams."

Her eyes were wet with unshed tears, yet she smiled back into his face, her voice trembling as she answered:

"And I," she said slowly, "have had no thought but of you since our morning in the garden together. How far away that seems."

"You mean you love me?"

"Yes; I love you; there is no word stronger, but I would speak it—is that not enough?"

He held her in his arms, in spite of the trembling raft, tossed by the swell of the sea, and crushed her against him in the ardent strain of passion. An instant she held her head back, her eyes gazing straight into his; then, with sigh of content, yielded, and their lips met, and clung.

CHAPTER XV

Escape From the Raft.

The raft drifted aimlessly on, the waves lapping its sides, and tossing it about as though in wanton play. The girl lay quiet, her face upturned, unconscious now of her dread surroundings; and the man swayed above her, his head bent upon his breast, both sleeping the sleep of sheer exhaustion.

It was the startled cry of Natalie that roused West, and brought his drooping head upright. She was sitting up and pointing excitedly behind him.

"Oh, see there! Look where I point—isn't that land?"

The raft rocked as he swung his body hastily about, and gazed intently in the direction indicated. He rubbed his eyes, scarcely able to credit his sight, half believing it a mirage. Yet the view remained unchanged; it was land, a bit of the west shore, a short promontory running out into the lake toward which the raft, impelled by some hidden current, was steadily drifting. His arm clasped the girl in sudden ecstasy.

"Yes, it's land, thank God!" he exclaimed thoughtfully. "We are floating ashore, Natalie—saved in spite of ourselves. Why, we could not have been so far out in the lake, after all. I ought to have thought of that before; those villains would never have deserted the yacht in mid-lake, and taken to the boat. They must have known they could make shore easily."

"You don't suppose they landed here, do you?"

"Not very likely; even if they did they are not here now. Not one of them has a thought but that we went down in the Seminole. Now they'll pull off their graft, and pull it quick. They are not loitering around here, Natalie, waiting for ghosts to appear; they are back in town hours ago."

"But what can we do?"

"Get ashore first, of course, and discover the quickest way to return to the city. I figure we have a big advantage. We know their real game now, and they are so sure we are both dead, they'll operate in the open—walk right into a trap. By this time McAdams must have discovered some clue as to the whereabouts of Hobart. With him under arrest, and our story told, some of these fellows will confess, and it will all be over with.

"It is twilight already—the sun has gone down behind the bluff, but it will require an hour yet for this raft to drift into shallow water. You swim, you told me?"

"Yes, very well indeed."

"Shall we risk it then together? It is not far to the end of the point yonder."

She looked where he pointed and smiled, glancing back into his questioning eyes.

"Why, that involves no danger at all. I will do anything to get off this raft."

The two slipped silently over the edge of the dipping raft, and struck out for the nearest point of land. The distance was greater than it had seemed, the twilight deceiving their eyes, while their clothing had a tendency to retard progress. Weakened by lack of food, and buffeted by cross currents, both were decidedly exhausted by the time their lowering feet finally touched bottom.

"Oh," Natalie exclaimed breathlessly, "That was glorious, but I hardly had enough strength left to make it. Why, it is almost dark already. I cannot see the old raft at all. I—I wish it would come ashore; it gave you to me, Matt."

"And you are not sorry, even now, safe here on shore?"

"Sorry! Why I am the happiest girl in all the world this minute. I am here with you, and you love me—what more can I ask? Is that silly, dear?"

He laughed, and kissed her, neither giving a thought to their dripping garments, or a regret for the hardships they had passed through.

"Yes, I love you, Natalie, dear," he answered. "So it is not silly at all. But we must seek shelter and food. Are you strong enough now to climb the bluff?"

She nodded her readiness to try, too happy for words, and hand in hand they toiled their way upward through the gloom.

CHAPTER XVI

The House in the Bluffs.

The cleft in the bluff was both narrow and steep, but it gave them passage. At the upper end Natalie's reserve strength suddenly deserted her, and she sank down on the grass, laboring for breath, feeling unable to advance a step farther. The days and nights of excitement, coupled with lack of food and sleep, had left her physically weakened; now suddenly, even her will and courage both gave way.

"No, it is nothing," she explained in a whisper. "I am just completely tired out, I guess. You go on, Matt, and find some place of shelter. I'll just sit where I am now until you come back—only—only don't go very far away."

She held out her hand, and endeavored to smile.

"Desert me! Of course you are not, dear. I am bidding you go. I shall not mind being left here alone. I am so tired."

West felt the importance of gaining a view inland before the closing down of night obscured everything, and therefore reluctantly left her alone there while he made his way to the top of the ridge. It was a wild, broken country revealed to his gaze, a land of ridges and ravines, rugged and picturesque, but exhibiting no evidence of roads, or inhabitants. Then his eyes caught a thin spiral of smoke rising from out a narrow valley almost directly beneath where he stood, the depths of which were totally concealed from sight. As he stared at this, uncertain of its reality, a single spark of light winked out at him through the darkness. There was certainly a habitation of some kind hidden away down there. If he could only leave Natalie there in safe hands, in the security of a home, however humble, food would give him strength to push on alone. West turned and hastened back through the woods, clambering down the slope of the ridge in darkness to the spot where he had left the girl. For the moment he could not distinguish her presence in the gloom, and, fearing he might have gone astray, called her name aloud.

"That Was Glorious."

"Yes," she answered. "I am here, to your right. I am standing up. Have you discovered anything?"

"I have heard," said Mr. Peacock, "that a number of children have asked to hear about me and about my ways and about the ways of the Peacock family.

"I am pleased that they should want to hear about me, for it shows that they are very intelligent to want to hear about a handsome bird such as I am.

"Of course, that doubtless sounds a little conceited coming from me. It would have been better if some one else had said that of me. But I cannot wait for some one else to say that at just this moment, though, for all I know, many people in different parts of the world may be speaking at this very moment of the peacock's beauty.

"Then, too, I am proud of my beauty. I am not modest. I am vain. But just see what I have to be vain about! Some may look at themselves and be pleased.

"And yet there may be no reason for such pleasure.

"I look at myself and am pleased, and there is every reason for such pleasure.

"It takes time to get our peacock beauty. When we are born we are little fuzzy brown things, and we look much like chickens and act much like chickens.

"In fact, we are very similar in our ways to the members of the chicken family and the turkey family—particularly to the chicken family.

"We're so very much like them.

"We look like our mothers for a time. We have simple gray suits.

"We begin to show signs of beauty, at the end of the first year of our lives, with green touches upon our chests and about our necks.

"At the end of the second year we show still greater improvement and, ah, the glory and splendor of it—or of us—at the end of the third year our trains are perfect.

"I hope you will never speak of my beautiful train as a tail.

"I have a tail. It is underneath my train. And it helps to support my train.

"My train is the beautiful part of me which I raise up in so becoming a fashion.

"People have wondered why we did not run away when we were given so much freedom—in fact, when we are absolutely free.

"We become used to our strutting ground and we get so we know our home. Then we don't run away from it. We're like roosters. They don't run away from the farm.

"Little peacocks are able to look after themselves as soon as they are hatched.

"Our home used to be in India, and although there it was warm, while here it is cold in the winter time, we do not complain about the weather.

"We Will Take Food."

"In fact, we do not mind the snow at all. We roost out-of-doors, up in the trees or on top of the buildings here at the zoo where we make our home.

"We used to live in a wilder part of the world, but we're not wild at all. We don't fight.

"We shed our feathers every June and get our new ones in January. You can see how nice mine are becoming now. In the spring our feathers look their very best. Then they are beautiful.

"Our voices are not pretty. We make a great deal of noise, but we can't have everything, can we? And beauty of looks is so much more important than beauty of voice. The peacocks think so, anyway.

"The ladies in our family lack our beautiful trains. They do not go in for beauty, but why should they when they can always have the pleasure of admiring ours?

"They lay two or four or six eggs. People do not know what their reason is for always laying an even number of eggs. Sometimes it is only two, now and again six, and more often four. The reason for this is a peacock secret and will be kept a peacock secret. If we let a few outsiders know the secret it might very possibly be a secret no longer.

"We aren't pets exactly, but we will take food from our friends' hands, and we're fond of home even though we don't want to be babied.

"Of course it is true that we like to show off, but is it not natural when you stop to think of the wonderful eye spots in our train and the brilliant blues and greens and golden browns of our feathers?"

STOCK PRICES TUMBLE

Low Grade Beef Advance, Other Grades Steady.

Old and New Year

"WELL, well, well," said the Old Year, "it is so nice to see you, New Year. I congratulate you, and as the good people say, I wish you a Happy New Year."

"Thank you, thank you," said the New Year, in a sweet young voice. "I have great respect for you, Old Year. You have been so wise and so good. You have done so much that is fine. Now, how I shall be I do not know at all. I feel so uncertain of myself."

"Oh, you'll get over that," said the Old Year; "you are a little nervous now, but you will be all right in no time at all.

"Why, I remember last January—my very first month of all—I was all over my nervousness before the month was over."

"Were you, indeed?" said the New Year. "Well, that is most encouraging to hear."

"Yes," said the Old Year, "one gets over one's nervousness very quickly when one is a year. I don't know how it is with people, but I know how it is with a year.

"Of course, I suppose a person might need more than a few weeks to get over nervousness, but then a person is about so much longer than a year. After all, a year isn't so long."

"Where are you going now?" asked the New Year.

"Why, don't you know?" the Old Year asked.

"I've never been told," said the New Year. "You see, I have lots to learn. I'm so young," and the New Year sighed a little.

"Oh, you mustn't sigh," said the Old Year. "It's so beautiful a thing to be young, and strong, and new, and brisk.

Of course, too, it is especially nice for a year, because so much is learned in advance, as it were.

"You don't have to begin and learn everything over again, as though you were the first year that had ever been. And people help you so much, too. They go on just as they were going on before, and try to keep you from feeling sensitive and shy.

"People make it so easy for you. You'll discover that.

"But you were asking me where I was going, so I must tell you."

"I would so much love to know," said the New Year.

"I am going," said the Old Year, "to the Beautiful Valley of Memories. Oh, they tell me it is so wonderful a place, and because it is so beautiful no one minds growing older or anything of that sort.

"That is why I am not sad and why I can greet you so gayly and so cheerfully.

"The Beautiful Valley of Memories has ever so many living there. Of course, all the old years are there, and what good times they do have comparing notes.

"Then they have hurried visitors from away, too. You will notice from time to time how people will remember some lovely thing that happened some time ago.

"It is then that we receive hurried visits from these people, so hurried, sometimes, they scarcely realize they have come to visit us as they're so quickly off again.

"But they are with us long enough to know how beautiful is this Valley of Memories.

"You can't imagine how lovely it is until you have been there. I was given just a little look at it today, and you see already I talk as though I were an old inhabitant.

"There are houses there, and they are so sweet and so pretty, with lovely flower gardens filled with favorite flowers. All our flowers have wonderful memories. There are forget-me-nots in one bed, because they are the favorite flowers of one who has so many memories about them.

"The trees are favorites. There are favorite pines. And there are all sorts of lovely things there.

"Oh, the Old Year is not sad to leave, for the Old Year is going to have so good a time. And you have no idea how our valley is loved. Everywhere around it is known and many people know of it, though they do not know just where it is.

"'The Beautiful Valley of Memories,' they say, 'oh, it seems to me I know of that. Didn't I spend a part of my childhood there? It sounds so very familiar. I am sure I spent happy days there once.'

"So, New Year, I wish you well. It's a splendid world, and you'll meet ever so many fine men and women and boys and girls.

"Good-by, and the best of luck."

The Old Year was gone, and everyone was shouting "Happy New Year," and the New Year felt especially happy to think that the Old Year, too, would be happy!

BEGAN NEW YEAR MARCH 25

March 25 was the usual New Year among most Christian peoples in early medieval days, but in Anglo-Saxon Europe December 21, was New Year day. William the Conqueror, ordered the observance on January 1, at the time of the German conquest, but later England, with the rest of Christendom, began her new year on March 25.

THE GREGORIAN CALENDAR

The adoption of the Gregorian calendar, in 1582, restored January 1 as New Year day and this was accepted by all Roman Catholic countries at once; by Germany, Denmark and Sweden about 1720 and England in 1751.

NEW YEAR'S DAY

THE storm-wind sank, the moon rode high,
  Set round with silver haze,
Where, late, sky-spaces wonderful
  Showed green as chrysoprase.

Within the old gray church anon
  The gathered folk would sit;
I met the old year on the hill,
  And bade farewell to it.

The woods around stood stark and dim,
  But at my feet white birds
Fluttered, the wraiths of kindly deed
  And sweet, remembered words.

Above me, from Orion's belt,
  A great gem flashed and fell;
Was it a seraph prince sped by,
  Michael, or Gabriel?

Then, though my lonely heart must mourn
  For some that come no more,
White sails of Hope I seemed to see
  Set to a sapphire shore.

As he who dreamed a New World sailed
  On an uncharted sea,
From Palos with his caravels
  Lured by a mystery.

So, under flaming Asian skies,
  Or by the still, white Pole,
That Great Adventure, the New Year,
  Beacons the human soul.

Pulling the Throttle

By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

IT IS the custom of a certain railway engineer to have his boy with him now and then in the engine cab. The youngster states that he has "ringed the bell and blown the whistle," but that he has not yet "pulled the throttle."

This seems to be the matter with a good many older ones of the present generation, and it may explain their lack of progress. They have rung the bell and they have blown the whistle, but they have neglected to open the throttle.

That invisible force that is in us all responds wonderfully when we call upon it, but is only a useless and diminishing energy until we do. Bell and whistle may advertise that we have steam up, but they cannot get us along. They may both be active while we are really slowing up, like the train that approaches a stop.

The station may be a permanence for us when we could go a good deal farther, we may arrive at a dead line in life while yet young, because we have shut the throttle instead of opening it, turned off steam instead of turning it on.

There never was more chance for progress than this New Year is offering. Never before did opportunity beckon more earnestly. Never was talent so much in demand, never was capacity so much needed. Never was ability so largely rewarded. Great positions wait for those who can fill them. Ambition may plan. Aspiration may hope.

But I wouldn't want a fast young man on my road. I wouldn't have a loud young woman in my office. Cigarettes shut off steam. The call is not for noise, but for efficiency! I can watch a young man's smoke when that is about all there is of him. I can hear a belle ring when I would [illegible]

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Governor Parker of Louisiana Calls Out State Troops in Case Involving Ku Klux.

CONFERENCE ON PROHIBITION

President Consults Fifteen Governors on Prohibition Enforcement—Ritchie of Maryland in Opposition—German Reparations and American Help for Europe.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE says the farmers of the United States will get between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000 more for their crops this year than last, despite the fact that agricultural prices are lower relatively than prices of other things. Is this true of the farmers in your locality?

GOV. JOHN M. PARKER of Louisiana, who has promised to squelch the Ku Klux Klan in his state, took his first radical action in that line last week when he ordered a company of the National Guard to proceed to Mer Rouge and Bastrop, in Morehouse parish, to await his orders. That particular parish has been the field of much Klan activity and the organization was said to be connected with the celebrated Mer Rouge kidnaping case of last August, which the authorities have been entirely unable to solve. Five citizens of the town were kidnaped and two of them, Maj. Watt Daniels and Thomas Fletcher Richards, have not been seen since. The men who were released said the kidnapers "looked like what we know of the Ku Klux as they had hoods and robes." There was a rumor Wednesday that the bodies of the missing men had been found and that this accounted for the calling out of the troops. Another explanation of the governor's action was that residents of Jena, in La Salle parish adjoining Morehouse parish, had passed resolutions asking to be "relieved from the oppression of the Klan."

At the recent conference of governors in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Governor Parker sought to obtain assurance of co-operation from other executives in his war on the Klan, but he was rather disappointed in the result.

PRESIDENT HARDING played host for 15 of the governors at luncheon in the White House and discussed with them the problem of enforcing the prohibition law. Fourteen of them agreed with the President that measures must be adopted for rigid enforcement of the Volstead act. The other, Governor Ritchie of Maryland, denounced the law as an intolerable extension of paternalism in contravention of state rights.

"The great majority of people of Maryland believe the Volstead law simply cannot be enforced there," Governor Ritchie asserted. "Our people are imbued with a fine traditional respect for law and established order, and we were effectively solving the temperance question by local option. During that method, when the people of a community wanted prohibition they actually got it.

"The Volstead law changed all this. Our people, in the main, regard it as an unnecessary and drastic federal infringement of their state and personal rights. The lack of respect for law and the actual lawlessness which have resulted is deplorable. The only remedy I see is to recognize that the Volstead law is destructive of the rights of the states and to turn the whole question back to the states, so that each may settle it in accordance with the will of its own people."

These were cited as the chief defects in prohibition enforcement:

1. Federal prohibition officers, numbering 4,000, are not sufficiently numerous to cope with evasion of the law.
2. In many instances federal officers are political henchmen who wink at violations.
3. Until the national government stamps out interstate "rum running" state enforcement will be difficult.
4. State enforcement laws in many states are too lax.
5. Federal judges are too lenient.
6. The metropolitan press is too prone to treat prohibition enforcement with levity.

President Harding said he would call another conference next year, to include new governors, and that a program of federal and state co-operation would be mapped out.

SENATORS opposed to the ship subsidy measure continued the fight in the senate, some trying to force it aside for consideration of the Norris agricultural financing bill and others endeavoring to kill it entirely. Among the latter were McKellar of Tennessee, who introduced an amendment to eliminate the entire government aid section; and King of Utah, who introduced a bill proposing abolition of the shipping board and transfer of its functions to the Department of Commerce.

In the house further consideration of the Green resolution for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the issuance of tax-exempt securities, as urged by the President and Secretary Mellon, was postponed until after the holidays. Opponents of the resolution said it was beaten.

SENATOR LADD of North Dakota, Republican, has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation by the senate foreign affairs committee to ascertain the true state of affairs in Nicaragua, the facts concerning American occupation of that republic, in 1910; why American forces still are quartered there, and "the connection between certain New York commercial houses and the Chamorro Clan government of Nicaragua." The resolution set forth various criticisms of the American policy in Nicaragua, declaring that "no state of war exists between the United States and Nicaragua which would justify the permanent quartering of our military forces upon a territory of a friendly, neighborly nation"; that "the executive department has no constitutional powers to maintain such invasion without the consent of congress."

THE naval appropriation bill, carrying a total of $325,000,000, and providing for an enlisted personnel of 86,000 men, was passed by the house on Monday. It includes a request that the President negotiate with foreign powers relative to limiting construction of warcraft under 10,000 tons, though Representative Mondell told the house Mr. Harding needed no urging and would start the negotiations "when he deems it wise and practicable."

AMBASSADOR HARVEY is on his way home from England, having been called for a conference with the President and his advisers concerning the possibility of the United States' bringing about a settlement of the reparations question and thus helping to relieve the financial distress of Europe. The administration, it is understood, insists the reparations settlement must be made without a cancellation of the allied debts to this country. England and France appear to think this cannot or should not be done. Mr. Harvey's advice in the matter is regarded as valuable and necessary.

The European nations are skeptical concerning an American loan, and the French especially dislike the idea that is said to be under consideration, declaring it bears the stamp "Made in Germany." Thomas W. Lamont of J. P. Morgan & Co. asserted in New York that the American people have no intention of making a loan to Germany because that country is not in a position at the present time "to inspire our people with confidence to buy its bonds." At the same time Mr. Lamont stated conditions under which he believed a German loan might be floated in this country at some future time, not a large loan, but enough to enable Germany "to get over the hill." These conditions were, he said, the settlement of the reparations problem and the fixing of a definite sum so that Germany would be aware of her obligation. "Following on the fixation of this sum," he continued, "Germany must set out on a period of deflation. There may possibly come with that a scheme of the allies for the supervision of such deflation, including the administration of Germany's customs. Even if a loan is advanced I doubt if Germany will be lent a sum sufficient to discharge her reparations debt."

UNTIL the allied premiers gather in Paris on January 2 it will not be known what course France will pursue in regard to sanctions against Germany. At present Premier Poincare is standing firm. To American correspondents he said France would not accept any change in the treaty of Versailles calling for the evacuation of the Rhineland within less than the 15 years specified in it. He indicated that his government was strongly opposed to any solution of the reparations question which involved expensive French sacrifices, and that Germany must give new guarantees for future payments in order to obtain a moratorium.

One result of the rumors of American help was the sudden rise of the mark in Berlin. The people expected to find prices correspondingly reduced, but were fooled.

WHILE the experts at Lausanne were drafting the Near East peace treaty the conferees continued to wrangle over the plans for the control of the straits and certain other matters in dispute. Tchitcherin's proposals concerning the Dardanelles were turned down flatly by the allies, and the Russians threatened to take their dollrags and go home. The Turkish plan was greatly at variance with that of the allies, but Lord Curzon was vexed because it was so long delayed and insisted the allied scheme be taken as the basis for discussion. The Englishman used severe language to Ismet Pasha and that gentleman was considerably affronted and said Turkey would not submit to be thus dictated to. Ismet and his colleagues were worried by news from Angora to the effect that Premier Raouf Bey had told the national assembly the Turkish government would not yield to British attempts to run the "steam roller" over them and that it stood squarely on the Turkish nationalist pact. Ismet fears that if he yields too far any agreement he may make will be rejected by the assembly.

It was announced in Angora that the Chester project for railroad construction in eastern Anatolia and for mineral concessions has been accepted and the principal financial arrangements will soon be effected. This concern is largely financed by Americans.

GABRIEL NARUTOWICZ, the recently inaugurated president of Poland, paid the penalty of high position in a country where racial and religious animosities always have caused strife and bloodshed. He was murdered by an artist who is supposed to have been the tool of the faction led by General Haller. His opponents said he was elected by the votes of the Jews and Germans and that he did not represent the real Poles. Last week the national assembly was called together to choose his successor. Stanislaus Wojciechowski was elected to the perilous position. He is a friend of Paderewski and succeeded the pianist as acting prime minister.

DENVER was startled Monday, and the federal law forces throughout the country aroused, by the bold exploit of seven masked bandits who stole $200,000 in paper currency which was being transferred from the Denver mint to a reserve bank delivery truck. The robbers had a revolver battle with armed guards of the mint, one of whom they killed, and escaped in an automobile. Authorities are inclined to believe the band was led by Roy D. Sherrill, train robber, who escaped from the federal prison at Leavenworth in June, 1921.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, interest, which became due and payable on the 2nd day of October, 1921, and default having been made in the payment of the further sum of Twenty-eight and 90-100 ($28.90) Dollars, interest, which became due and payable on the 2nd day of October, 1922, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Jack Down, a widower, mortgagor, to Maude G. Mabey, mortgagee, bearing date the 2nd day of October, 1920, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, on the 2nd day of October, 1920, at 1:00 o'clock P. M., in Book 62 of Mortgages, on Page 520, and,

Whereas, The said Maude G. Mabey the mortgagee and holder of said mortgage has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and,

Whereas, There is actually due and claimed to be due and payable upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Four Hundred Four and 90-100, ($404.90) Dollars, and,

Whereas, The said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, except that an action at law has been heretofore instituted in the Municipal Court of the City of Thief River Falls, in the County of Pennington and State of Minnesota, by said mortgagee against said mortgagor, to recover the interest on said mortgage debt that became due and payable thereon on the 2nd day of October, 1921, and on the 2nd day of October, 1922, in which said action the said mortgagee is the plaintiff and the said mortgagor is the defendant, and that judgment was duly rendered in said action in said Court in favor of said plaintiff, (mortgagee) and against said defendant, (mortgagor) together with the costs and disbursements of said action, on the 24th day of October, 1922, and that a transcript of said judgment was thereafter and on said day, duly filed and docketed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of said Pennington County and that an execution upon said judgment was thereafter duly issued out of said District Court upon said judgment, directed to the Sheriff of said Pennington County, in which said County, said mortgagor (the defendant and judgment debtor in said action) now resides and has resided continuously during all the time since said mortgage was executed and delivered as aforesaid, and that the Sheriff of said Pennington County, duly returned said execution wholly unsatisfied and filed the same in the office of the Clerk of said District Court of said Pennington County prior to the date of this notice;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

Government Lots Three (3) and Four (4) and the East One-half (E½) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) in Section Eighteen (18) in Township One Hundred Fifty-three (153) North, of Range Forty (40) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing 159.70 acres, more or less, according to the United States Government Survey thereof, in Pennington County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Pennington County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Thief River Falls, in said County and State, on the 20th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $404.90, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Twenty-five Dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated December 2nd, 1922.

MEXICO MAKES OIL CONCESSION

Americans Secure Rights To An Immense East Coast Section.

OBREGON HEADS DEAL

President of Southern Nation Said to Have Made Notable Grant to Huge Sum of United States Capital.

Los Angeles—A group of Los Angeles manufacturers, bankers, and oil operators, has obtained from the Mexican government "what amounts to a blanket concession on all government lands in the oil district of the east coast," according to announcement from the promoters.

"It is probably the most important deal of its kind in the world, for it involves 11,000,000 acres of land adjoining rich workings of the oldest established companies in the Tampico and Tuxpam districts," the announcement said.

Interview Mexican President.

It is announced the Los Angeles group will go into the Mexican oil district and operate according to the Mexican article 27 and and under a federal concession on the same royalty basis which established companies have declared confiscatory.

The announcement came after the return here from Mexico of W. W. Wilson, G. E. Moreland and George J. Bushmiller, who stated they had obtained the concession after an interview with President Obregon, who personally went into the details of the enterprise.

Covers Vast Area.

Mr. Wilson said the lands designated comprise virtually all federal oil lands extending along the gulf coast from a point north of Tampico to Tuxpam. The concession also includes the Island of Juan Ramirez, said to have been long sought by American companies.

The concession provides among other things that 40 per cent of the gross production goes to the Mexican government, and that the concessionaires pay five pesos a year a hectar for the lands they will exploit.

Two years are given for exploration and the concession runs for 20 years with provision for renewal.

The exploitation will be financed entirely by Los Angeles capital, it was announced.

DOCKAGE CLUTTERS UP CARS

Thousands More Needed for Shipping When Wheat Not Cleaned.

Washington—Shipment of clean wheat to market by farmers and country elevators would go a great way toward reducing car shortages and effect large savings in the cost of transportation of the grain, says Robert H. Black, in charge of the department of agriculture's grain cleaning investigations.

During the 1920-21 crop year dockage or foreign material in wheat shipped to market was so great, he declared, that more than 14,000 more freight cars were required to haul it to market than would have been necessary had clean wheat been shipped.

Minnesota grain inspection records show that last October Minneapolis received 11,332 cars of spring wheat containing an average of 4½ per cent dockage, or the equivalent of 450 cars capacity.

An educational campaign is being conducted among spring wheat growers looking toward the cleaning of wheat on the farms to reduce this economic loss.

KAISER SELLS WEDDING FOTO

Wilhelm Sells Wedding Picture.

Doorn, Holland.—The former German emperor has sold to a London and New York company the world rights to what he describes as the first official photograph of his recent wedding. The price paid was $10,000.

The picture shows the former kaiser in the uniform of a field marshal. Princess Hermoine is wearing the famous diadem, the wedding gift of her husband.

It is understood that Wilhelm was considerably annoyed when he learned of the profits that had been made from the sale of his portrait by unofficial and unauthorized photographers, and this consideration, together with a desire to augment his own income, induced him to make the sale.

White House Christmas Quiet.

Washington—Christmas at the White House lacked much of the usual spirit because of Mrs. Harding's illness. There were no house guests and no Christmas tree. Neither the president nor Mrs. Harding made any holiday plans. She came downstairs in her wheelchair and presided at the table for Christmas dinner, but otherwise the day was like any other since she was taken ill. To add a little cheer the White House Yuletide wreaths hung in the windows, and there were a profusion of flowers.

Gabriel Narutowicz

Gabriel Narutowicz is the newly elected president of Poland. At his inauguration there was such serious rioting that the cabinet resigned.

RESERVE BANK RAIDED

Robbers Open Fire, Seize Loot, Currency Placed On Car.

Denver—Three bandits shot and probably fatally wounded Charles Linton, a federal reserve bank guard, and escaped with about $200,000 in currency of $5 denominations, which was being loaded onto a federal reserve truck in front of the Denver mint.

The funds were being transferred from the mint to the Denver Federal Reserve bank.

The robbers seized the money and sprang into a large automobile. As their car sped away armed government guards inside the mint building fired from the windows of the mint at the robbers.

MOTOR TAX TO REMAIN SAME

Legislative Changes Won't Go Into Effect Soon Enough for Next Payments.

St. Paul—Automobile owners will have to pay the motor vehicle tax for 1923 on the present schedule. Changes in the tax law which will be made by the new legislature will not go into effect soon enough to have any effect on the next tax payments, state officials agreed.

Secretary of State Mike Holm announced he will ask the legislature to extend the time for license tax applications, which as the law stands must be in by Jan. 31. Applications for 1923 will be received from Jan. 1 on, he said, and will be on the present basis.

PLANS CUT UNDER RADICALS

Critics of White House on Watch for Chance to Make Plan a Failure.

Washington — The ambition of President Harding to provide the basis for the adjustment of the most acute of Europen irritations has blanketed popular interest in domestic political problems. Comment reflecting political as well as popular reactions from it clearly indicates both approval and confidence in the success of it. It is to be expected of course that critics both in and out of congress will find fault with any method which Mr. Harding and his advisors may adopt to bring about the consummation of universal hope.

FLOODS OF POISON LIQUOR

Analysis of Seized "Bond" and Moonshine Reveals Deadly Contents.

Minneapolis — Floods of poison liquor are being brought into Minneapolis for Christmas purchasers, M. L. Harney, chief of the prohibition field forces, said, in a warning.

Analysis of socalled "bonded liquor" and moonshine, seized by agents, reveal that deadly poisons never before found in such large quantities, are present in much more than sufficient amounts to produce death and blindness, according to Garvin D. Williams, federal chemist, to whom all samples of recent seizures are being sent.

PUBLIC IS RESPONSIBLE

Co-Operative Enterprise Among Farmers Should Be Encouraged.

Washington—It now costs more to distribute and serve than it does actually to produce the things the American public consumes and for this the public itself is responsible.

This is one of the general conclusions reached by the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry following a detailed study of the general subject of marketing and distribution.

Theater Corporation Formed.

New York—Formation of the Theater Owners' Distributing corporation for purposes of co-operation among independent owners throughout the country was announced. It has an authorized capitalization of $5,000,000.

Baby Born in Prison.

Fon du Lac, Wis.—Mrs. Lottie Gardenier, sentenced to life imprisonment from Berlin, Wis., for poisoning her husband, gave birth to a baby girl at Taycheedah, a state institution near here.

TELEPHONE GIRL ROUSES CITIZENS

Hanover Villagers Repel Robber Band Discovered at Bank.

Hanover, Minn.—Armed citizens rallied from their beds by Miss Leona Haefer, night telephone operator, opened fire on four bandits and balked a raid on the Hanover State bank. So fierce was their attack that the desperadoes fled in an automobile, leaving behind two blow torches, an acetylene tank and a set of burglars' tools.

SEES HIGHER FARM PRICES

Secretary Predicts Marked Improvement in Agricultural Conditions.

Chicago—A marked improvement in agricultural conditions of the country during 1923, not only in better actual prices, but as compared with the prices of other commodities, was predicted by Secretary of Agriculture Henry G. Wallace, in an address before the Chicago Association of Credit Men.

While agricultural prices remain lower relatively than the prices of other things, the farmers of the nation will get between one and one-half and two billion dollars more total money for their crops this year than last, he said.

STATE POLICE PATROL URGED

Bill to Create System to Be Offered 1923 Legislature.

Minneapolis—A bill to create a patrol system over Minnesota's trunk highways which would guard the state's property and supplement activities of police and sheriffs' forces in apprehending criminals is practically sure of being put before the Legislature at the coming session.

The plan would be unlike the proposed state constabulary, since the force of men would operate directly under the State Highway department and would be used primarily to control traffic over the highways.

GIVEN AS FARM CREDIT AID

Federal Banks May Purchase Banker's Acceptances Drawn by Growers.

Washington — Bankers' acceptances of six months maturity, drawn by growers of staple agricultural products or co-operative marketing associations, are eligible for purchase or rediscount by the federal reserve banks, under a ruling promulgated by the federal reserve board as a step in the direction of longer term credits for agriculture.

ALLOW SCHOOLS TO OPEN

American Colleges May Continue Work in Any Part of Asia Minor.

Lausanne—Ismet Pasha received a message from Mustapha Kemal announcing that the American college at Smyrna, which was closed during the fighting there, may reopen and that the Nationalist government has no objection to the American schools carrying on their work in any part of Turkey.

FARMERS FORCE SEAWAY

Governor Speaking in Gotham Defies New York to Block Plans.

New York—Farmers of the Northwest and of Canada will force the international St. Lawrence gateway project through despite opposition of of New York and other ports which would suffer by the scheme, Governor J. A. O. Preus of Minnesota, predicted in an address here.

JUDGE RETURNS LIQUOR

Court Rules Agents Violated Constitution in Seizing Stock.

Philadelphia—Declaring that United States prohibition agents violated the fourth amendment of the constitution in making raids without proper search warrants, Judge Thompson in the United States district court dismissed two liquor cases involving several hundred thousand dollars.

SCANDALS ARE 'THE BUNK'

Hollywood Has No Features of Night Life, Film Hero Declares.

Chicago—Stories often circulated of scandalous conduct in Hollywood, Calif., were declared "the bunk" by William S. Hart, two-gun hero of the films and in real life described as a quiet gentleman, who was here on his way to Hollywood.

Carries Coal in Baby Carts.

New York—Baby carriages, hucksters' wagons and wheelbarrows were pressed into service when the fuel administration opened 48 distributing stations in the Metropolitan district.

Escaped Train Robber Hunted.

Kansas City, Mo.—Federal officers here expressed the belief that Roy D. Sherrill, train robber, who escaped from the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., June 23, 1921, might have participated in the $200,000 Denver robbery.

U. S. PLAN TO SAVE EUROPE

Fixed Reparations, Loans To Germany, Debt Leniency Program.

Washington—The United States, as the outstanding move in its plan to avert a collapse in the other world, is about to invite the European powers to make a final attempt to settle the German reparations problem, it was learned from the most authoritative sources.

The plan of the United States for intervention in the European situation.

1—Believing that reparations is the key to the present European crisis, the United States will participate in a commission or some other form of official inquiry to establish an exact figure for Germany to pay.

2—If a settlement of the reparations problem can be effected by an agreemnt among the European powers on such a figure, the United States can give assurances that American bankers stand ready to advance a loan.

3—Finally, the United States government is willing to adopt a more lenient policy on the question of collection of the Allied war debt to this country.

TO PROBE KELLER'S ROLE

Will Name Subcommittee; Precedent to be Established.

Washington—The refusal of Representative Keller, Republican, Minnesota, to respond to a subpoena requiring him to give, under oath, the information upon which he based impeachment charges against Attorney General Daugherty, has created a precedent of such possible farreaching importance that the House judiciary committee decided to refer the whole matter to a subcommittee for investigation.

OKLAHOMA MAYOR TAPS GAS

Drumright's Fires Go 'On and Off' as City, Company Battle.

Drumright, Okla.—Gas heaters were going again at full blast in Drumright after a period of idleness which set in Sunday when a gang of workmen for the Oklahoma Natural Gas company closed a gate valve in the company's main, shutting off the supply going to the city through an unauthorized tap link installed on orders of Mayor W. E. Nicodemus.

NAVAL DISARM BILL PASSES

Appropriation Carrying $325,000,000 Stands as Framed.

Washington—The naval appropriation bill carrying a request that the President negotiate with foreign powers relative to limiting construction of warcraft under 10,000 tons was passed by the House.

The bill, which carries a total of $325,000,000, stands precisely as framed by Chairman Kelley's subcommittee, and provides for an enlisted naval force of 86,000.

PLEDGES EQUAL RIGHTS

Turks Promise Minorities Free Access of Religion and Institutions.

Lausanne—Turkey formally engaged before the Near East conference to accord the Christian minorities, in all that concerns their life and liberty, the same rights and the same protection as enjoyed by the Turkish population, with the free exercise of their religion and the right to establish educational, charitable and religious institutions.

REBELS FACE FIRING SQUAD

Condemned Men Members of Gang Wrecking Troop Trains.

Dublin—Seven Republican irregular prisoners were executed at Mountjoy prison by the Irish Free State government.

The men executed were former railway workers. They were arrested near Kildare a fortnight ago for tearing up rails and threatening to wreck trains.

J. P. Morgan Refuses Loan.

New York—J. P. Morgan and company issued a statement declaring that they had notified the German ambassador to this country "that it was impossible for us to discuss or consider a loan to Germany unless and until the reparations questions were settled."

De Valera Takes Chance of Arrest.

London—Eamon De Valera braved the risk of arrest and narrowly escaped it when he attended a morning mass in the fashionable Catholic University church, in Stephen's Green, Dublin, says the Daily Express.

Admiral Will End 47 Years' Service.

Washington—Rear Admiral Philip Andrews, commandant of the Norfolk navy yard, it was said, will succeed Rear Admiral Hugh Rodman as commandant of the Norfolk naval district when the latter retires.

News of Minnesota

EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Hastings—Dedication of the new armory here will take place Dec. 22, it was announced.

Glenwood—Building of the large stock barn on the fair grounds here by the Pope County Fair association is nearing completion.

Wheaton—Accidentally shot by her 5-year-old son, Mrs. Emil Simonson, living west of here, is in a local hospital in a serious condition.

Rice—Eighteen tubs of butter weighing 60 pounds each, were stolen from the Farmers' Co-operative creamery here. Clues are scant.

Collegeville—St. Thomas college is to rank as a university when a college of law is added in time for enrollment of students in September, 1923.

Duluth—Edward Clark, 11 years old, was instantly killed near Duluth Heights when he fell from a school bus and was crushed under the wheels.

Minneapolis—Sales of forget-me-nots on downtown streets brought approximately $8,000 for the aid of disabled veterans and their families who are in need.

Two Harbors—More than 150 railroad trainmen attended the annual banquet of Stoneburner lodge, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and ladies' auxiliary here.

St. Paul—Minnesota produced 30,700,000 tons of iron ore during the last year, of which 5,695,910 tons were dug from state-owned land, Ray D. Chase, state auditor, reported.

Minneapolis—A tuberculosis survey of Minneapolis to discover the actual prevalence of the disease in the city will be launched in 1923 by the Hennepin County Tuberculosis association.

Sherburn—With the intention of joining zealously in the state wide fight on tuberculosis among cattle, the Martin County Cow Testing association was organized at a meeting here.

Windom—Charles Hammel of Windom, who bought a pint of liquor from a stranger and retired to an alley, while in Minneapolis, to take a drink, was slugged and robbed of $150, he told police.

St. Paul—Courts have no jurisdiction under the corrupt practises act to determine election contests for members of the legislature, according to a ruling by District Judge J. C. Michael in St. Paul.

Fergus Falls—After seven years a silver dollar with the name of Raymond Aarvig of this city, chiseled upon it, has returned to the parents of the former owner, who was killed in action in France.

Barnesville—C. G. Dosland of Moorhead, defeated candidate for state senator from Clay and Wilkin counties, has instituted proceedings for a recount of the ballots cast in the November election.

Red Wing—Country and city residents will join in protest at the hearing before the state railroad and warehouse commission in the near future, when proposed increases in telephone rates are discussed.

Fergus Falls—United States District court opened here with Judge Andrew Miller of North Dakota occupying the bench in place of Judge Page Morris, who is busy handling liquor cases in St. Paul.

Minneapolis—Edward L. Maher was arrested and held in $10,000 bail on charges preferred by S. H. Holt of the Children's Protective society, which Mr. Holt said were based on a story told him by a girl, aged 13.

Winona—Alfred T. Stearns, 93 years old, one of the oldest residents of St. Charles, Minn., died at his home, slightly more than a week after he and his wife celebrated their sixty-eighth wedding anniversary.

Red Wing—The two platoon system will be inaugurated in the Red Wing fire department Jan. 1. Thereafter the men will put in 11 hours on one shift and 18 on the other, instead of being on duty 24 hours a day.

St. Cloud—About 30 alleged liquor law violators from Stearns county are hailing with joy the fact that they will escape the wrath of Judge Page Morris, when they are arraigned in federal court at Fergus Falls.

Redwood Falls—Recently the state supreme court reversed a decision of the district court of Redwood county which is said to be far-reaching in its importance. T. J. Frederick contracted to construct a county ditch, and during construction heavy rains washed sediment into the ditch, partly filling it. The contract was requested to clean out the ditch before the county would pay him the balance due, which he refused to do. The county won the case in the district court.

Buffalo—George and Jesse Knox of Minneapolis, who went on trial for the murder of Marshal Rudolph Mauer of South Haven, were acquitted by a jury in district court. Fifteen ballots, or nearly 24 hours of deliberation, were necessary before the verdict was agreed upon.

Thief River Falls—The Pennington County Poland-China Breeders' association organized at a meeting of farmers here. Promotion of hog raising in Pennington county and the introduction of desirable and profitable breeds is the aim of the new organization.

Aitkin—The county board is advertising for bids for the erection of a new courthouse.

Luverne—The subject of building a jail for the city of Luverne is now being considered.

Northfield—"Her Husband's Wife," the Carleton college play, was presented in the Grand theater before a full house.

Minneapolis—Two hundred University of Minnesota students were graduated at exercises conducted in the university armory.

Waseca—Directors of the Waseca county agricultural society plan to erect three new buildings at the county fair grounds here.

Minneapolis—Christmas trees—real fir trees from northern Minnesota—are the latest worry of parcel post clerks at the Minneapolis postoffice.

Albert Lea—No issue of the Albert Lea Examiner, Nonpartisan publication, appeared last week, and it is reported the paper will suspend publication.

Withrow—Fire of unknown origin, fanned by a high wind, destroyed the De Wolf feed mill here and for a time threatened the destruction of this entire village.

Duluth—To stimulate the tourist business railroads operating in Minnesota would be asked to set lower summer railroad fares to more points in Minnesota.

Owatonna—Plans have been completed for the holding of a Steele county community cooking institute for women to be held at the National Guard armory here.

Olivia—Judge Qvale in district court here dismissed the action wherein Theodore Bunker, defeated candidate for clerk of court, sought a recount of the ballots.

St. Paul—Ramsey county members-elect to the state Legislature were guests at a dinner at the St. Paul Athletic club given by members of the St. Paul city council.

Fergus Falls—The Fergus Falls American Legion basketball team lost its first game of the season when it went down before the Bemidji firemen by a score of 13 to 11.

Winona—Earl Gardner, near Chatfield, escaped severe burns when his father threw him into a water tank after his clothing had been set afire by an explosion of gasoline.

Barnesville—After trailing by 10 points in the first half of its game with Fergus Falls, the local basketball team took a decided brace and badly outscored the visitors.

Duluth—The only remaining boat on the schedule for arrival at this port before the season for navigation is a freighter, which is coming from Fort William with a load of grain.

Hastings—Fire completely destroyed the Mead Manufacturing company, manufacturers of envelopes and files, and damaged the stock of the Hastings Gazette Printing company.

Luverne—Cattle breaking through plank floor led H. E. Linnell to locate a secret chamber under the basement of his barn. Moonshine had evidently been kept in the chamber at some previous time.

Montevideo—Elsie Salisbury is free. After three hours' deliberation the jury that has sat in judgment upon her for the shooting of Oscar Erickson, April 12 brought in a verdict of "not guilty."

Fergus Falls, Minn.—After seven years a silver dollar with the name of Raymond Aarvig of this city, chiseled upon it, has returned to the parents of the former owner, who was killed in action in France.

Fergus Falls—The Fergus Falls High school debating team won its first debate of the state series on the question of desirability of establishing Kansas type of industrial court in Minnesota. The locals took the negative.

Minneapolis—Responding to a call from neighbors who declared the place was being robbed, the police gun squad surrounded the drugstore of James H. Rosenthal, and captured a man and eight cases of liquor in the rear of the store.

Red Wing—Aleck Mitchell, aged 14, fugitive from the Red Wing training school, was reported in a serious condition at a hospital in Buffalo, N. Y., shot in attempting to escape from police who arrested him as a robber suspect.

Hibbing—An intercity mitt mix, with Virginia putting her best against the pick of Hibbing's mitten slingers, is being planned by Pal Brown, local fight promoter, at the Hibbing auditorium shortly after the Christmas holidays.

Wayzata—That some justice courts in rural Hennepin county are "courts of revenue" rather than courts of justice, and that some justices of the peace get a larger income than a district judge, were assertions made by R. E. Wakefield of Wayzata, himself a justice of the peace.

Windom—A shipment of nine barrels of Minnesota turtles left here this week on their way to Philadelphia, where they will be prepared for the epicures who think turtle soup the greatest delicacy in the world. It is a new line of industry in these parts and this shipment was the second from this city to Philadelphia. The express alone on the nine barrels was $109.10, the shipment weighing 2,135 pounds.

Minneapolis—Eight children clad in nightclothes were driven into the streets in below-zero weather when fire caused by an exploding moonshine still partially destroyed the home of Andrew Hebljinsky.

Waseca—The will of the late John A. Moonan, prominent local attorney and a figure of importance in state and district politics, filed in the local probate court, shows an estate totalling $223,000, of which $101,000 was in personal property and the remainder in real estate. The property was divided between his wife and children, according to the terms of the will.

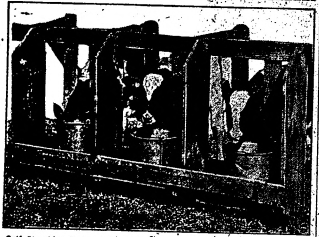
Timely Comments on Agricultural Topics for Our Readers

GOOD CALF STANCHION EASILY MADE



Calf Stanchion Designed by the Dairy Division of the Department of Agriculture.

Farmers and dairymen are well acquainted with the disposition of young calves to upset pails of feed, and when several young members of the bovine family eat together their respective appetites are not easily regulated where the self-help or cafeteria plan of feeding prevails. Manufacturers of mechanical devices have capitalized this condition and there are on the market steel stanchions for inclosing calves at mealtimes. These appliances, however, entail an expenditure of money which the dairyman may object to in the event that makeshift arrangements are to be found.

May Be Built Cheaply.

K. E. Parks, dairy engineer of the dairy division, United States Department of Agriculture, has designed a calf stanchion that may be built by the farmer or dairyman at a cost of approximately $2. This home-made unit is in use at the experimental dairy farm at Beltsville, Md. The stanchion can be built singly or arranged in series so as to accommodate as many young animals as are maintained on the particular farm employing this convenient device.

Common pine lumber is used as the construction material, the unit at the government farm requiring about twenty board feet of lumber. A space of two feet is allowed for each stanchion where the arrangement is in series. When young calves are thus temporarily imprisoned, the feed pail is immune from the kicking tendencies of the future dairy cow and a group of these members of the bovine family may take luncheon together without there being an evidence of greediness of any calf to the displeasure of another. Calves from the time they are given access to the feed pail until three months of age may be caged in these stanchions when partaking of their meals. After the elapse of 90 days of their life, they can be placed in pens.

Blueprints of these stanchions may be had by addressing requests to the dairy division, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington. Already, in testimony to the remarkable cheapness and value of these home-made stanchions, there are hundreds of them in service, faithfully duplicating the structural outline of the dairy engineer of this federal department.

CUT-OVER WOODLOT IS FAVORED

Value Increased in After Years by Taking Out Defective and Undesirable Trees.

The owner of a farm woodlot who is looking to the future as well as to the present will prefer what is known as "an improvement cutting" to a less systematic harvesting of his timber crop, forestry specialists declare. They say that it will pay the farmer to leave standing a considerable percentage of those kinds of trees which he wants to encourage in his woodlot. These trees will seed the soil and fill up the gaps left by the cutting.

All logging operations should be made with the preservation and extension of the stand of young growth in mind.

It is considered a good practice at the first cutting to remove trees like the chestnut, aspen, ironwood and beech, since they are considered less desirable and satisfactory in New York woodlots.

Stag-headed, batt-injured and heavy foliaged, limby trees of every variety may likewise be disposed of at the first cutting.

White pine, white ash, basswood, red oak, hard maple, tulip, poplar, and in some cases even hemlock should be encouraged.

A special warning is given against making the first cutting too heavy. It is said to be better to make this first cutting most carefully and if desirable to go over the woodlot again in five or ten years. If the first cutting is too heavy, it may result in a tangle of brambles which will retard all development.

LIME REQUIRED IN GARDENS

Scatter Shovelful or Two of Material Into Compost Heap—Easy Way of Applying.

As the leaves, lawn clippings, vegetable leaves, and stalks are raked up and thrown into piles to be composted during the winter, scatter in a shovelful or two of lime. Lime is often needed in gardens more than fertilizer materials, and this is one of the easiest ways of applying it. Ground limestone may be bought at a low price at building material yards.

BURN RUBBISH FROM GARDEN

Excellent Plan to Destroy Injurious Insects and Prevent Many Plant Diseases.

Many plant diseases and injurious insects live over winter in the dead stalks of garden vegetables and other refuse left after the cropping season is over. The best plan is to rake all this material together, and when dry set a match to it. While some organic matter will be destroyed, much trouble for next year will be obviated.

DOES NOT CAUSE ANY SOUR SOILS

No Ground for Common Belief That Use of Acid Phosphate Will Prove Injurious.

Contrary to popular belief, the use of acid phosphate will not produce acidity in the soils, according to a statement made by the workers in the field of agronomy at the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca.

The college long has advocated a greater use of acid phosphate with or without manure for fertilizing soils. Some farmers, however, have feared that to do this would mean that greatly increased quantities of limestone or lime would then be required for the growth of clover and alfalfa.

These fears, however, are groundless, it is stated. Indeed, experiments made at Rhode Island show that acid phosphate actually served to reduce soil acidity. Dr. Burgess, who made the test, declares positively that "there is no foundation for the statement that soils will become more acid from the continuous use of acid phosphate."

The soil specialists state, however, that sour soil should be limed in advance of the application of acid phosphate. "Do not fear soil acidity from the use of acid phosphate," conclude the workers at Cornell, who add that with legumes and manure about 200 pounds of acid phosphate a year, on an average, when used for grain and hay crops, give excellent results.

Treating Young Boar Pigs.

Boar pigs should be castrated shortly before weaning time, but if they are to be grown for breeding they should be separated from the sow pigs very shortly after weaning.

Young Bulls Underfed.

Many young growing bulls are underfed, whereas the aim should be to get early, steady and rapid growth that guarantees size, stamina and vitality for the mature animal.

LIVE STOCK FACTS

TO WIPE OUT TUBERCULOSIS

State of Washington Expected to Be First to Eliminate Dreaded Cattle Disease.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Washington is expected to be the first of the 48 states to make definite plans to wipe out all bovine tuberculosis within its borders. In 20 of the 29 counties area eradication work has already been conducted in co-operation with the United States Department of Agriculture. The commissioner of agriculture and the state veterinarian have planned a state-wide program that will be presented to the legislature in January. The governor is understood to be in favor of the plan, and there is every reason to believe that sufficient money will be appropriated so that with the co-operation of the department on the present basis all the cattle in the state will be tested within a reasonable time.

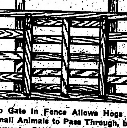
The light infection of the cattle herds in the state and the fact that most of the cattle already have been tested make the outlook particularly promising. An indication of the low percentage of tuberculosis was found in Spokane county this summer. The veterinarian in charge tested 469 herds, containing 2,754 animals, and condemned only 4.

Ninety-five per cent of the purebred herds in Washington are already under supervision.

GATE MADE HANDY FOR HOGS

Permits Small Animals to Pass Through, but Horses and Cattle Are Kept Out.

I am sending diagram (D-181) and description of a gate which we have used with much success for about twenty years to allow hogs through but not cattle or horses, writes F. Nolin of Kansas in the Prairie Farmer. This gate can be of any length or height desired, and as shown the vertical cleats are made long enough to catch on bottom board of fence to prevent pushing and breaking, but if wanted to work both ways the lower projections will have to be cut off. It will be better, however, to keep the gate hooked down, and when wanted for passing stock through, to raise gate up and hook it out of the way. We generally make such a gate out of 1 by 6 rough cypress and about 4 feet high, spacing cracks from bottom up 2½, 3½ and 5 inches.



Trap Gate in Fence Allows Hogs or Small Animals to Pass Through, but Prevents Cattle and Horses From Passing. Supply Fasteners so That Gate May Be Held Open or Closed as Desired.

HAVE MILK HOUSE SEPARATE

Room for Straining, Cooling and Storage Should Be Free From Dust and Bad Odors.

Every farm on which dairying is an important interest should have a milk house separated from the stable. At least there should be a milk room, which, though it may be under the same roof, should not open into the stable. The milk should be promptly removed from the stable and carried to the milk room for straining, cooling and storage. This work should be done in an atmosphere free from dust, insects and noxious odors.

Farmers' Bulletin 1214 issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, gives plans and pictures of milk houses adapted to various conditions. Blue prints may be obtained from the department at Washington, D. C.

American Farm Bureau

Feeders Brought Directly to Ohio Feed Lots From Colorado by the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation and Live Stock Shippers.

Ohio livestock feeders are well pleased with the plan of buying feeders directly from the ranges, judging from the use they are making of the plan. During the month of October, 28 carloads of feeder cattle were brought to Ohio feedlots directly from Colorado through the purchasing agents of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation and Ohio Livestock Shippers' association in co-operation with the Colorado Farm Bureau federation.

The first purchases were made by Mr. Scott O'Day, a well-known cattle feeder of Ohio. He was unable to fill all of the orders received for the first shipments, and so great was the number of orders that another man was necessary on the purchasing end on the second lot. Mr. O'Day and Harry G. Beale, a cattle feeder of Ohio, left for the range again the last week in October with orders for about 90 carloads of stock, which were largely filled during early November.

Feeders who obtained their cattle on the first shipments were well pleased with the plan, according to reports they sent into the federation offices. A number of letters stated that the purchasers found them a uniform lot of good quality stock and reported them cheaper than the same quality feeders could have been purchased at terminal markets. One man reported a saving of slightly over $200 on one carload of feeders.

GUNNELS HAS JOINED AMERICAN INSTITUTE

Quits as Treasurer and Director of Organization Department of Bureau.

Charles E. Gunnels has joined the staff of the American Institute of Agriculture as director of its extension department. Mr. Gunnels resigned as treasurer and director of the organization department of the American Farm Bureau federation, taking effect after the annual meeting. He also resigned as treasurer of the United States Grain Growers, Inc.

The American Institute of Agriculture has headquarters in Chicago, and was organized by George Livingston, formerly chief of the United States bureau of markets, to train men by correspondence courses in agricultural marketing.

Charles E. Gunnels.

Mr. Gunnels joined the staff of the American Farm Bureau federation as assistant secretary early in 1920. He was later elected treasurer and at the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau federation in Atlanta last year, was appointed director of the organization department. Before coming to the American Farm Bureau federation, Mr. Gunnels was in the states relations service of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and previous to that was director of the agricultural extension service and county agent leader in the University of Nebraska.

TO PLAN NEXT YEAR'S WORK

Ohio Farmers to Hold Annual Meeting of State Farm Bureau at State University.

Ohio farmers will plan the next year's work of their state farm bureau federation at the annual meeting of that organization, which will be held January 30 and 31. The sessions will be held at the Ohio State university and will occur at the same time that representative farmers from all over the state are in Columbus attending the annual farmers' week.

The program outlined will consist of a report to the delegates of work accomplished during the past year. Officers state that their activities during the past year have repaid the efforts and financing many times over [illegible] live stock, dairy, wool, and vegetable marketing, and the co-operative purchase of fertilizers, twine, feeder cattle and feeds. In addition to this major work has been done on transportation problems, in legislative matters, investigation and service in legal, auditing, publicity and other departments.

TRADE-MARK TERMED BIG BUSINESS ASSET

West Virginia Association First to Take Advantage of Registration Service.

The Inwood Fruit Growers' association of West Virginia was the first to take advantage of the American Farm Bureau federation's new federal trade-mark registration service. A large number of farmers of West Virginia market their fruit through the big state-owned demonstrational packing house at Inwood, which was established for the purpose of standardizing the pack throughout that section of West Virginia and the adjoining territory in Virginia and Maryland. This is accomplished by conducting a school for packers who return home and have the standard pack adopted in their locality.

The trade-mark registered by the Inwood association, the "Johnny Appleseed Brand" is distinctive in that it not only plays up the words "Johnny Appleseed" but there is reproduced a picture of a face on an appleseed. The name was derived from the story which is told of a unique character who in pioneer days walked over the old Cumberland trail eating apples and scattering or planting the seeds along the way. So persistent was he in his efforts to start trees in this way that he was given the nickname of "Johnny Appleseed." Johnny's name and face are now saved to posterity and the growers assured of protection of their investment in a trade-mark.

The American Farm Bureau federation through its Washington office, will secure the registration of trade-marks for agricultural co-operative marketing associations and farmers at actual cost of the service.

The trade-mark is a business asset. An association or farmer doing business on a small scale may neglect to register a trade-mark, feeling that because of a limited amount of business it is not worth while. When the business grows, however, the trade-mark rapidly assumes very important proportions. The business has invested large sums in advertising the trade-mark as well as the product. It frequently happens at this period of the business that it is disrupted because someone else has registered the trade-mark.

Cash Required for Bureau.

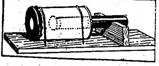
The Appanoose county (Iowa) farm bureau has made recent investigation of the amount of taxes required per capita in Appanoose county to maintain the farm bureau organization. It was found that only two-thirds of a one mill levy was required to pay the $5,000 appropriation by the county board of supervisors for this work. This investigation also showed that on the 120 farms surveyed each farmer pays $1.22 per year toward the [illegible]

POULTRY

SIMPLE ELECTRIC EGG TEST

Device Is Most Desirable Piece of Equipment for Dealer—Pays to Candle at Home.

The egg tester as a necessary or desirable piece of equipment is receiving more attention than ever before. It has always been a handy thing for the farmer and housewife, and an absolutely necessary thing for the egg dealer. With the passing of laws by states and the establishment of regulations by health departments, candling is becoming compulsory for all egg buyers. This means that the country store which formerly accepted at a flat price whatever the producer brought in is compelled to be more particular. It means that the producer who brings in eggs, will decide that it pays him to candle his eggs at home.



An Egg Tester From Flashlight and Can.

For the general farm producer, the tester shown, improvised from a flashlight of the familiar long, round type, is entirely satisfactory. It furnishes a good, intense light, making testing a task without undue eye strain. Moreover, the fact that the light is under control, and is only "on" intermittently, is a real advantage, as it prevents the testing device from becoming hot.

A quart tin can is used, in the bottom of which, centrally, is cut a round hole just large enough for the flashlight to enter. Over the open top end of the can is stretched tightly a piece of felt cut from an old felt hat. In the center of that felt piece is cut a one and one-fourth inch hole. This is the egg hole.

For the base an inch board several inches wider and longer than the tin can is obtained, and the tin can fastened to this with two pieces of light wire, as shown. Parallel with the bottom end of the can, an inch board as high as the center of the hole is attached crossways, and a slot cut in it where the flashlight, placed through the can hole to within an inch of the felt end, can rest.

It will be noted that the flashlight is not made an inseparable part of this egg tester. When not required for this purpose it can be used for any other.—J. T. Bartlett, in Farm Mechanics.

POTATOES AS CHICKEN FEED

Fed to Best Advantage When Boiled or Steamed—Should Be Supplied in Limited Quantities.

Potatoes should be boiled or steamed before being fed to fowls and are fed to best advantage when mixed with mash. Since potatoes are quite fattening, they should be fed in limited quantities, preferably to laying hens or growing chickens, and should be used in connection with other feeds. One hundred hens will consume about ten pounds of cooked potatoes daily, and these potatoes can be used to replace cornmeal in the poultry mash. If so used, an equal weight of potatoes and mash may be mixed together. A laying mash for this purpose may be made of: One part meat scrap, one part middlings, two parts bran, and four parts potatoes, by weight.—Extension Service Colorado Agricultural College.

Overcrowding Causes Roup.

When overcrowding conditions prevail, unless the house is exceptionally well ventilated, one of the most frequent results is an outbreak of roup.

SCENTED CHEESE

A short time before the war the Germans on the occasion of the Oberammergau festivals placed on the market a perfumed cheese, to which they gave an immense amount of publicity. This cheese was easily manufactured; fresh little curds were mingled with dried flowers and finely chopped aromatic herbs. The name with which the cheese was labeled constituted its sole originality, "Oberammergauer passions festspielalpenkraufer klosterdelicatesfruhstuckskaese." Which meant:

Cloister cheese, delicate breakfast, made of herbs of the Alps, for the festivals of the Oberammergau Passion play performances.

Lone and Mysterious.

There is an elderberry bush seven feet high on the tableland of Mesa Verde National park, in Colorado, that has the distinction of being the only one in that country. GREAT ASSURANCES OF FAITH

Happy are those who have a divine presence and program in the world.

Happy are those who live by divine co-operation.

Happy are those who know that God is working in the creation of new heavens and new earth in which dwells righteousness.

Happy are those who know the life of Christ to be the most real and the most marvelous fact in human history.

Happy are those who see in Christ the heart and life of God in terms of flesh and blood.

Happy are those whose faith is built upon the assurance that the Master of all life is alive forevermore.

Happy are those who see that the soul of man is the most precious thing in all the universe.

Happy are those who have supremely adventured to achieve likeness to Christ.

Happy are those who look for power to attain Christlikeness thru co-operation with the Master himself.

Happy are those who are conscious of achievement in the great ascent to perfection for they are the ones who know that God is evermore at work, manifesting His love toward them, and that the living Christ is truely enthroned in their hearts.

ALITA IS STOPPED

By LOUISE M. ADDELSON

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Tall and thin and swarthy was Miss Alita Vandervelde, with an intense love of art and an intense hatred of clothes as other people wore them.

Miss Alita was temperamental. She played the piano with much force and vigor. Other Vanderveldes also performed, thereby, however, displeasing Miss Alita, who had a consuming desire to be known as the musical wonder of the family, and she was very, very, bitter against anyone who interfered with that desire. Cousin Chopin Beethoven Vandervelde did interfere with it. A fickle and unjust world, overlooking the merits of Miss Alita, had hailed a couple of Chopin's musical compositions with delight, and the director of a famous opera company had signed a contract with him at a highly remunerative figure.

Miss Alita was deeply pained as, on a certain evening, she fingered the tickets sent to her and her mother for the first opera at which Cousin Chopin was to conduct.

"Shall we go?" asked her mother.

"We shall go," answered Miss Alita. "Otherwise they will think me jealous."

"And of course you are not?" asserted the mother.

"Of course not!" said Miss Alita.

They went. Miss Alita didn't think much of the way her cousin led the music. Nevertheless, at the end of the first act she rose and walked to the orchestra railing, saying, in a voice loud enough to be heard in the greater part of the house, "Chopin, we congratulate you. We are proud of you."

Chopin flushed to the roots of his hair. "Thanks," he said, crisply. "You had better go back to your seat. It is nearly time for the second act."

"What a pity," said Miss Alita, seated once more, "that Chopin is so ill-mannered."

"Maybe," said the mother, hesitatingly, "maybe you should have waited with your congratulations."

"No!" said Miss Alita, emphatically. "He might think me jealous."

Somehow or other Chopin resented the felicitations of his cousin Alita. Nor did his resentment abate when, the next evening, she again publicly bestowed her congratulations. At his home the following day she repeated the performance before a houseful of guests. Thereafter Miss Alita congratulated Chopin every time she saw him. He commented on this inelegantly but explicitly.

"I won't have that old crow spoil what fun I get out of life with her fool talk. I won't have her claim relationship to me in such a manner—and in such a costume!"

"What will you do to prevent it?" asked Mary, his pert and pretty sister.

"Something desperate—and soon."

"Some chance," laughed Mary.

"Wait and see. But never mind that now. I've invited some friends for dinner tonight—Straumm, Freeland and a few others. I suppose our precious cousin will pop in just in time to spoil things."

Ferdinand Straumm, a friend of Chopin's from a distant town, arrived late in the afternoon and, true to Chopin's prediction, Miss Alita also was announced shortly afterward. Chopin became thoughtful, but as he gazed meditatively at his good friend Straumm his expression brightened. He greeted Miss Alita with a gayety and enthusiasm that astonished her.

"Allow me," said Chopin, "to introduce Mr. Straumm. Mr. Straumm, my highly giften cousin, Miss Vandervelde."

"How fortunate I am," said Miss Alita, quite flustered, "to meet the composer of the Straumm waltzes!"

Chopin smiled. His friend looked dazed, but Miss Alita was unconscious of it. There was another Straumm among Chopin's acquaintances, a much more notable Straumm, whom for years Miss Alita had been anxious to meet. And she was very happy in the thought of having met him at last. But her happiness lasted only until George Freeland arrived, in time for dinner.

"Let me," said Miss Alita, sweetly, "give you the inestimable privilege of meeting the composer of the Straumm waltzes."

"What are you talking about?" asked George, rudely. "This isn't the composer of the Straumm waltzes. In his wildest dreams he never associated himself with the real Straumm."

Miss Alita's eyes flashed from face to face.

"I leave this house forever," said she. "I loathe it, and its inmates. I wash my hands of you. I leave you forever."

And she did.

"I acknowledge," said Chopin, after a moment's silence, "that I have been guilty of deception. It was cowardly, but I had to do something to divert her attention from me. She was getting on my nerves."

"Well," said Straumm, "though I would even have married her to please you, I'm awfully glad I don't have to."

"I didn't know," interposed George Freeland, "that I was upsetting things, but I'm positive I can enjoy myself a whole lot better now that our sweet Alita has gone."

"Dinner is ready," said Mary. "Suppose we go and eat."

INHERITED, PERHAPS

Little Girl (before statue in museum)—Mamma, what's this?

Attendant after pause—That's Mercury, the messenger of the gods. You have read about him, no doubt.

Mother—Of course she has. But, do you know, my little girl has such a very poor memory for Scripture.

When the Fiddles Moan.

"Do you care for grand opera?"

"No," said Mr. Dubwaite. "I'm afraid I'm not equal to it. I know there must be times when grand opera stars express joyous emotions, but all I've ever heard sing seemed to be terribly sorry about something and I couldn't find out what it was."

Vague, but Useful.

"My hat is in the ring!" exclaimed Senator Sorghum."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I don't know exactly what it means. But that phrase is a very valuable one. I have never known an occasion when it wasn't good for a round of applause."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Incorrigible.

Teacher (to literary class)—Now, give me some word like 'bemoan.'"

First Pupil—Bedew.
Second Ditto—Bedaub.
Third Ditto—Bespatter.
Fourth Ditto—Begorra!

According to Quality.

Flubb—Brown paid $25 for one of his photographs.

Dubb—Wasn't that rather steep?

Flubb—Not at all! It happened to be a snapshot of himself kissing a bathing beauty at the beach!

Largely True.

"They have a new car."

"They have? They can't afford it."

"I know; it's always the people who can't afford them who are buying cars nowadays."

More Like It.

"A scientist claims he can weigh one's conscience."

"By the ounce?"

"No; by the scruple, I imagine."

Few of Us Are.

"This is a man's world," she complained.

"Maybe it is," he replied, "but don't blame me. I'm not guilty."

St. Hilaire School
N-O-T-E-S

Melvin Sherva visited the high school Friday afternoon.

Misses Julia and Cora Helgo, visited the high school and grades last Friday afternoon.

Little Vivian Lindquist of the first grade has been absent from school for some time, due to a very severe attack of pneumonia.

CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENTS

Last Friday afternoon, the grade teachers entertained their pupils at pre-holiday parties. Miss Jerpe and Miss Hovet had a fireplace about which the children gathered, and received the usual candy and nuts. Miss Dahl's pupils enjoyed a "fairy well." The seventh and eighth grades had special exercises. Even high school pupils forgot their dignity, and enjoyed the exchange of presents, in which the faculty also took part.

BASKETBALL TONIGHT

The Greenbush high school basketball team will meet St. Hilaire high school on the home floor this evening. This game has caused a great deal of interest, because of the fact that the two high schools have always been rivals in athletics. Greenbush is reported to have an exceptionally strong team, and although our high school has a comparatively new team on the floor this year they are prepared to put up a royal battle. All loyal students turn out and stand by the team that represents our school.

Notice of Annual Meeting

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance Company will be held at St. Hilaire, Minnesota, on the 8th day of January 1923, beginning at one o'clock sharp. (p. m)

The purpose of the meeting will be to elect officers for the coming year and to transact any other business that may come before said meeting.

The corporate existence of our company will expire on March 9th, 1923, and at the last annual meeting held in June 1922, it was decided to incorporate perpetually.

A committee was appointed to examine the by-laws and articles of incorporation and recommend changes if found necessary. The recommendations of this committee will be voted upon at this meeting.

Given under my hand this 18th day of December 1922.

JOHN O. SWNSON,
25 3 Secretary.
